Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman, giving him as much information as the committee has. When the committee inquired into this class of service from the representatives from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, it made inquiry as to the methods which were in vogue respecting the distribution of these various substation clerks or station clerks, how many of them were used, what the number was, etc. It was stated to us—I do not recall by whom—that there had been for a number of years, not a few, but for many, a practice of making a payment out of the appropriation for light, fuel, and rent for some of these clerks at stations. We had before us the First Assistant, Mr. Wynne; the chief of the salary and allowance division, Mr. Waters, and, I believe, one of his assistants. The explanation was made by those gentlemen, or at least one of them, that it was under a construction of the law given by a superior officer—I do not know by whom nor under what Administration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A law officer of the Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know. I do not know that he stated; but it was some years ago, and I understand the construction was that on account of its being the use of a room that officer construed that they could apply the appropriation for rent, light, and fuel to the employment of those station clerks. The committee then said whatever that might have been at the time it was authorized that we did not consider it good business practice.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Surely the committee did not consider it common honesty, did they?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The light, rent, and fuel appropriation is given for that purpose, and we asked them in their supplemental estimates or recommendations to account for those clerks at the salaries they were receiving from that fund, incorporating them in the various items they fixed and then to reduce the item for rent, fuel, and light by an equal amount. That came in from the same Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, this brings up one of the most important questions now facing the American people. It used to be the part of a judge, when he struck a statute in the exercise of his judicial functions, to read the statute and say to the world, "Ita lex scripta est." It has become now the habit of the courts to change written letters, phrases, and words to suit their idea of "changing conditions," but I little imagined that we had gone just a little bit beyond that. I little imagined when I first came to Washington that the judiciary was not the only part of this Government "making laws by construction." Now we are brought face to face in this particular item with an abuse with which we are all acquainted, namely, the abuse of the executive department of the Government "making laws by construction." Further, when we want to know who has made the law by construction we can not find out. Some little underling of a clerk, perhaps, receiving somewhere between $1,200 and $2,700 a year, construes a law of Congress "to pay rent" so many dollars a year to be a law of Congress "to hire clerks" at so many dollars a year; and all that a great committee of the House of Representatives can do when it is faced with that fact is to say, "How many clerks have you been hiring under that appropriation; how far has your abuse and misuse gone? Let us cover it with our confirmation and approval by putting the clerks now illegally employed upon the legal list." Not one word of impeachment do we hear of the fellow who has abused the law, and who must consciously and knowingly have abused it, because there never was a man born so great a fool as to imagine that an appropriation for "rent, light, and fuel" was an appropriation for "clerk hire."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana will indulge me a moment——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The hammer fell down, and I am so accustomed to obedience in the House that I really thought I had to stop for a moment. [Laughter.] But I really would like a little more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall need all of that time. Here is a great committee of the House, and all it has to say to the House and to the country about this "newly discovered evidence" of ancient rottenness is that the people in favor of whom the misconstruction had been going on had better be legalized and put upon the list of the properly employed men in the Department of the Post-Office.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Mississippi know that every one of those accounts was audited by the Treasury Department and found correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I suppose they must have been or they could not have been paid, and, if that is true, then we better go a little bit further in our investigation of the executive part of this Government and investigate the Treasury Department and see who it was that dared to allow a statute of Congress to "pay rent" to be changed into a statute to pay clerks. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think possibly the gentleman from Mississippi is a little bit mistaken. This matter might almost as easily be chargeable to rent as to clerk hire.

In most cases a substation is located in a drug store. The man in charge of that station gets, we will say, $ 00 a year. The Post-Office Department used sometimes to charge this to rent; sometimes to clerk hire. This money is paid as much for the use of the building as for the services of the person in charge; and it does not, as I understand, relate to any cases where people employed have been really in the service of the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I have taken my facts from the chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and I do not believe that he is mistaken about the facts. The facts as I have stated them were just what he stated in the hearing of the House. If the gentleman from Illinois is right, then there is a double wrong, because the appropriation ought to have been for "compensation."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think it is about time that the House of Representatives, elected directly by the people, to pass laws for the people and to see to it that those laws are carried out in spirit and in letter, should investigate this miserable bureaucracy which has raised itself into a position not only of independence of the legislative branch of this Government, but of absolute contempt for it. The persons constituting this bureaucracy do not hesitate a minute to violate any law you may pass at any time they please, and then to tell you with suavity that it was because of a "construction" put upon the law by somebody—God only knows who—they do not tell, and our committees do not find out.

I think the most discouraging thing in American citizenship, as represented upon this floor, is for an honest man to come to Congress and try to find out how to make things in the Departments economical and honest and find himself hedged all around with a perfect wilderness of misinformation, overinformation, or underinformation, whichever happens to suit the fellows who write their decrees and send them to us to be registered in an appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GROSVENOR having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 6787. An act to confirm and validate patents to certain lands situated in the Bitter Root Valley, State of Montana, above the mouth of the Lo Lo Fork of the Bitter Root River;

H. R. 4074. An act constituting Utica, N. Y., a port of delivery, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 3565. An act directing the Secretary of War to expend $125,000 heretofore appropriated for a channel through Sabine Lake, Texas.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed resolutions and bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 61. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to negotiate and, if possible, conclude negotiations with the Government of Great Britain for a review and revision of the rules and regulations which now govern the taking of fur seals in the open waters of the North Pacific Ocean and Bering Sea, and so forth;

S. 4250. An act to appropriate the sum of $40,000 as a part contribution toward the erection of a monument at Provincetown, Mass., in commemoration of the landing of the Pilgrims and the signing of the Mayflower compact; and

S. 575. An act to establish a fish-culture station on Blacks Fork of Green River, in the State of Wyoming.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 56.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 500 copies of the index to the documents now compiled in the War Department relating to affairs in Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and other insular possessions of the United States, for the use of the War Department.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last two words. The facts, Mr. Chairman, in this case are just these: Formerly—I do not want to say originally, because I am not sure that the matter began in that way, but certainly a number of years ago—there was a practice in the Post-Office Department of contracting for the occupancy of rooms in stores, with the privilege of the use of a part of the room as a post-office station. Under that practice the payment was made out of the item of appropriation for rent, light, and fuel, because of the construction that even though the office did not occupy the entire room, nevertheless the payment was for the use of the room; and the payments were made in accordance with that construction of the law.

The expenditure for clerks at stations who were paid out of the appropriation for rent, light, and fuel was exclusively for the clerks in stations of that character. It was exclusively for clerks at substations, which stations were very largely in drug stores and other stores of similar character.

The Department, operating under the advice of its legal officer, adopted that construction, and I think the construction was proper under the conditions which then prevailed. The natural tendency was to maintain that practice. The accounts were audited in the same manner as other accounts; they passed through the hands of the accounting officers; vouchers were filed, and the accounts were paid.

There was not a penny of the money of the Government lost, nor was a single substation clerk paid in excess of what the appropriation for that class of clerks had authorized.

The committee, however, believed, and the Postmaster-General shared in that belief, and when the attention of the First Assistant Postmaster-General was invited to it he readily acquiesced in the suggestion, that this was an opportune time to properly place these station clerks in that provision of the bill calling for appropriations for station clerks; and accordingly, acquiescing in our suggestion, the Postmaster-General revised the estimates which had first been made and accounted for all the clerks, whatever their number, in the clerk item, and subtracted a corresponding aggregate sum from the estimates for rent, light, and fuel.

Mr. Chairman, there is no occasion for the excitement of my friend from Mississippi. There is no mare's nest discovered in this matter. There is the growth of a practice based upon the proper construction of the law, under the circumstances which prevailed at the time of the construction. It was proper at that time. There has been no impropriety in connection with this matter since, because the law is susceptible of that construction. The money has been accounted for to the last penny, and arrangements have been made upon this bill for the future distribution of that fund to the items under which these respective accounts properly go.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words; and I might as well say here what I have to say upon this point.

The item is in reference to substations in cities. In my own judgment the Post-Office Department makes a very great mistake in reference to substations, and I believe that would be the opinion of the Post-Office Committee if they should give consideration to the point that I have reference to, and even the Post-Office Department itself. I represent in the city of Chicago a suburban district which was annexed to the city a few years ago. At the time of annexation there were thirty or forty small post-offices in the district. Gentlemen all understand perfectly well that where little settlements are located miles away from the center of the city it is necessary to have some kind of postal facilities.

At one time I went to the Post-Office Department here and called their attention to the fact that in one locality in my district, with a population of more than 5,000 people, it was impossible to buy a postage stamp; that there was no provision for substations. They could not get anybody to operate a substation at the salary they were willing to give. The work was too much. A man who would take a substation there one day would resign within a week.

Gentlemen of the House have heard a good deal lately in reference to a regulation of the Department regarding allowances for separation. All regulations of the Department do not relate to separation. Regulations of the Department are like the wind. One day they blow this way and the next day they blow that way. The Department had a regulation in regard to the pay of substations, and I have the schedule here, which was not made public. It was a secret regulation. I obtained what the regulation was upon which the salaries of persons in charge of these substations were fixed.

Last July, in accordance with the regulation, the postmaster at Chicago recommended an increase in the salaries of various persons in charge of substations, increases which in every case ought to have been made according to the regulation. The new régime, the holy people who obtained possession of the post-office down here, changed that regulation because some increases were called for from New York and Chicago on account of a large amount of business. It made no difference that it was a secret regulation; it made no difference that the persons in charge of substations did not know what it was. As soon as they reached the point where, under the existing regulation, they were entitled to a benefit, the regulation was changed.

Now, what I want to suggest to the gentleman is that they abolished in most places the sale of money orders in substations in the cities. There is not a place in one of the large cities where one can not obtain express orders or drafts or something of that sort with convenience and at low cost. Most of the trouble with the substations is that every day the clerk in charge has to spend from one to two hours in filling out blanks to be reported to the postmaster in reference to money orders. Permit, as they did five years ago, a substation where stamps shall be sold. I have no objection to the money orders being sold, if you wish to; but you can establish a substation where stamps will be sold, and pay only $50 a year, where now you are paying two hundred, three hundred, or four hundred dollars a year and obtaining for the Government nothing more than the sale of the stamps.

The Government makes no profit on the money orders. It is no advantage to the people. They do not want it. The sale of money orders at the substations was forced by the Post-Office Department. I might say by some crank of some sort in the Post-Office Department. I hope the committee will consent to a proper amendment under the item for $100 clerks, authorizing the employment of clerks for that amount of money, at a compensation not to exceed $100 each, so that the Post-Office Department may establish two substations that sell stamps for the convenience of my constituents, instead of one substation which sells stamps and money orders, where they do not care anything about the money-order business.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

If I rightly understood the gentleman from Illinois, his complaint against the committee was that we were not providing sufficient clerks in these items. Now, I call his attention to the fact that whereas under the existing law, beginning with that item of $800 clerks and running down through the list to the $100 grade, there are carried in the present law 2,600 clerks. Yet in the bill now before the House we provide for 3,900 clerks, and we provide for 1,300 of them in the $100 class, the class which he is loudly asking for.

Mr. MANN. Those are not clerks at all. Those are substations. They have no relationship to the conduct of the post-office itself.

Mr. COWHERD. Of course they are not clerks. I understand that; but that money is paid for clerk hire.

Mr. MANN. It is paid for the substation.

Mr. COWHERD. No; it is not paid for the substation. It is paid to the party who does the business of the Government in the substation. That is what it goes for.

Of course we do not hire clerks for $100. But here is a little drug store, and we give them a right to do postal business for the people in that neighborhood, and we pay them $100. We may or may not take all the time of a clerk. We take a part of his time, perhaps a third, a fourth, or a fifth. So we pay salaries running all the way from $500 to $100; and we increase the number of them in this bill 1,300, and it seems to me that it is a pretty fair provision.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who took occasion to rake the committee over the coals a while ago, sees how easy it is for the committee to please this entire House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has assailed the committee most vigorously because they are not sufficiently providing for the great cities of the country.

The distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has assailed the committee most vigorously because they are overproviding for the great cities of the country. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois says we are robbing the great cities and seeking to give it to the rural free delivery; and my friend from Indiana [Mr. CROMER] gets up and says, "You are squandering the money of the country on the cities in order to keep from giving the rural free-delivery carrier the amount of salary that he ought to have." So I say that the gentleman sees that there is no trouble in the post-office appropriation bill to please everyone, wherever he may come from and whatever may be his views in regard to the service. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Would there be any objection, in the opinion of the gentleman, to permitting a substation to be established at less than $100 a year where stamps shall be sold, as was done a few years ago?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I can not answer that. I do not know. If the committee changed it, I take it it was changed at the suggestion of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. MANN. On the suggestion of the money-order division of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. COWHERD. Well, it was put there through the Postmaster-General. It all comes up at last through the Postmaster-General, and comes from him to the committee as the result of the experience of the management of that business.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be wise to leave the bill so that the Postmaster-General would have authority to do it if he should choose to do so?

Mr. COWHERD. I am not prepared to answer that question. I take it that it was done on the suggestion of the Department, and it seems that if they thought it ought to be done they should know better about such a detail of the business than the committee or the House.

Mr. SOUTHWICK. I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday the leader of the Democratic minority on the floor of this House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], submitted to the House and had incorporated in the RECORD an article from the New York Times, relative to the policy of the Republican national Administration toward trusts, in connection with the recent decision of the highest judicial tribunal of the land in the merger case. I desire to submit to the House, for the purpose of incorporating in the RECORD in answer thereto, an editorial of the New York World of yesterday, and I think it will be generally conceded that the New York World is quite as representative of Democratic editorial opinion and Democratic party sentiment as is the Times. I ask that the Clerk read this editorial.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the article in the time of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the New York World.]

FACTS.

1. The antitrust law was framed by a Republican, was passed by a Republican House and a Republican Senate, was signed by a Republican President.

2. The law remained a dead letter on the statute books during the entire second term of Grover Cleveland, a Democratic President.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Through those four years of Democratic Administration all appeals and all efforts of the World to have the law enforced were met with sneers, jeers, and open contempt from a Democratic Attorney-General, Richard Olney—— who pretended that the law was unconstitutional and who would do nothing toward prosecuting violators of it.

3. The first effort to enforce the law was made by Theodore Roosevelt, a Republican President.

[Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The first Attorney-General to vigorously prosecute offenders and to test the law was a Republican Attorney-General, Philander C. Knox.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

4. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, given as a finality from which there is no appeal, upholding the law as perfectly constitutional and absolutely impregnable in every respect, as the World for twelve years constantly insisted, was due to five judges, every one of whom is a Republican.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

5. The dissenting minority of the court included every Democratic judge of that tribunal, to wit, Chief Justice Fuller, of Illinois; Mr. Justice White, of Louisiana, and Mr. Justice Peckham, of New York.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

All these distinguished Democrats not only voted against the constitutionality of the law, but denounced it as a danger to the Republic.

6. Under these circumstances it does not seem probable that the Democrats can make great capital in seeking to monopolize the antitrust issue and charging the Republican party with the crime of being owned body and soul by the trusts.

It is just as well to record some plain truths, however unpleasant or surprising.

[Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that there are just three short items that will conclude this paragraph, and if he will permit these to be read, I will not proceed any further.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not want the floor for more than a few minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say that after five minutes I will ask to proceed with these three items, and then I will not proceed further with the bill to-night.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I agree with the article in the editorial to the effect that it is always well, no matter whom it helps or whom it hurts, to have the truth. It is always well for the party in whose favor it is told. It is always well in the long run for the party against whom it has temporarily operated. Provided the article—the things stated in the article—are true, it is well it was written. If it is not true, the article is wrong. Now, gentleman, "I am delighted" [laughter], to use a phrase with which some of you are acquainted, "I am delighted" to see the Republican majority upon this floor apparently trying to "hound and hunt" down combines and trusts in this country. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] I would be more delighted if I did not know that you are very much like the month of March—that you come in like lions and you go out like lambs. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

You always have acted like the month of March in connection with this question. I was glad to hear the applause; it touched my good old Democratic heart down to its very bottom. Every Democrat believes in the idea of equal opportunities and equal burdens, and no Democrat believes in a trust or combine that stifles competition, extorts from the consumer, and hurts the general public. Now, then, I want just to call the attention of the country to this day, this hour, and this applause. I bid all men mark it in their memories. I want the country to watch and see how far the applause is going to end in fruition. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Already your Attorney-General has been careful to be interviewed and to permit the country to know that you are "not running amuck" against trusts. He says that the Northern Securities case just simply settles the Northern Securities case, and he does not mean anything particular anyhow, and he seems to be awfully cautious that the country should understand that he does not mean anything particular anyhow.

I do not know whether the country will ever find it out or not, but I have already found out you here on this floor do not mean anything particular anyhow. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I heard one statement of alleged fact in that article that is not a fact, and you all know it is not a fact, and that is that this Administration was the author of this prosecution. It happened to be one Governor Van Zant out West who commenced it, and for very shame after he had gotten the case upon the docket the Administration prior to an election had to continue what he began. Why, it is the only thing you did not "stand pat" on until after an election——

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi (continuing). And you would have stood pat on that, but Governor Van Zant was a blanket-Indian Republican and did not consult headquarters, but precipitated the litigation, and after it was precipitated your Administration had in very shame to take care of itself by letting the Supreme Court pronounce on it.

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; I will yield now.

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Are you acquainted with the politics of the governor of Minnesota?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am, and I just a moment ago said I was. I said he was a blanket-Indian Republican [applause on the Democratic side] momentarily off the reservation. He is a Republican who actually meant what you fellows were pretending to mean when you were applauding a moment ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, I have seen blanket-Indian Republicans before. I have seen them from Minnesota before to-day. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I have also seen them quelled when the time came for them to be quelled. [Laughter.] And if you dare attack the men who are in the habit of furnishing your campaign funds, and carry your attack far enough to persuade them that you are in earnest, you will be quelled too [applause on the Democratic side]; quelled by them.

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. And if you do not you will be quelled by the people——

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Will the gentleman allow me one more question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. SOUTHWICK. Having disputed one of six statements, will you now or in the future kindly address yourself to the other five?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I may or I may not; that depends upon my own sweet will. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not believe in absolutism of government except when it comes to my own self-government. Nor, Mr. Chairman, do I believe in the colonial government of myself by the gentleman who interrupted me. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If that article be true, then "hew to the line, let the chips fly as they may." If the hewing hurts you, let it hurt. If it hurts us, let it hurt. But for God's sake let us all hew so that it will help the country. If you can do more than we can do or want to do and will try to do and will do if we get in power to put an end to combinations which restrain trade and stifle competition, then you will deserve the plaudits of your countrymen everywhere; you ought to have them and will have them. I do not care about ancient history, whether it cuts us or cuts the other side. I have always faced the present situation, and that is all I care about. Now, you have applauded, you have inadvertently or accidentally or incidentally or in some other way expressed through your applause your idea of going forward in executing the Sherman law. Follow it up, but take note. Your Attorney-General says he is "not running amuck." Now, for God's sake, take this injunction to your souls—run amuck, you, and run the biggest amuck you know how against all unlawful combinations and trusts, and don't any of you be interviewed in order to assure unlawful combinations and trusts from imagining you are going to run amuck. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. In order to complete the history of this whole transaction, will the gentleman state to the House how the Democrats in the Fifty-first Congress voted when the Sherman antitrust law was brought up for consideration by Mr. McKinley?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will let the gentleman make the statement.

Mr. TAWNEY. They every one voted against it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let me answer the gentleman. That is not the truth. That same old question rises up that has been knocked down so many times. When that bill passed the House——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is not in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When that bill passed the House and the Senate, there was not a single solitary vote against it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I say that when the Sherman Act passed the House and Senate finally not a single solitary one voted against the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Ancient history again. Gentlemen of the other side, face the situation. [Laughter.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Minnesota is wrong in his history.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; I am not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My friend from Mississippi yielded to me, and I want to tell the gentlemen on the other side something.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The other side wants information, and I am going to give it to them. [Laughter.] One bill was introduced by Senator TELLER, another by Senator Reagan, of Texas, then a Democrat and now a Democrat and, thank God, still a Democrat. On the same day Mr. Sherman introduced one. The Reagan bill is numbered ahead of the Sherman Act. Sherman had his bill, with two little unconstitutional sections in it, sent to his committee, and there he undertook to doctor it up and put a little constitutional power into it, and after a while he brought it in and then took it back and introduced another one. He reported that and they put sixteen amendments onto it. Senator Wolcott asked that it be sent to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one moment. I want to correct that statement right there.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, is this all coming out of my time?

Mr. TAWNEY. I make the statement that when President McKinley presented the rule for the consideration of the Sherman antitrust law every Democrat voted against it, and the RECORD shows it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, there is another thing——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I haven't got this thing out of the Judiciary Committee yet. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee will suspend. The gentleman from Mississippi has the floor, and he yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I have the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, it seems somehow or other that I can not help being thrust back into ancient history whether I will or whether I will not. But the gentleman from Minnesota——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, Mr. Chairman, I ask for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks that his time may be extended three minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I want to know what has become of the post-office appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That point is a little too late. It is a familiar adage of parliamentary law that should extend to debate that an amendment subject to a point of order is in order if the thing to which it is an amendment was subject to a point of order but not objected to. Now, I want——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asked and obtained the floor and proceeded for five minutes, and when his time expired he asked for three minutes, which was granted: there are two minutes remaining to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I was about to say that often when I do not want to be I am thrown back into ancient history. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has started with an immense mountain of assertion and he has come out with a very small mouse of confirmation of his own assertion.

The gentleman has finally come out at this little bit of a place. He tells us that when "the rule" was presented to the House—a rule, mark you, probably cutting off debate—the Democrats voted against "the rule." It was simply a rule and nothing else. Your rules are generally objectionable.

Mr. TAWNEY. It was for the consideration of a bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But a rule for consideration. It is not true that Democrats have ever opposed any legislation which in their opinion was intended or calculated to cut down trusts or combinations, and the gentleman knows it. Now, then, since I must go back to ancient history, I want to say this: That it is entirely useless here and now to discuss this particular point of ancient history, because that distinguished Senator from Missouri, than whom no man brighter, wittier, or more genial ever lived, Senator Vest, settled this thing long ago, and I merely wish to refer to the record. Read what he said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, I thought he wanted to talk about the trust question. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is out of order. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I have been reasonably fair in permitting liberality of debate heretofore, but I think it has been demonstrated that there are elements which disturb the minds of Members outside of post-office affairs, and in view of the turn which the debate has taken and which has demonstrated that the difficulties of the Post-Office Committee to progress with proper legislation are not wholly confined to the Post-Office Committee rooms, but obtain by divergence of opinion on this floor respecting other matters, I move that the committee do now rise. [Applause and laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the post-office appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of the bill (S. 3725) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station at the entrance to Bellingham Bay, State of Washington, was changed from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9319) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak., with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 18, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. STEWART, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal, without objection, will stand approved.

FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate:

In compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 15th instant (the House of Representatives concurring), I return herewith Senate bill No. 2323, entitled "An act relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 17, 1904.

Mr. DUBOIS. I ask unanimous consent to submit at this time the resolution which I send to the desk, for which I ask present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho submits a resolution, which will be read.

Mr. CULLOM. What becomes of the message of the President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is in relation to the bill referred to in the message.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2323) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill all after "namely," in line 13 of the enrolled bill, down to and including line 20 of said bill, be stricken out and the following inserted: "Lot 4, section 1, township 7 south, range 34 east, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, section 18, township 7 south, range 35 east, and the east half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 6 south, range 34 east, and which have heretofore been appraised, shall be paid for at the said appraised value at the time of and by the person making entry of the respective tracts upon which such improvements are situated;" so as to correctly describe the range inaccurately stated in the bill.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I ask leave to present a petition, and I wish to make a statement about it. It is a petition of 209 Macedonians, resident in this country, praying for an expression of sympathy by Congress in the cause of the Macedonian people. The petition sets forth with great clearness and eloquence the wrongs which those people have suffered. The names of the petitioners seem to be foreign names, and I wrote to the gentleman who sent me the petition, calling his attention to the rule of the Senate which permitted the right of petition to the Senate to American citizens, and requiring that petitions of others should be sent through the State Department or the President. This gentleman replied that nearly all, or a large part, of the petitioners are American citizens. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the petition may be received, although it has added to it the names of a few persons who are residents here, but are not naturalized citizens, and therefore is technically in violation of our rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the petition presented by him containing the names of some foreign subjects may be received. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. To what committee does the Senator desire the petition referred?

Mr. HOAR. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made, in the absence of objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of the estate of Artemus E. Gibson;

A bill (H. R. 10511) for the relief of the estate of Mary Keating; and

A bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of the estate of Mary P. Gilmore.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10925) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, now the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., reported it with amendments.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5047) granting certain lands to the Diocese of Duluth for mission purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10516) for the relief of Edward J. Farrell, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5052) to provide for the construction of an elevator in the United States public building at Richmond, Ky., reported it without amendment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 5122) for the relief of the Western Alaska Construction Company's railroad; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4549) to authorize the appointment of road overseers and to create road districts in the district of Alaska, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported adversely thereon; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 3706) in aid of the construction of the Valdez, Copper River and Tanana Railroad, in Alaska; and

A joint resolution (S. R. 51) to extend the time for construction of the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad, in Alaska.

PUBLICATIONS OF MARINE-HOSPITAL SERVICE.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 59) providing for the publication of the annual reports, Public Health Reports, bulletins, and other special publications of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that there be printed each year the Public Health Reports, bulletins, and other special publications of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States, to be distributed by the Surgeon-General, in such editions as the interests of the Government and the public may require; and that there be printed each year 12,000 copies of the Annual Report of the Surgeon-General of the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service of the United States, 5,000 copies for the use of the House, 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 5,000 copies, bound in cloth, to be distributed by the Surgeon-General.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

KIRBY THOMAS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10058) for the relief of Kirby Thomas, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Postmaster-General to allow on the accounts of Kirby Thomas, postmaster at Superior, Wis., a credit of $13,897.36, for postal funds derived from box rents and postage stamps, or their equivalent in money, stolen from the post-office by burglars on the night of October 20, 1903.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLATT of New York introduced a bill (S. 5107) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel Warren; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 5108) to amend an act for the prevention of smoke in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved February 2, 1899; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 5109) granting an increase of pension to Martin Russell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5110) granting a pension to Cornelia K. Smith:

A bill (S. 5111 granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Barrett (with an accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 5112) granting an increase of pension to Kettil Torgeson (with accompanying papers).

Mr. McCREARY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5113) granting a pension to John Burke;

A bill (S. 5114) granting an increase of pension to James W. Poor; and

A bill (S. 5115) granting a pension to John Hedrick.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 5116) granting an increase of pension to J. McKendree Kemp; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUAY introduced a bill (S. 5117) to authorize the appointment of Alexander D. B. Smead as a captain of cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a b ll (S. 5118) granting an increase of pension to Andrew R. Mark; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 5119) for the relief of the widow and heirs at law of Charles Wilkes, deceased, late a rear-admiral in the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut (for Mr. HAWLEY) introduced a bill (S. 5120) granting an increase of pension to William H. Chamberlain; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 5121) granting an increase of pension to James Fly; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the erection of a monument at the grave of Maj. Pierre Charles L'Enfant, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $130,629.67 for the reimbursement of the directors of Providence Hospital, Washington, D. C., for expenses incurred in the reconstruction of the hospital building, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for building an annex to the United States court-house and post-office at Shreveport, La., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Montana submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11676) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, in Montana; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate:

1. Whether an order has recently been issued enlarging the pension act of June 27, 1890, and amendments, as to disabilities of applicants for pensions, and if so, to send to the Senate a copy of said order.

2. By what amount, if any, will said order probably increase pensions annually, particularly when the same shall become fully operative.

ARIZONA TERRITORIAL INSANE ASYLUM.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6494) to approve and ratify act numbered 7 of the legislative assem ly of the Territory of Arizona.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him, which will be read to the Senate for its information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, my experience has not been favorable to the validation of bonds, and I should like to ask if there is a report of the committee accompanying the bill?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. There is a report accompanying the bill. The Senator can either have the report read or I will give a verbal explanation, as he may prefer.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, this is a bill which passed the House of Representatives, came to the Senate, was referred to our Committee on Territories, and by them favorably reported. As I understand the facts to be, it is a bill of uncommon merit and of pressing necessity.

The facts are these: The Territory of Arizona now has in its insane asylum something over 300 inmates. The accommodations of that asylum are entirely inadequate for that number. They are not adequate for more than 150, whereas there are 300 patients there. Therefore proper hygienic attention and even proper medical attention can not be given to the inmates. The condition is pressing and immediate.

Before the enactment of this law by the Territorial legislative assembly of Arizona an investigation was made. The act needs the ratification of the Congress of the United States more as a practical matter than perhaps as a legal matter. I do not understand that the $100,000 loan hereby authorized exceeds the 40 per cent limitation, but the state of the market is such, with reference to these bonds, that they can be sold at a higher price and more readily diposed of when they have the stamp of approval of the Congress of the United States.

In this particular case, as I say, the matter, as appears from the facts I have given to the Senate, is of pressing and immediate moment; it is a question of common humanity. The inmates in the asylum are to-day at this hour suffering for additional accommodations, and the insane are perhaps twice in number what the accommodations at present are sufficient to provide for. There is suffering and distress and inadequacy of attention, not on account of the executive officers, but merely on account of the fact that they have not sufficient room and equipments.

That, I believe, presents all the facts contained in the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it was impossible to hear distinctly the bill as it was read, and I should therefore like to ask the Senator from Indiana if there is contained in it a proposition to validate bonds already issued, or is it to authorize the issuance of bonds in the first instance?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The proposition in the bill is, in one word, to validate the action of the legislature of Arizona, which has authorized the issuance of the bonds.

Mr. CULBERSON. Have the bonds already been issued?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On the point of the issuance of the bonds I am not informed, but the Delegate from Arizona, who now sits at the side of the Senator, can probably inform him.

As to the merits of this bill, it did not occur to the committee or to any member of it as of importance whether the bonds had been issued or not. The facts which underlie this bill have their root in common humanity and immediate necessity, but whether the bonds have been actually issued I do not know.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

AMERICAN ACADEMY IN ROME.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3244) to incorporate the American Academy in Rome, which has been reported favorably from the Committee on the Library with amendments.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments, in section 1, page 2, line 3, after the name "William H. Herriman," to strike out the name "Abram S. Hewitt;" and in line 11, after the name "Frederick Law Olmsted," to strike out "junior."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In section 2, page 3, line 11, after the word "estate," I move to insert "and personal property;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That said corporation may adopt a constitution and make all by-laws, rules, and regulation not inconsistent with law that may be necessary or expedient in order to accomplish the purposes of its creation; and it may hold real estate and personal property in the United States and in the Kingdom of Italy for the necessary use and purposes of said organization to an amount not to exceed $500,000; and it may adopt a seal. Said corporation shall have its principal office in Washington, in the District of Columbia, and shall hold its annual meetings in such places as the said incorporators shall determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, is that the same bill which was called up the other day by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], to which an amendment was offered?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is not the same bill.

Mr. BERRY. Well, is it the same character of bill?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Not at all.

Mr. BERRY. An amendment was put on that bill here, as I remember, that in no case should the United States be liable for any acts done or obligations incurred by that company.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is no liability whatever under this bill.

Mr. BERRY. Well, it makes this academy a corporation of the United States. It may be misleading in that respect, and some persons may infer that the United States would be in some way liable. If I remember, a similar bill was before the Senate a few days ago in charge of the Senator from New Jersey, and such an amendment as I have indicated was put upon it.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I hope the Senator will consider the fact that these gentlemen are merely seeking the privilege of being incorporated in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BERRY. Yes.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. That is all there is to it, and there is no obligation whatever imposed upon the Government.

Mr. BERRY. I want to put a provision in this bill similar to that to which I have referred, and so I move to add to the bill:

Provided, That under no circumstances shall the United States be liable for any obligation incurred by this corporation.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to having that amendment adopted, if the Senator from Arkansas so desires, as a similar amendment was put in the bill to which he has referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALFRED I. JUDY.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3776) granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Sherman, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment and agree to an amendment inserting in lieu thereof the word "twenty;" and the House agree to the same.

P. J. McCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
T. M. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY R. GIBSON,
ROBERT W. MIERS,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

HENRY CHRISTY.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede.

P. J. McCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
T. M. PATTERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
HENRY R. GIBSON,
ROBERT W. MIERS,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. QUARLES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 12904) providing for holding of courts of the eastern division of the northern Federal judicial district of Georgia at Athens, Ga.; and

A bill (H. R. 13352) transferring the county of Pierce, in the State of Georgia, from the eastern to the southwestern division of the United States district court for the southern district of Georgia.

The bill (H. R. 3761) ceding certain land appertaining to the custom-house at St. Joseph, Mo., for use as a street was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

FOG SIGNAL AT QUARRY POINT, ANGEL ISLAND, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4603) to establish a fog signal at Quarry Point, Angel Island, Bay of San Francisco, California.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to add to the bill the following:

And the Light-House Board is hereby authorized to expend so much of this amount as may be needed from the $63,000 appropriated for the construction of a light and fog-signal station at Point Dume, California, by the act of March 3, 1901, for the establishment of said signal and quarters.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be established a fog signal at Quarry Point, Angel Island, Bay of San Francisco, California, with quarters for keepers, at a cost not to exceed $12,000, and the Light-House Board is hereby authorized to expend so much of this amount as may be needed from the $63,000 appropriated for the construction of a light and fog-signal station at Point Dume, California, by the act of March 3, 1901, for the establishment of said signal and quarters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN WALLER.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 36) to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mail.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "eight hundred" and insert "two hundred and fifteen;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John Waller, late postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $215, to reimburse him for money expended in carrying the United States mails and from damages consequent therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the close of the routine morning business, the Senate may proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 464, being the bill (S. 196) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that immediately after the close of the routine morning business on Monday next the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. The bill has been once before the Senate and has been read, as the Chair understands.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not understand that there will be any objection to the bill or any argument about it at that time.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I favor that bill; but, as I said the other day in the Senate, I do not think that we ought to parcel out the time of the Senate by unanimous-consent agreements for the consideration of particular bills. I will help the Senator from North Dakota all I can on next Monday morning to get consideration for the bill named by him. He can move to proceed to its consideration then, and I will do all I can to help him get it; but I do not think we ought——

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that he had better give notice.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But I do not think we ought to parcel out the time of the Senate by unanimous-consent agreements when it may be more important to consider other measures at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

JOHN H. M'LAUGHLIN.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 199) for the relief of John H. McLaughlin.

The bill was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John H. McLaughlin, of Fort Randall, S. Dak., for services as custodian of the abandoned Fort Randall Military Reservation, in South Dakota, $500, for forty-four and two-thirds months, beginning October 28, 1893, and ending July 19, 1897.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAROLINE MURTAGH.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1779) for the relief of Caroline Murtagh, widow of the late William J. Murtagh, formerly proprietor of the National Republican, of Washington, D. C.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to have the report read.

Mr. STEWART. I can state exactly what it is.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. STEWART January 27, 1904:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1779) for the relief of Caroline Murtagh, widow of the late William J. Murtagh, late proprietor of the National Republican, of Washington, D. C., have considered the same and submit the following report:

This committee has previously favorably reported a similar bill—during the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress.

As the committee's former report well states the facts in this case, the committee adopts the same as its report on the bill now under consideration, and reports back S. 1779 with the following amendment:

In line 9, after the word "cents," insert the following: "which sum is hereby appropriated, being."

With this amendment your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 1141, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill for the relief of William J. Murtagh (S. 187), late proprietor of the National Republican, of Washington, D. C., have considered the same and submit the following report:

During the year 1872, and for some years before, William J. Murtagh was the owner of the National Republican, a newspaper published in the District of Columbia, and for a considerable period of time during Mr. Murtagh's ownership of the paper in question all United States Government advertisements were published therein, the paper being designated to publish such advertisements by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, whose authority for such action was founded upon the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress approved July 20, 1868. These advertisements were published as stated, and paid for by the United States Government.

By an act of Congress approved July 15, 1870 (16 Stat. L., 308), it was enacted that no advertisement, notice, or proposal for any Executive Department of the Government, or for any bureau thereof, or for any office therewith connected, shall be published in any newspaper whatever, except in pursuance of a written authority for such publication from the head of such Department, and further enacting that no bill for any such advertising or publication should be paid unless there were presented with such bills a copy of the written authority required.

After the passage of this law Mr. Murtagh continued publication of the United States Government advertisements in the National Republican, receiving from the heads of the various Executive Departments, except the Treasury Department, the written authority required by the last-mentioned act. Because of some personal feeling which existed between the then Secretary of the Treasury and Mr. Murtagh, the latter was unable to obtain from the former the written authority required, but Mr. Murtagh claims to have received from General Grant, who was President of the United States during the period in which these advertisements were published, directions to continue their publication in his newspaper and his assurances that the bills therefor would be paid. This direction and these assurances by the President seem to have been verbal only, for Mr. Murtagh is unable to produce any written authority from General Grant, but it appears that Mr. Murtagh was then on close personal and intimate terms with the President, who seems to have entertained for him a high regard. (See the affidavit of Lieutenant-Colonel Sniffin, accompanying this report, who was Executive clerk stationed at the White House during General Grant's first term as President and his secretary during his second term.)

Having received General Grant's advice and assurances, as claimed, Mr. Murtagh continued to publish the advertisements of the Treasury Department, as well as those of the other Departments, and all of his bills for such advertising, except in the case of the Treasury Department, were duly paid. Mr. Murtagh presented his vouchers for the Treasury Department advertisements to that Department, but payment was refused upon the ground that he was unable to produce the written authority called for by the act of July 15, 1870. There is no doubt that the advertisements in question were published in the National Republican by Mr. Murtagh, as claimed. He produced before the committee his vouchers for such advertisements, which were published during the years 1871 and 1872. In addition, there were submitted to the committee, and the same accompany this report, the affidavits of Mr. Joseph B. Fowler and Joseph Y. Potts, both of whom were employed upon the National Republican during the period in which the advertisements were published. Mr. Potts occupied a responsible position upon the paper, and both affiants have personal knowledge of the publication of the advertisements in question.

The affidavit of Mr. Murtagh is also hereto attached.

In 1893 a bill for the relief of Mr. Murtagh, similar to the one now reported upon, was introduced in the House of Representatives and referred to the Committee on Claims, which, on February 15, 1893, favorably reported the measure to the House in a report, a copy of which is hereto annexed and made a part of this report.

The bill has been introduced at each Congress for many years, and the claimant has exercised due diligence in seeking relief.

The committee are of the opinion that Mr. Murtagh's claim is just and meritorious and the amount provided in the bill should be paid, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

C. C. Sniffen, being first duly sworn, on oath says that he was, during the first term of General Grant as President of the United States, Executive clerk, stationed at the White House, and during his second term was his secretary; that he was fully acquainted with the relations existing between the then President and William J. Murtagh, former publisher of the National Republican of this city; that they were intimate friends, and Mr. Murtagh was a daily visitor at the White House, consulting with the President upon matters of personal or political import; that in every way General Grant manifested the utmost friendship for Mr. Murtagh; and this affiant believes that within reason he would have complied with any request likely to have been made by Mr. Murtagh and favored him, as far as might be possible consistent with law, in the granting of contracts for publishing departmental advertising.

C. C. SNIFFEN,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Deputy Paymaster-General, U. S. Army.

Joseph Y. Potts, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the District of Columbia, and has resided in said District since the year 1855, and that he is now and has been for some years past the clerk of the police court of said District; that in the year 1866 this affiant became connected as reporter on special duties with the National Republican, a newspaper published in said District; that in the year 1868 this affiant entered upon permanent and continuous employment on the same paper, then owned by William J. Murtagh, and continued in said employment from that time until the paper ceased publication, about the year 1891, some years after Mr. Murtagh parted with his interest in and ownership of the same; that during his employment this affiant filled various positions on said paper, from that of local reporter to managing editor; that during the Administrations of General Grant said newspaper was selected by the proper authority as the medium for publishing for all the United States Government Departments their advertisements, and that said advertisements were published in said paper; that he received instructions, while news editor, to clip from all exchanges United States Government advertisements appearing therein, which were subsequently republished by said National Republican under its aforesaid selection for that purpose, and for such advertisements the proprietor of the paper, the aforesaid William J. Murtagh, was paid, except for the Treasury Department advertisements; that the publication of said advertisements continued as aforesaid by said paper until General Grant retired from the Presidency; that during the period aforesaid the said newspaper published the advertisements of the Treasury Department, as well as those of the other United States Government Departments, and to the best of this affiant's knowledge, information, and belief the said William J. Murtagh was paid for said advertisements, except those of the Treasury Department.

And further affiant saith not. JOSEPH Y. POTTS.

[SEAL.] HARVEY T. WINFIELD, Notary Public.

William J. Murtagh, being first duly sworn, on oath deposes and says that he is a citizen of the United States and a resident of the District of Columbia, and has been such resident fifty years; that he was owner of the National Republican, a newspaper published daily in the District of Columbia from 1860 to 1877; that during the Administrations of General Grant as President the said newspaper was designated by the Clerk of the House of Representatives as the paper in which all United States Government advertisements should be published, this designation being made by the Clerk under the provisions of section 2 of the act of Congress of July 20, 1868, and this affiant also had authority from General Grant to publish said advertisements.

Under this designation and authority this affiant published and was paid for so publishing all United States Government advertisements, but in 1870 Congress enacted a law requiring that no advertisement, notice, or proposal for any Executive Department of the Government or for any bureau thereof or for any office therewith connected should be published in any newspaper whatever except in pursuance of a written authority for such publication from the head of such Department; and no bill for any such advertising or publication should be paid unless there was presented with such bills a copy of the written authority required by said law. This affiant obtained the written authority required by the before-mentioned act of Congress from the heads of all the other Departments, but failed to obtain the authority from the Treasury Department for the reason that affiant had opposed some of the policies of the Secretary of the Treasury and incurred his displeasure. Affiant explained the matter to President Grant and inquired of him if it was safe to continue the publication of the advertisements of the Treasury Department.

The President remarked that he had better continue the publication and that he could rely on his good offices in the premises. Acting on the suggestion of President Grant, affiant continued the publication of the Treasury advertisements, as well as the advertisements of all other Departments, and in due course presented the bill to the Treasury Department for payment, but the Secretary failed to pay the same. The bills for such advertising are herewith submitted, and this affiant swears that the prices charged therefor were the proper and reasonable prices prevailing at the time for such advertisements and that the same were duly published in the aforesaid National Republican newspaper by this affiant because of the direction and assurances made to him by the President.

And further affiant saith not.

WM. J. MURTAGH.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public in and for the District of Columbia, this 2d day of May, A. D. 1900.
[SEAL.] HARVEY T. WINFIELD, Notary Public.

[House Report No. 2512, Fifty-second Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7048) for the relief of William J. Murtagh, late proprietor of the National Republican, of Washington, D. C., have considered the same and respectfully submit the following report:

For some years previous to and during 1872 the claimant, William J. Murtagh, was the proprietor of the National Republican, a newspaper published in Washington, D. C., and had the printing and publishing of certain advertisements for various Departments of the United States in said paper, under the provisions of sections 2 of the act of July 20, 1868, whereby the Clerk of the House of Representatives was authorized to select one newspaper in the city of Washington in which the advertisements for contracts made by the Government should be published.

The Clerk of the House selected the National Republican for this purpose, and that paper continued to publish said advertisements under this authority until July 15, 1870 (16 Stat., 308), when an amendatory act was passed requiring—

"That no advertisement, notice, or proposal for any Executive Department of the Government, or for any bureau thereof, or for any office therewith connected, shall be published in any newspaper whatever except in pursuance of a written authority for such publication from the head of such Department; and no bill for any such advertising or publication shall be paid unless there be presented, with such bills, a copy of the written authority aforesaid."

All the different Departments of the Government published their advertisements in the National Republican during this time, and the necessary "written authority" was obtained from all except the Treasury Department and the work paid for. The Treasury Department refused or omitted to give the written authority required because of some personal feeling which existed between the Secretary of the Treasury and this claimant, as appears from the evidence produced before the committee. It also appears by the proofs in the case that the claimant continued to publish these advertisements for the Treasury Department by direction of the President of the United States, with the understanding by the claimant that the same should be paid for.

The opinion of J. Holt, Judge-Advocate-General of the United States, a copy of which is hereto annexed, will apply in this case.

It seems improbable that the claimant would have continued to do this work, requiring, as it must, a considerable expenditure of money, without some understanding that it would be paid for; and as he has produced separate bills for each item of the work done, with a copy of each advertisement attached to the same, with the evidence that the publications were duly made and the charges for the same correct, the Government having received the full benefit of this work, we are of the opinion that he should be compensated therefor.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Bureau of Military Justice, January 7, 1870.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War.

In construing the terms of the order of the President that the accounts of the newspapers "now on file be audited and paid," the principal difficulty appears to consist in the proper meaning to be given to the word "audited." If by this it was intended that the accounting official should simply examine the accounts as they stand and state, upon calculation, the correct sum due thereon, then the order would properly be interpreted as authorizing the payment of the full amounts if those amounts are in their figures the correct ones. If the word "audited" be more strictly construed, as meaning that the accounts should be not merely verified, but adjusted in conformity to the general rules adopted in the Department for the settlement of bills of a similar class, the inference would be that they were intended to be paid only in part, viz, as reduced by the rule referred to in the inclosed memorandum. This latter inference is not deemed to be a necessary one, especially as the present accounts are exceptional in their character and have been approved "for special considerations;" but whether this construction or the other shall be given to the word in question can really be fully declared only by the President himself.

That the President has power to disregard the general rule alluded to in settling these accounts I can have no doubt. This rule is not a statutory one, and so imperative in its nature, but one made in his name and by his authority, and he can certainly modify or abrogate it altogether at his pleasure. He can therefore, of course, except any case such as the present from its operation, and thus may, without the violation of any law, order to be allowed the full charges for all the publications made by the newspapers, if, from the proofs, such charges shall be found to be correct, and such publications to have been duly made.

J. HOLT, Judge-Advocate-General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move to amend the bill, on page 2, line 1, by striking out, before the word "authority," the word "by" and inserting "without;" and in the same line, after the word "law," by striking out "and" and inserting "but;" so as to read: "without authority of law, but in accordance with vouchers filed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The committee propose to amend the bill, on page 1, line 9, by inserting, after the words "cents," the words "which sum is hereby appropriated, being."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. It is a short bill, and I ask that it be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana was recognized.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I was merely going to ask for a brief explanation of the bill; but I can do that later. The reports were so long and involved and other business intervening I could not well understand the case. I thought perhaps the Senator from Nevada could briefly explain it.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to state the case in a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas calls for the reading of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. As amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read as amended.

The Secretary read the bill as amended, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Caroline Murtagh, widow of the late William J. Murtagh, formerly proprietor of the National Republican newspaper, published in Washington, D. C., the sum of $17,347.72, which sum is hereby appropriated, being due the said Murtagh for printing in said newspaper, without authority of law, but in accordance with vouchers filed, certain advertisements issued by the Government of the United States.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it is not too much trouble to the Senator who called up the bill, I should like to have a few words of explanation made.

Mr. STEWART. I was here at the time, and I know all about it. Mr. Murtagh was the owner and editor of the Republican, the leading Republican newspaper at the capital, which published official advertisements. The Clerk of the House of Representatives for a time gave out the advertisements. Afterwards Congress passed a law that advertisements must be ordered by the heads of Departments. Mr. Murtagh had some difference with the Secretary of the Treasury with regard to an appointment. That is not in the evidence, but I recollect it. The Republican newspapers defending the President said some sharp things of the Secretary. I remember the circumstance, because I had something to do with the then pending legislation in regard to it. Mr. Murtagh had been publishing the advertisements for a long time under the authority of the Clerk of the House, and the report shows, and the evidence is, that he consulted the President as to whether he should go on with their publication. He could not get the order from the Secretary.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. What were the advertisements he was publishing?

Mr. STEWART. Official advertisements of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. When was this?

Mr. STEWART. This was during Grant's Administration.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thirty years ago.

Mr. STEWART. Thirty-odd years ago.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Has this bill ever been presented before?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; a good many times.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has never passed.

Mr. STEWART. It has never been passed, but Mr. Murtagh did the work, and the committee which has examined into the matter thinks he ought to be paid. He is now dead.

Mr. CULLOM. Where does this report come from?

Mr. STEWART. From the Committee on Claims. It reported it last year and again this year.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the Senator from Nevada to have accepted an amendment stating that this printing was without authority of law, and yet he asks that the bill be passed?

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senate adopted the amendment. I did not understand the Senator from Nevada to accept it.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood the Senator from Nevada to accept it.

Mr. STEWART. I did not propose the amendment The advertising was done without authority of law, because the law required that the publisher should get the order from the Secretary, and he did not get that order, and I doubt very much whether the President had the power to authorize him to print it, but he, acting upon what the President did, made the publication.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. If it is a just claim, we ought not to haggle about it. The fact that it is thirty-odd years old——

Mr. STEWART. There is no doubt he performed the service, and he ought to be paid.

Mr. SPOONER. The trouble with this claim seems to be radical. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Connecticut——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And adopted.

Mr. SPOONER. I was going to say that. The amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Connecticut and adopted by the Senate is sustained by the fact.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Of course it is.

Mr. SPOONER. And it ought to have been proposed by the Senator from Connecticut of all other Senators, and it ought to have been adopted by the Senate, because it is perfectly apparent from the report that the publication of these advertisements, for which the charge of $17,500 is made, was absolutely without any authority of law.

Now, this claim rests upon a very narrow basis. It appears that Mr. Murtagh was paid for all the advertisements which were published——

Mr. STEWART. Up to that time.

Mr. SPOONER. Under the law as it stood when his newspaper was designated for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART. By the Clerk of the House.

Mr. SPOONER. By the Clerk of the House. Then by the act approved July 15, 1870, it was provided—

That no advertisement, notice, or proposal for any Executive Department of the Government, or for any bureau thereof, or for any office therewith connected, shall be published in any newspaper whatever, except in pursuance of a written authority for such publication from the head of such Department.

Now, that did not mean the President.

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. SPOONER. The Constitution makes a clear distinction between the President of the United States and the head of a Department. When Congress provides that nothing shall be done without the written authority from the head of a Department, that does not mean, of course, anything except what it says.

Mr. STEWART. It means just what it says.

Mr. SPOONER. It is utterly immaterial why Mr. Murtagh was unable to procure the written authority from the Secretary of the Treasury. The Senator says it was because he was criticising the Secretary of the Treasury and there was bad blood between them. It is sufficient to say that he did not receive the written authority, and therefore he knew and was bound to know and the report shows that he did know that he had no warrant in law for publishing these notices and would not be entitled, if he did publish them, to collect for that service.

He makes it appear in this report that he was a great friend of General Grant, and while he could not get the written authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to bring him within this law and put him in a position where he could render the service, file his accounts with the auditing department with certainty that he was entitled to have them audited and the amount paid, he appealed to General Grant upon the subject, and General Grant told him "to go on and I will use my good offices." In the first place that conversation was with a man who is now dead.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It was a conversation between two men, both of whom are now dead.

Mr. SPOONER. They are both dead. But if Mr. Murtagh were alive, it is a conversation entirely unsupported except by his affidavit or statement.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Sniffen, the clerk——

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Sniffen only testifies to this, that Mr. Murtagh was on friendly relations with President Grant. He has no doubt that President Grant would "have complied with any request likely to have been made by Mr. Murtagh and favored him, as far as might be possible consistent with law." But General Grant could not favor him in this respect in any possible way consistent with law, except by using his good offices with the Secretary of the Treasury to give to Murtagh written authority in order to comply with the law.

Mr. STEWART. Admitting all that.

Mr. SPOONER. Admitting all that, what is left?

Mr. STEWART. What is left?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. The fact that he did the work.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Did he ever get any money for it?

Mr. STEWART. Never.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. He never did?

Mr. STEWART. Never; not for this particular printing.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Either before the law or after?

Mr. STEWART. No; he did the work. I have no doubt he supposed that General Grant's good offices would be sufficient to secure him payment. He went on and expended his money for a considerable time and published the advertisements, and it stands like a good many other claims. He has no legal claim whatever; that is admitted by the committee. They do not recognize any legal claim; but the committee thought, inasmuch as he did the service and had not been paid, he had an equitable claim, and the United States ought not to take advantage——

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator admits that he rendered the service knowing of the existence of this law.

Mr. STEWART. Almost everybody thinks the President is all-powerful. I think Murtagh had faith that he would get his money.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. It is not a legal, but an equitable claim?

Mr. STEWART. An equitable claim. He has no legal claim, but I am perfectly certain he thought he would be paid or he would not have gone on and spent his money.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of this bill a single question. How does it happen that if this money is due it is payable to the widow instead of being payable to the administrator? What is the reason?

Mr. STEWART. She is the heir.

Mr. PETTUS. Why should the money be donated to the widow instead of being paid to the administrator?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know whether there is any administrator. I do not know whether or not one was appointed.

Mr. PETTUS. Then I will ask another question. Did this gentleman leave any estate?

Mr. STEWART. He did not leave much.

Mr. CULBERSON. I notice that in the report it is stated that "he produced before the committee his vouchers for such advertisements, which were published during the years 1871 and 1872." General Grant was President at that time——

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. And afterwards, and lived until 1885, I believe. There is nothing in the record to show that during his lifetime General Grant gave any credence to this statement about the work having been done by his authority.

Mr. STEWART. The bills for the printing were exhibited to the committee. I have not them here, but I recollect looking over them. There is no doubt about the printing having been done. That was looked into very carefully. The question is, Will the Government pay what it is not legally bound to pay for services actually rendered and accepted, because the advertisements were not published in any other paper?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh, yes.

Mr. STEWART. I want the Senate to understand exactly how it is when they vote on the bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. These advertisements were in great part advertisements which were clipped from other newspapers throughout the United States and then published in this paper.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Nevada says these advertisements were accepted by the United States. I ask the Senator what he means by that? Nobody could prevent Mr. Murtagh's putting these advertisements in his paper. Does the fact that he published them constitute acceptance by the United States?

Mr. STEWART. Not a legal acceptance.

Mr. SPOONER. What kind of an acceptance?

Mr. STEWART. They had to have the official advertisements published by law. That was required.

Mr. SPOONER. That raises another question which is material. If these were advertisements which were required by law to be published, and they were to be published on the written authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he was not willing to have them published by Mr. Murtagh, the presumption is that he did give written authority to have them published by some other newspaper. What does the Senator say about that?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know about that.

Mr. SPOONER. And if they were so published they have been paid for.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I read one word from an affidavit by Mr. Potts, who says "that he received instructions while news editor to clip from all exchanges United States Government advertisements appearing therein, which were subsequently republished by said National Republican under its aforesaid selection for that purpose." That was before they were required to get the authority of the head of a Department.

But this was a somewhat remarkable matter in its inception. Mr. Murtagh, so the Senator from Nevada says, was publishing a Republican newspaper in Washington. Whether it was Republican or Democratic——

Mr. STEWART. That does not make any difference.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It seems that all the Government advertisements which had been published elsewhere in the country were given to this newspaper, presumably for the purpose of supporting the newspaper. Then a law was passed, whether with the idea that there had been an abuse of the advertising business or otherwise I do not know, that no advertisement should be printed by any newspaper publisher except with the written authority of the head of the Department issuing the advertisement.

Mr. Murtagh got from all the other Departments written authority to continue the publication of these advertisements clipped from other newspapers around the country, but he could not get that authority from the Secretary of the Treasury, and he never did. Therefore he published these advertisements, so far as the Treasury Department advertisements were concerned, absolutely without authority of law and on his own risk, knowing there was a law which prohibited him from obtaining any payment for them.

Now, he said that General Grant told him to go ahead and he would use his good offices to see that the bills were paid. But that does not make the Government liable, either legally or equitably, for this claim.

Very likely this widow is poor, but I think I remember—I have been here a quarter of a century now—that this claim has been before Congress almost from the time when I came into the Senate, and though it has been reported on occasionally, it has never been passed by either House of Congress.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What is the amount of the claim?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Seventeen thousand three hundred and forty-seven dollars.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, is this bill subject to objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to object to the bill, at least until it can be ascertained whether these advertisements were not published by authority in some other paper and paid for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senate is considering the bill under Rule VIII, and it is subject to objection at any time.

Mr. STEWART. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

LIGHT-HOUSE DEPOT NEAR MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. QUARLES. I wish the Senator from Ohio would yield to me for a moment. I have a local bill which it is very important should be passed.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2936) for the establishment of a depot for the engineer of the ninth light-house district at or near the city of Milwaukee, Wis.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that there shall be established, at or near the city of Milwaukee, Wis., a depot for the engineer of the ninth light-house district, and appropriates $75,000 for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LYDIA M. HILL.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Ohio kindly yields to me to call up a bill. It is the bill (H. R. 7239) granting a pension to Lydia M. Hill. I would not ask this but for the fact that the beneficiary of the bill is the widow of a former Member of the House from my State who died poor, and who had been a splendid soldier. I should like to have the bill passed.

Mr. FORAKER. I yield for that purpose.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Lydia M. Hill, widow of Charles A. Hill, late of Company C, First Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension of $20 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 21, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 18, 1904.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

To be major-general.

Brig. Gen. Leonard Wood, United States Army, August 8, 1903.

REGISTER OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Hal J. Cole, of Spokane, Wash., to be register of the land office at Spokane, Wash.

INDIAN AGENT.

Caleb B. Jackson, of Sisseton, S. Dak., now superintendent of the Indian training school at Sisseton Agency, to be agent for the Indians of the Sisseton Agency in South Dakota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 18, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Military Affairs has instructed me to report back the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 10670, the army appropriation bill, with the recommendation that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask a conference with the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] explain the object of this motion?

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amended this bill in a very large number of particulars, placing upon it a great deal of general legislation. The Committee on Military Affairs considered the amendments for two days. A few of them are legitimate, and the committee is in favor of them; but a large number of the amendments we are opposed to entirely as not being proper legislation on this bill. Therefore we have agreed to submit this motion in order that the matter may go to conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to the army appropriation bill and ask a conference with the Senate?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HULL, Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, and Mr. HAY as conferees on the part of the House.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LITTAUER]?

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Spea er, I shall object to that proposition unless the gentleman can assure the House that there will be a disagreement on the amendment providing for purchasing a submarine torpedo boat of a particular kind by the War Department, and that we may have a separate vote on that amendment.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I should have no objection whatever to a separate vote on the proposition for a submarine torpedo boat provided that proposition remains as a part of the bill when the conferees make their report. It is new legislation and an entirely new departure.

Mr. MUDD. But I want to be assured that there will not be an agreement on the part of the House conferees to that amendment——

Mr. LITTAUER. I hardly think that the House at this time wants to tie the hands of the conferees before the matter has been brought up before them for discussion on its merits.

Mr. MUDD. Well, I shall insist on the point of order under Rule XX.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will send the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MUDD. I understand that.

Mr. RIXEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] a question. I take it that he thinks the question of purchasing submarine torpedo boats ought to be referred to the Naval Committee, as being within their jurisdiction. Now, suppose the conferees on this bill should agree to reject the Senate amendment, would that be agreeable to the gentleman?

Mr. MUDD. That would be perfectly satisfactory, if there could be an understanding that that would be done.

Mr. LITTAUER. The conferees could hardly be expected to be willing to make that agreement before considering the proposition and before listening to the arguments of the Senate. I certainly think such a course would be unusual.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LITTAUER. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from New York that the Senate having put upon this bill a matter which is absolutely foreign to the bill, which has never been considered by the House in connection with the bill, the House, under the rules, would be entitled to consider that proposition in the first instance, as it would have the right on any other appropriation bill.

Mr. LITTAUER. I want to say to the gentleman that we would be willing to make a compromise to this effect—that if the conferees can not secure a withdrawal of that amendment it be brought before the House as a separate item, so that the House would have a chance to vote thereon.

Mr. RIXEY. I think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. BARTLETT. But, Mr. Speaker, we know very well that on the urgent deficiency bill the Senate put an amendment granting to the St. Louis Exposition an appropriation of $4,600,000, and the House insisted that that, being a new matter entirely, should be considered by the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Here is an amendment which is entirely foreign to the fortifications appropriation bill, a proposition which the House has never considered in connection with this bill, but has considered in connection with the naval appropriation bill. It seems to me that the House ought to have the privilege in the first instance of determining whether it will not strike that amendment from the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has said that if this bill should go to conference the House would have an opportunity to consider and vote upon this specific amendment if the conferees should not succeed in keeping it out in conference; in other words, if the House conferees should not succeed in inducing the Senate to abandon the amendment. But the Chair desires to state that a single objection to the request for unanimous consent will send this bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not mean to say that I doubt in the least any statement made by the gentleman from New York or any other of the House conferees, but what I meant to suggest was that the House, without putting upon the conferees the burden suggested, ought in the first place to determine for itself that it does not want this amendment on this appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I think this matter ought to be considered by a committee of the House. I shall therefore object, in order that it may go to the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the report will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

H. R. 12446. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments.

WATERWORKS BOND ELECTION, GEARY, OKLA.

Mr. POWERS of Maine. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Maine rise?

Mr. POWERS of Maine. I rise to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3658) ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma legalizing the waterworks bond election held by the city of Geary, in said Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, approved March 5, 1903, entitled "An act legalizing the waterworks-bond election held by the city of Geary," be, and the same is hereby, ratified and confirmed; and the bonds to be issued in pursuance of said election are hereby legalized and made valid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. POWERS of Maine, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—DANTZLER V. LEVER, SEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT, SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desires to present a privileged report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I present, from the Committee on Elections No. 1, a report in the contested-election case of Dantzler v. Lever, from the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina, and ask that the report be printed and that the resolution be immediately considered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Alexander D. Dantzler was not elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. MANN. The report of the committee is unanimous, Mr. Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the report in this case go into the RECORD? I do not mean merely the resolution, but the report.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the report ordinarily would not go into the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. You would have no objection to it, would you?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the report being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report in the case of Dantzler v. Lever be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Elections No. 1, to whom was referred the contested-election case of Alexander D. Dantzler v. Asbury F. Lever, from the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina, report as follows:

At the Congressional election in the Seventh district of South Carolina on the 4th day of November, 1902, the contestant, Alexander D. Dantzler, received in said district the total number of 167 votes. The contestee, Asbury F. Lever, received 4,220 votes.

There is nothing in the record or in the case to sustain a claim that the contestant, Dantzler, was elected. It is indisputable that if a legal election were held in the district, the contestee, Lever, was fairly elected.

It is urged on behalf of contestant that no legal election was held in South Carolina, and the claim is made that both the election laws and the constitution of South Carolina then and now in operation are illegal, invalid, and unconstitutional, because in direct conflict with the so-called "reconstruction act" of June 25, 1868 (15 Stat. L., 73), readmitting South Carolina and other States to representation in Congress, upon the condition—stated in said act to be a "fundamental" condition—

"That the constitution of neither of said States shall ever be so amended or changed as to deprive any citizen or class of citizens of the United States of the right to vote in said State who are entitled to vote by the constitution thereof herein recognized, except as a punishment for such crimes as are now felonies at common law whereof they shall have been duly convicted under laws equally applicable to all the inhabitants of said State: Provided, That any altering of said constitution may be made with regard to the time and place of residence of voters."

The constitution of South Carolina referred to in the reconstruction act of June 25, 1868, did not contain any educational or property qualifications of voters. The constitution of South Carolina of 1895 (which was adopted and put into effect by a constitutional convention without a vote of the people adopting it), as well as the election laws adopted or passed in accordance with it, contain educational and property qualifications.

It is claimed that under the South Carolina constitution of 1895 and the election laws in force under it, many citizens are deprived of the right to vote in said State who were and would be entitled to vote by the constitution of 1868, referred to in the reconstruction act of June 25, 1868. The South Carolina constitution of 1895 and the election laws under it are therefore claimed to be in direct conflict with the reconstruction act of June 25, 1868, readmitting South Carolina to representation in Congress upon the conditions therein named as "fundamental conditions."

Contestant claims that if the citizens of the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina who could have voted under the terms of the constitution of 1868 had been permitted to vote, he would have been elected, and he asserts that many thousands of colored voters in the congressional district entitled to vote under the constitution of 1868 were deprived of the right to vote under the educational and property qualifications of the constitution of 1895.

It is very plain that contestant was not elected, but counsel for contestant insists that if contestant was not elected then no election was held, and that it is the duty of Congress to declare that no valid election was held in South Carolina for Members of the Fifty-eighth Congress, and therefore to unseat the contestee.

It would seem that if no valid election was held in the Seventh Congressional district of South Carolina in November, 1902, and if the House of Representatives, holding this view, should declare the seat from that district vacant, then no election could be held to fill the vacancy until after the South Carolina constitution of 1895 and the election laws under it had been changed. This would necessarily involve an entire lack of representation from the district for a considerable period of time.

If the Seventh district of South Carolina were the only district involved, it might be proper for the Committee on Elections, as well as the House itself, to put on record its opinion in the case and to declare elected or not elected, as that opinion might run, the contestee. But the reconstruction acts were not confined to South Carolina. Practically the same "fundamental conditions" are found in the acts readmitting Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas to representation in Congress. Most of these States have adopted new constitutions, said to be in conflict with the terms and provisions of the reconstruction acts readmitting them to representation in Congress.

It follows, therefore, quite logically that if the House should unseat the contestee on the ground that no valid election was held, or could be held, in his district under the present constitution and election laws of South Carolina, a similar construction would require the House, in the case of contest, to unseat all of the Members from South Carolina and from most of the other Southern States, and that new elections could not be held to fill the vacancies until the respective constitutions of these States had been changed so as to comply with the reconstruction acts.

The question of the constitutionality and validity of the constitution and election laws of South Carolina, therefore, in its effect upon the membership of this House is one of far-reaching importance. It involves in its outcome the right of a very large number of the Members of the House to their seats; but the decision of this House against the contestee in this case would have no binding force in South Carolina except in this particular case. It probably would not be followed or obeyed by the State of South Carolina except in this particular case.

However desirable it may be for a legislative body to retain control of the decision as to the election and qualification of its members, it is quite certain that a legislative body is not the ideal body to pass judicially upon the constitutionality of the enactments of other bodies. We have in this country a proper forum for the decision of constitutional and other judicial questions. If any citizen of South Carolina who was entitled to vote under the constitution of that State of 1868 is now deprived by the provisions of the present constitution from voting, he has the right to tender himself for registration and for voting, and in case his right is denied, to bring suit in a proper court for the purpose of enforcing his right or recovering damages for its denial.

That suit can be carried by him, if necessary, to the Supreme Court of the United States. If the United States Supreme Court shall declare in such case that the "fundamental conditions" in the reconstruction acts were valid and constitutional and that the State constitutions are in violation of those acts, and hence invalid and unconstitutional, every State will be compelled to immediately bow in submission to the decision. The decision of the Supreme Court would be binding and would be a positive declaration of the law of the land, which could not be denied or challenged.

On the contrary, the decision of the House of Representatives upon this grave judicial question would not be considered as binding or effective in any case except the one acted upon or as a precedent for future action in the House itself.

A majority of the Committee on Elections No. 1 doubt the propriety in any event of denying these Southern States representation in the House of Representatives pending a final settlement of the whole question in proper proceedings by the Supreme Court of the United States. Some of the members of the committee believe the "fundamental conditions" set forth in the reconstruction acts to be valid and the constitutions and election laws of these States to be in conflict with such conditions, and hence to be invalid.

Some of the members of the committee believe the "fundamental conditions" set forth in the reconstruction acts to be invalid, and the constitutions and election laws of the States claimed to be in conflict with such conditions to be valid. Some members of the committee have formed no opinion and express no belief upon the subject.

Your Committee on Elections No. 1 therefore respectfully recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—KAHN V. LIVERNASH, FOURTH DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. MANN. I desire in behalf of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GAINES], a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1, to present the report of that committee in the case of Kahn v. Livernash and ask for immediate consideration of the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Julius Kahn was not elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of California, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That Edward J. Livernash was elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Fourth Congressional district of California, and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The resolutions were agreed to.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—MOODY V. GUDGER, TENTH DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. YOUNG], a member of the Committee on Elections No. 1, be recognized to present a report from that committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I present a report from the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the contested-election case of James M. Moody v. James M. Gudger, jr., from the Tenth district of North Carolina. I ask to have the report printed, and I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That James M. Moody was not elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of North Carolina.

Resolved, That James M. Gudger, jr., was elected a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress from the Tenth Congressional district of North Carolina, and is entitled to retain his seat therein.

The resolutions were agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, this day, under the rules of the House, belongs to the Committee on War Claims for the consideration of its business, and I would like to ask unanimous consent——

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MAHON. The Committee on War Claims do not want to interfere with this bill, which is a big appropriation bill, and as chairman of the Committee on War Claims I would ask that the day following the passage of this bill be given to the Committee on War Claims for the consideration of its business, instead of to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman will not ask that now, as I shall have to object, until we can see how the business of the House progresses.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to make a short statement. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York will not object. This committee has had but two and a half hours for the consideration of bills reported from it this Congress. I hope he will not press us to fight against appropriation bills; but under the rules of the House we are entitled to this day. I hope the gentleman will not want to make us fight for our time here. I believe that if we were forced to fight we can knock the Committee on Appropriations out, but we are willing to wait until this bill is out of the road, and I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. SULZER. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. MAHON. To fix a day when the Committee on War Claims shall have its business considered instead of to-day.

Mr. PAYNE. I will confer with the gentleman later about that. I can not withdraw my objection now. I think probably we will be able to arrange it satisfactorily to the gentleman later.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13521.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

Clerks in charge of stations, 1,300, at $100 each, $130,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of lines 20 and 21 the words "one thousand three hundred, at" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at a rate of compensation not to exceed;" so that the item will read: "Clerks in charge of stations, at a rate of compensation not to exceed $100 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 10, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "one thousand three hundred, at" and insert in lieu thereof the words "at a rate of compensation not to exceed."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For temporary clerk hire, $150,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, allow postmasters at first-class offices to employ temporary clerks at the rate of 25 cents an hour during the rush or busy hours of the day.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 3, after the word "hire," insert the words "at first and second class post-offices."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order to the amendment just offered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let us have some explanation of the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment is to add, after the word "hire," in line 3, page 11, the words "at first and second class post-offices." I will say to the committee that the purpose is to limit directly the expenditure of this temporary clerk hire to employment of temporary clerks at first and second class post-offices. That is evidently the intention of the provision, but I sought to make it more definite.

Mr. MANN. That does not affect separating.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, having been under a misapprehension as to the purpose of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

Insert as a new paragraph after line 7:

"For allowance to third-class post-offices, where the salary of the postmaster exceeds $1,500 per annum, to cover cost of clerical services, $500,000: Provided, That no allowance in excess of $400 per annum shall be made to any one office."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the amendment comes in as a new paragraph, following line 7 on page 11, immediately after the provision for clerk hire and immediately preceding the appropriation for separating mail.

Mr. Chairman, I frankly confess the point of order, if it shall be insisted on, will apply, and I wish to state that I am offering this amendment in my individual capacity.

Mr. BARTLETT. Before you proceed to discuss it, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to know whether or not the amendment is a committee amendment or an individual amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have just stated that I offered it in my individual capacity and not as a committee amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not hear that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to explain it. The point is just this, if Members will give their attention: I seek in this amendment to afford some relief in third-class offices by way of allowance for clerical service where there is at present no provision of law.

There is no law which authorizes the employment of clerks in third-class offices. Until very recently the effort to obtain relief for post-offices of the third class by pay of clerical hire encouraged a draft upon the item for separation of mails, an appropriation which clearly limits that expenditure to the offices where mail is separated for transit to other offices by way of star routes. The great burden which in recent years has been imposed upon offices of the third class has been occasioned in my individual judgment by the——

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleague a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will.

Mr. FINLEY. The very next item there is separating mails at third and fourth class post-offices. Now, I ask my friend the chairman of the Post-Office Committee if it would not be well to leave that matter until that paragraph is reached, as there are other amendments which cover the proposition to provide clerical help at third-class post-offices, so we can bring the matter squarely up.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, the matter can be brought squarely up by offering any other amendment as a substitute for the amendment I have offered.

Mr. FINLEY. I am sure of that, but I wished to wait——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Of course, I am not advised this will interfere in any way, and that matter is for the committee to determine.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield for a question.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is there any provision allowing clerk hire to third-class postmasters?

Mr. OVERSTREET. None at all; and if my friend had given attention to what I was saying he would have understood I was seeking by this amendment to afford that very relief.

Mr. PEARRE. May I ask my friend if there is an allowance made under existing law in case a third-class post-office is a distributing office?

Mr. OVERSTREET. A separating office—oh, yes.

Mr. HINSHAW and Mr. CRUMPACKER rose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HINSHAW. Why would it not be a better proposition to grade the allowances for clerk hire, commencing at a salary of $1,000 or $1,100, say, giving a postmaster receiving a salary of $1,100, $100 clerk hire; one receiving $1,200 or $1,300, $200 clerk hire; one receiving $1,400, $300 clerk hire; one receiving $1,500, $400 clerk hire, and so on up in that way, or by a lesser amount, as suggested, instead of the amendment you proposed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I think if the gentleman will hear my explanation he would understand at least my version of that proposition. That is one way, and I will say in answering him that that provision takes too much money. Second, it makes an arbitrary distribution without any information as to the necessities at those various points. Now, I yield to my colleague from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am in sympathy with the proposition to provide clerk hire for third-class postmasters if it can be arranged on an equitable basis, but I hope the gentleman will explain——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will be very glad to explain if the committee will permit me.

Mr. CRUMPACKER (continuing). This thought, whether this aspect of the question, whether this proposition, vests the whole proposition in the Post-Office Department or whether it contemplates any fixed system by which these amounts shall be made.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It does not contemplate any fixed system, for the obvious reason that we have not the information which ought to be had in order to make a regular distribution of the fixed allowances. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I may be permitted to proceed for a brief period, I will endeavor to explain my theory of it. I was upon the point of saying that the heavy burden which, in my judgment, has fallen upon the third-class post-offices, which prompts the desire for allowance for clerical services, grows almost entirely from the extension of the rural free delivery.

The rural free-delivery extension has not brought by way of increased business to the offices from which the routes emanate a compensation equal, in my judgment, to the increased burdens which fall upon those several offices. It is, however, reasonably accurate to say that in a large number of instances where this burden does fall there are a number of routes emanating from one office (and when I say a number, I mean in excess of half a dozen routes) where there is not much increased burden necessitating an allowance for clerical hire, in my judgment, at such offices; but for a very few number of routes emanating from them (and by a few I mean under half a dozen), where the number reaches eight, ten, or twelve, in some instances more, there is an increased burden incident to the extension of the rural free-delivery service that is not equalized by the increased compensation which follows from the enlargement of the revenue territory of the particular office.

It is apparent, therefore, that the larger number of rural routes emanating from third-class offices are almost exclusively from the offices where the compensation to the postmaster is in excess of $1,500. There are in round numbers 1,250 offices of the third class above the $1,500 grade. This $500,000 allowance for clerk hire to these offices would afford an average of $400 to the office, providing the labor incident to the extension of the service justified that much of an allowance.

At this point let me call the attention of my colleague [Mr. CRUMPACKER] to his inquiry relative to the fixed compensation to offices, and at the same time answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] upon the same point, that it is quite apparent that it is not without reason to expect many offices of the $1,600 grade may have a larger number of rural routes emanating from them than offices of the $1,900 grade; and this may be different in other localities. Their proximity to a rural community for the use of the service may have a good deal to do with it.

Therefore the $1,600 office might have a stronger claim for clerical allowance on account of the extension of rural service than the $1,900 office would have.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that there may be instances below the $1,600 grade where they might have a just claim. But we can not do all of this at once. The rural service is only in its second year of permanency. There is no stronger illustration of growth in any service in the history of the Government than the rural service. It is so rapid we can scarcely tell how soon it will double in extent and in expenditure; but meeting this situation at the very threshold of this growth, we feel warranted, at least I do, in making some reasonable provision and meeting the situation which many Members appreciate exists in many different parts of the country.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The gentleman does not want to be understoood, if his amendment is adopted, that in construing the law for the distribution of this money it shall be based on the rural free-delivery service, because there are many other questions entering into it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all. I was giving that as the strongest reason for it.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The gentleman's reason is very good, but I do not agree with him that it is the strongest reason.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; there are other reasons.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Has the chairman of the committee discovered any figures or given any consideration to the question as to the average cost of clerk hire in all the post-offices in the country above the $1,500 grade?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Based on separating service?

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. What is the average clerk hire in the offices abeve that grade?

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is no clerk hire except that based on separating service, and that is about $300; but, understand me, if any one of the post-offices above the $1,500 grade would be entitled to an allowance for clerk hire based on separating service it would be entitled to it notwithstanding this amendment, and this amendment would be additional to that.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. It limits it to $400?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it limits it to other than separating service or unusual business. I will say to the committee that it is my purpose to offer an amendment at the proper time carrying a limited appropriation for "unusual business." Members will appreciate that it is quite probable that an office of this class may have an unusual condition, like the frequent delivery of mail by reason of many trains passing the town where the office is located or by reason of unseemly and unsatisfactory hours of the arrival of these mails. That I regard as unusual business.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will.

Mr. HINSHAW. I think the gentleman stated that there were 1,250 offices above the $1,500 grade in the third-class offices. How many are below, down to $1,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. About 2,300.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Very well.

Mr. BURLESON. I did not hear distinctly the reading of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, but, as I understand it, it provides for clerk hire in the third-class offices.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Above the $1,500 grade.

Mr. BURLESON. Does the gentleman attempt to fix any rule or standard by which this appropriation is to be disbursed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Only an upset sum, that they can not allow in any case above $400. If we had the information whereby we could fix a schedule it would be better, but we have not that information. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think he will get a fuller answer to the question if he will permit me to proceed upon what I was calling the attention of the committee to, and that is this: There may occur at one office three different conditions which might permit of an allowance for each of the separate conditions. One is the separating of mail or the distributing of mail in transit to star-route service. Another is unusual business conditions. Under the law of to-day unusual business may be the basis for an allowance. In the third place, there may be instances of unusual separating, the distributing of mail—one of the unusual conditions as the Department construes "unusual" business to mean.

Therefore, if an office should have the separating of mail for star service which would entitle it to, say, $200 under a regulation of the Department, even if that should be maintained as it is now, then, if there were frequent arrivals and departures of mail trains, or at hours which were unsatisfactory to ordinary business practice, that would be regarded as an "unusual" condition because it does not obtain generally. Then, by reason of other burdens, like the rural-delivery service, where a large number of routes emanate from the same office, it would be met by this proposed amendment. It might, therefore, be possible for the office to receive, say, $200 based upon the separating of mail, $50 or $100 based upon the "unusual" conditions, and such an allowance out of the appropriation provided for in this amendment, not exceeding $400, for any or all other conditions which might be found to exist at that office.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The Department, as I understand, does not agree with the chairman of the committee in the definition of "unusual business."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not saying that.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. There is a situation, for instance, in my district such as the gentleman describes, where there are frequent arrivals and departures of trains. The postmaster asks for an allowance for clerk hire on the basis of unusual business, but the law officer of the Post-Office Department decided that that situation did not come under the interpretation of "unusual business," and therefore reduced the allowance which had been previously made.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is to meet just that kind of a situation that I offer this amendment, because if the situation at that office to which my colleague calls our attention is one which does not come within the construction of the Department as to "unusual" business—is one which does not meet the requirement of law for separating purposes—it would come within this provision and relief would be afforded.

Mr. PEARRE and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield first to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PEARRE].

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Chairman, then, if I understand the gentleman from Indiana correctly, this amendment of his does not interfere with allowances for clerk hire at distributing offices?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all.

Mr. PEARRE. Nor in offices where unusual business is done?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No.

Mr. PEARRE. But that this supplements those two cases and allows in case of third-class post-offices an additional allowance, if the conditions be met, of $400.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not to exceed that.

Mr. PEARRE. I will ask the gentleman whether in considering this amendment he has also considered the recommendation made by the First Assistant Postmaster-General in his report in regard to allowance for clerk hire at first-class post-offices?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have; but my criticism of that is, first, that you can not well distribute clerks to every office without having fuller information than we now have. My second criticism is that a $100 clerk can not be secured when he is expected to work a year, and therefore the allowance of $100 for a clerk who must sign a voucher under oath, if required, testifying that he has served a year to entitle him to that $100 is inadequate and would not be a situation which would be practical. My third criticism is that there are a large number of people who contend that a clerk designated as such should be given a higher allowance than, say, one, two, three, or even four hundred dollars. The proposition the gentleman now suggests would come in conflict with the views of those people.

Mr. PEARRE. I think, in view of the explanation of the operation of this amendment, as made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], the plan that he suggests in the amendment, supplemented by the allowance of clerk hire in distributing offices and also those offices where unusual business is done, is preferable to the plan suggested by the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

I would also say in this connection, if the gentleman will permit me—somewhat for the information of the other gentleman from Indiana—that I had a case of the same character as that to which the gentleman refers, where the decision of the Department has been entirely different. I refer to the case at Rockville, about 14 miles from Washington, where numerous trains and numerous star routes coming into the town create unusual conditions and unusual business. In that case the First Assistant Postmaster-General had determined since the 1st of January that the allowance, which would appear to be made under the secret regulation of which we have heard so much, being only $360, was not sufficient, and that an additional allowance could be made under that section of the statute which makes allowance for unusual business; and under that provision, although the regulation would only permit him to allow $360, yet, taking advantage of that regulation and that act, he has increased the allowance since January 1 to $600.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. In violation of the regulation?

Mr. PEARRE. No; not in violation of the regulation, but in compliance with the statute which allows increased clerk hire where there are unusual business and unusual conditions.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. That is what he ruled me out on.

Mr. PEARRE. He ruled me in on that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] whether the effect of this amendment is not practically to increase the salary of various third-class postmasters?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it is not. There might be a construction which would have that effect, because it might relieve the postmaster from some expense which he now pays.

Mr. MANN. That is what I mean.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But the purport of it is that it leaves the clerk hire at these offices where it is under existing law and regulations.

Mr. MANN. Would not the practical effect be to increase salaries?

Mr. OVERSTREET. With this distinction, which the gentleman will appreciate, that where there is the limitation not in excess of $400 for distribution an examination into the requirements of the office would first be made to determine whether the compensation would be $400 or how much less. If we knew the exact condition in each of 1,250 offices, then it would be entirely proper and more practicable to fix definitely the amount for each office.

Mr. MANN. Take the case of a third-class postmaster now receiving $1,500 a year. He is required under the law to attend to the duties of his office or hire somebody to do so. As I understand the gentleman, this would authorize him to be paid $2,000 a year.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Provided the conditions justified it.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is a matter of opinion. So that the gentleman, while willing to increase the salaries of third-class postmasters who receive $1,500, did not take the same view yesterday in regard to clerks receiving the same salary.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have nothing to retract from my statement of yesterday.

Mr. MANN. And I have nothing to retract from the position I then took.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. BURLESON. I am in accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Post-Office Committee, and shall support his amendment, but I desire an expression from him as to an amendment which I propose to offer as a proviso to the next item of the pending bill, a proviso which I think ought also to be added to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana at this time. The proposed amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish the rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of the same.

In the event this amendment is adopted every third-class postmaster will then receive notice of the rules—regulations controlling the disbursement of the appropriation—will be furnished with information which will enable him to determine exactly what he is entitled to receive from this appropriation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Without expressing an opinion of approval of the proposed amendment, permit me to say that conditions will vary at different offices. There may be at one office conditions upon which to base the allowance, while the same conditions may not exist at another office. I think the gentleman from Texas would find it very difficult—I am sure I should—to fix a definite rule which would enable anyone to say in advance what proportion of the allowance would go to a certain office under certain conditions.

Mr. SIBLEY. Then you are leaving this matter entirely to the discretion of the Department; and, therefore, if we believed as representatives of our constituencies that some postmaster in our Congressional district was not receiving the compensation to which he was entitled, we should be guilty of an infraction of the law or should become the subjects of condemnation and reproach if we should suggest that injustice was being done at that point. I prefer that the gentleman from Indiana should modify his amendment in accordance with that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. I believe there ought to be some definite basis, so that we may know where our rights begin and where they stop; and that basis should be fixed by the law of Congress, rather than by the law of a bureau.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. SIBLEY. I will.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think we should be neglecting our duty if we did not go and present to the Department the claims of the postmasters in our districts?

Mr. SIBLEY. I should. I do not know how it is in the State of New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Do you not think so?

Mr. SIBLEY. I conceive it as much my duty to represent my constituency before the Executive Departments of this Government as it is to stand in my place and record my opinion or my vote on pending measures before this body.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman entirely right. Now, if the gentleman will allow me to say one word more——

Mr. SIBLEY. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I see this practical difficulty in the experience which I have had in trying to adjust the clerk hire of these postmasters in my district with the Department; I have always found that the postmaster paid out of his own pocket largely in excess of any allowance that was ever made by the Department. Some of them pay more and some less, but all pay in excess of the departmental allowance. It seems to me that it will be impossible for this committee or for the House to grade the proper amount that should be paid to each postmaster for clerk hire by a hard-and-fast rule, according to salary or by any other rule, unless they can find out just what these postmasters are now paying out and what they have to pay out of their own pockets for clerk hire.

Mr. SIBLEY. We do that with first-class offices and second-class offices. Why can we not do it just as fairly with third-class offices?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We could if we had the same degree of information.

Mr. SIBLEY. We will find out, will we not, if we have this rule?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was going to say I am not antagonizing the amendment of the gentleman from Texas. I simply stated that I did not want at that juncture to express my approval or disapproval of it. I see some justice in it, but we are confronted now with the situation that we do not have that information, and it is possible——

Mr. SIBLEY. Where can we get it otherwise?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will yield for a second, I would like to inquire what information the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] has that there is a rule or regulation about allowances in first and second class offices? That is a new proposition to me, and I have been looking up this subject for a good many years.

Mr. SIBLEY. Perhaps I was in error, and I am always willing to be corrected by my friend from Illinois; but I think that the compensation of the postmaster in my city is fixed according to the amount of business transacted in that office, and I think the compensation of fourth-class postmasters is fixed in the same way.

Mr. MANN. Well, that is not the case in any first-class office, of course.

Mr. SIBLEY. Perhaps I should have said second class.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is a point of order pending against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that there is a point of order reserved by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether he intends to press his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Indiana will permit, I believe I shall be obliged to press the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then where does the postmaster get anything out of this? If the point of order is to be pressed, the postmaster will be left in the same position in which he was heretofore, and will have to pay the clerk hire out of his own pocket.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was greatly in hopes, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman would not press the point of order. I believe this is a meritorious situation, and that the amendment is an endeavor in a proper way to reach the relief that is needed.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. And we all feel the same way.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the point is going to be pressed, I think it unfair to take the time of the committee further.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair wishes me to, I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Page 11, insert after line 7:

"For allowance to third-class post-offices where the salary of the postmaster exceeds $1,500 per annum, to cover cost of clerical services, $500,000, Provided, That no allowance in excess of $400 per annum shall be made to any one office."

The CHAIRMAN. Against this amendment the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] raises the point of order. The amendment is clearly new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I offer the following amendment.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to offer an amendment, if the point of order is to be insisted upon, to strike it all out. If we can not get any concession, we may as well strike it all out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

"For clerk hire in third-class post-offices, at the following rates: Where the annual salary of the postmaster is $1,000 or $1, 00, $100 for clerk hire; where the salary is $1,200 or $1,300, $200 for clerk hire; where the salary is $1,400 or $1,500, $300 for clerk hire; where the salary is $1,600 or $1,700, $400 for clerk hire; and where the salary is $1,800 or $1,900, $500 for clerk hire."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, unless there is some special reason for it.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. I trust the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I will not make the point of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin has reserved it. I do not care to hear an hour's discussion.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Just a brief word of explanation. The entire criticism which has been made of Members in reference to clerk hire is due to the fact that the Department has had discretion in the disposal of a certain amount of money for this purpose. This paragraph, offered as an amendment, is for the purpose of making definite provision by law for a reasonable amount for clerk hire. The total cost of this provision, according to the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, will be $1,129,825. It seems to me to be in the interest of fair play and of good service. It seems to me a wise and proper expenditure of public money, and in that spirit I offer the amendment.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The gentleman says, "reasonable amount for clerk hire." Where the salary is $1,000, and $100 is allowed for clerk hire, does the gentleman think that is a "reasonable amount" for a year for clerk hire?

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. It is better than none. The point of this is that the clerk hire is graded in accordance with the salary of the postmaster, which, all things considered, seems to be the best test of the business done at the office and its requirements for clerical assistance.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But as a matter of fact that legislation contemplates that the postmaster must pay clerk hire out of his salary.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. That is the case now. In my own district the third-class postmasters now pay more than $9,000 for clerk hire, $8,000 in excess of the amount they receive, a sum equal to 27 per cent of the total salaries of the offices. This would give them nearly $6,000 for clerk hire, about two-thirds of the amount they actually pay, so that they would not be quite so bad off as they are now.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. They will get the commendation of the Post-Office Department for that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, on the ground that the amendment contains new legislation, and it is not in order upon a general appropriation bill. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I said I would move it, but if the gentlemen pretend to override the judgment of the committee upon every one of these things, which involves the real trouble that we are all under in regard to this Bristow report—if they want to rush headlong to defeat the bill itself—I shall take no other step until voting time comes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to explain the position that I have taken in making the point of order against the last two amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he proceed to explain his position on insisting on the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont and Mr. MILLER. I object.

Mr. MANN. I desire to raise the point of order on this whole proceeding. The paragraph was passed not subject to amendment; a new paragraph was proposed to be inserted by amendment, and the paragraph now moved to be stricken out is passed upon.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. OVERSTREET. As a new paragraph, following line 7.

Insert as a new paragraph, following line 7, page 11:

"For unusual business accruing at third and fourth class post-offices, $500,000."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am quite prepared to discuss the point of order, and I think we may just as well determine it now. If it is subject to the point of order, I do not wish to encroach upon the time of the House. I think if I may be permitted to make a statement it will be seen that the point of order will not properly lie.

Mr. MANN. Very likely; you may be right.

Mr. OVERSTREET. To save time, let me call the gentleman's attention——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, if that is the purpose and desire of the gentleman. I do not pretend to say that I know whether it is covered by existing law or not. There are plenty of provisions in the postal laws that I never heard of and many, I think, that the Post-Office Department never heard of, but there is no provision in any appropriation bill that we have covering this item, and under an ordinary appropriation bill it would be subject to the point of order. I do not know whether it is or not; but if it is subject to the point of order, I desire to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to section 309 of the postal laws and regulations, which is section 3863 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and this section reads as follows:

Whenever unusual business accrues at any post-office the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical service.

That has been the law for a number of years, notwithstanding in recent years there has been no appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will state that I am satisfied upon the gentleman's statement that the point of order will not lie, and I do not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to renew the point of order which has been withdrawn.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am ready for the Chair to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish to discuss the amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Briefly, Mr. Chairman, and I will ask not to be interrupted because I do not wish to take up so much time. While this law has been on the statute books for some years, there has not been from year to year in the past several years—I do not recollect how many—a specific appropriation under that law. I think that a considerable portion of the difficulties in reaching situations for clerical service at third-class offices which obtained in the Post-Office Department in recent years has been due to a lack of appropriations which would meet these conditions. In the absence of appropriations for "unusual business" the Post-Office Department was confronted with the situation that it had authority of law abundant, but had not the money appropriated to meet the conditions.

The necessities of various situations necessarily and properly considered by the Department perhaps ripened into a construction of appropriations which resulted in drafts upon other appropriations to meet honest and proper conditions which would not have been made had appropriations under unusual business or for specific clerk-hire allowance under those third-class offices been direct by law. I still believe that my former amendment was the better amendment. I believe that it would be better to make a direct appropriation for clerk-hire allowance under conditions which might be ascertained by investigation rather than to appropriate for "unusual business," and my reason is that it is difficult to determine what "unusual business" may be. I think the construction of that expression is susceptible of greater elasticity than the construction of an appropriation to meet conditions for clerical service.

Mr. GRIGGS and Mr. HINSHAW rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. GRIGGS. I noticed that the gentleman had concluded, and I rose to take the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman explain how this appropriation benefits the third-class postmasters under the construction of unusual business put upon it by the Post-Office Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I suggested before the gentleman made the inquiry that I thought the former amendment would be far better——

Mr. HINSHAW. So do I.

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). But, it having been stricken out on the point of order, I now do what I believe to be the next best thing. Now, I hope that before the legislation is concluded some satisfactory and reasonable arrangement may properly be made.

I will now yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has the Chair ruled upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has overruled the point of order.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman from Iowa withhold just a moment, because I have yielded to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. GRIGGS. I heard the statement made here yesterday that one of the Attorneys-General of the Post-Office Department had made a ruling as to what unusual business was. Can the gentleman from Indiana give me that ruling?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have that ruling before me, and will read it if the gentleman wishes.

Mr. GRIGGS. Does it cover clerk hire and allowance in third-class post-offices?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it has only reference to the statute that I have just read authorizing the payment for unusual business. It does not deal with the question of clerk hire, except it says at the end of the decision that the item for temporary clerk hire can be drawn upon to meet an unusual situation. Does the gentleman care for anything further?

Mr. GRIGGS. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It says that the item for separating can not be drawn upon.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It says that the item for separating can not be drawn upon, which emphasizes, in my judgment, the fact that some equitable arrangement must be had to meet the situation.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, will not the gentleman accept this amendment to his amendment?

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish the rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of the same.

The Department can then form any number of rules to meet the various cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now, if the gentleman from Texas will withhold and let me offer my amendment——

Mr. BURLESON. But I prepared my amendment and offered it some time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of the same."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, before we are asked to vote on that resolution, may we not hear the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Iowa?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the parliamentary situation. An amendment was offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and to that an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I ask unanimous consent that we hear the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa may be read for the information of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That whenever the business of a post-office can not be performed by one person, the business shall be deemed to be unusual business within the meaning of this act.

Mr. MANN. I may state, Mr. Chairman, that whenever that comes before the House I shall make the point of order on it.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman can make the point of order now if he has any.

Mr. MANN. It is not now before the House.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that my amendment may be reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas will be reported again.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That whenever the business of a post-office can not be performed by one person the business of said office shall be deemed to be unusual business under the provisions of this act.

Mr. MANN. To that, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order,

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the point of order?

Mr. MANN. It is clearly subject to a point of order in that it is legislation and not a limitation upon the appropriation, but direct legislation.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me very clearly that it is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Iowa on that question.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, we have already authorized payment of sums for clerk hire for unusual business. Now, this simply determines what unusual business shall be. The Chair has held that an amendment providing for these payments for this unusual business is not subject to a point of order. This is simply explanatory; it is simply a limitation to aid in determining what is unusual business.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is a legislative interpretation of the act itself.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it isn't necessary for me to explain to the gentleman from Iowa that his amendment is subject to a point of order, because the gentleman knows it better than I do.

Mr. HEPBURN. We will see whether the Chair knows it or not. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. If this amendment is in order, it is in order under section 3863 of the Revised Statutes, which the Chair will read:

SEC. 3863. Whenever unusual business accrues at any post-office, the Postmaster-General shall make a special order allowing reasonable compensation for clerical service, and a proportionate increase of salary to the postmaster during the time of such extraordinary business.

The paragraph very clearly vests in the Postmaster-General a complete and absolute discretion to determine when the business is "unusual," when the unusual character begins, and when it terminates. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] in the opinion of the Chair determines by law what that unusual business is, and therefore it takes away from the Postmaster-General a discretion vested in him by this statute. The Chair, therefore, is constrained to sustain the point of order on the ground that it changes existing law which gives the Postmaster-General absolute discretion. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that amendment. It seems to me that we have heard pretty extensively from the third-class postmaster who has to pay a portion of his salary out to clerks We ought to consider the question, at least in some respects, from the standpoint of the Government, which pays the salary. Now, I desire to call to the attention of the gentlemen of this House—although I recognize that the sentiment of the majority on both sides of the Chamber is heartily in favor of any amendment that will provide for those salaries—to the fact that when we fixed the provision under which the allowance is made to third-class postmasters it was done with the intention that they should pay a portion of that allowance out for clerk hire, and it was put high enough, as the Congress at that time thought, and as I believe is still true in the vast majority of cases, to permit him to take from his salary sufficient to provide the clerk hire that was necessary and still leave him the best-paid salaried man in the community where the office was located.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Missouri if that same thing was done when the salary was fixed for the first and second class postmasters?

Mr. COWHERD. The first and second class postmasters are paid a fixed salary. The third-class postmaster is not paid a fixed salary. His salary is proportioned to the business done in the office, and as the town grows and the business increases, the salary increases. When the town gets to a place where it needs more men in the office than the amount allowed will provide for in the ordinary course of business, it develops into a second-class office and clerks are allowed. Now, mind you, I do not say that there are not third-class offices which might prove exceptions to the general rule.

In nearly every third-class office, after it begins to pay as high as $1,400 or $1,500, a portion of the salary goes to pay clerk hire, but in many cases the following are the facts: The postmaster can attend to the business almost entirely himself. Perhaps he will hire a boy to assist him, or some man will have some other business connected with the building in which the office is located—say a news stand in front of the building—and he will devote a part of his time to attending to the mail. The fact of the business is, gentlemen, that when you find a man whose salary is about sixteen or seventeen hundred dollars as postmaster in a town of from 1,500 to 2,000 people, I assert he can still pay from $400 to $500 of that salary out for assistance to do his business and remain practically the best salaried man in that community—I mean a man who has nothing invested in the business, who is drawing a salary for his work. I have a third-class office in my district. I know what the salary of the postmaster is. I know just exactly what he pays out for clerk hire. I know what the salaries of the cashiers of the banks are.

I know what the salary is, for instance, of the man who has charge of all the railroad business there, and it is a very important shipping point. And I know that that postmaster gets a better salary than any of these other men. I venture to say that he gets a better salary than any salaried man in that community. There may be some individual cases of hardship. It is quite possible there are, but I think it is time some one said something for the benefit of the revenues and for the benefit of the Government, and that all this talk about the hardship imposed upon the poor postmaster is not all of it true; in some instances it may be true, but in the vast majority of cases the allowance made under the law for that third-class postmaster was made under the intention and is sufficient for him to provide clerk hire for the office.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri if this condition can not be corrected? I have in my district a post-office where the postmaster has been getting $1,800 a year, a third-class post-office, and no clerk hire. Just a short time ago this became a second-class post-office, where the postmaster gets $2,000 a year and $2,100 clerk hire.

Mr. COWHERD. That is a distinct evil——

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I have several offices of this kind in my district.

Mr. COWHERD. I will say to the gentleman, in my opinion, and that evil consists in this: There is too great a step from the third-class office, with a salary of $1,900 and no allowance for clerk hire, to the second-class office, where an assistant postmaster is allowed and heretofore has been allowed at $1,000 a year, and the Department usually allows the clerk hire for those offices besides. We attempted, some of us, particularly the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GRIGGS], in the committee to cut off the allowance for clerk hire in those offices until the office reached the free-delivery stage, and the committee has reported in this bill a provision, as I remember it, that cuts down the pay of the assistant postmaster. It is possible that there ought to be an allowance to third-class offices after they reach the stage of about $1,800, because there the work begins to be very much heavier. I believe there is too large an allowance paid to the office which has just been created into a second-class office.

But I submit, gentlemen—and this was all I took the floor to say—that you ought to remember in connection with this item about third-class postmasters that when the salary of these officers was fixed at this sum it was thought to be sufficient to enable men to pay out a portion of it for clerk hire.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Before the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] takes his seat, will he allow me one question?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Assuming now, without argument, that the statements of the gentleman from Missouri are true, would it not be better public policy in our appropriations to fix definitely the salary of a clerk, to the end that the Government may then adjust the salary of the postmaster, giving his salary as one item and that of the clerk as another? Would not that be a better arrangement of the matter than under the present conditions?

Mr. COWHERD. I think the gentleman on reflection would not want third-class postmasters put on a definite salary. I think he will agree that the present provision allowing them commissions on sales of stamps, etc., is a better method of compensation. It regulates the salary in accordance with the work of the office, increasing or diminishing as the work increases or diminishes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to dispute one of the statements made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] that third-class postmasters are the best-salaried men in their localities. I do not believe that the gentleman has been accurately informed on this subject. On the contrary, I believe it to be true that the great majority of the third-class postmasters in the United States receive less compensation than do the letter carriers in the cities. [Applause.] No one man, in my judgment, can perform or can nearly perform the duties of a third-class postmaster when the business approximates the amount that will soon make it a second-class post-office.

Mr. Chairman, second-class post-offices are in many instances allowed $2,000 or more for clerk hire when the salary is but $2,000. Yet in a third-class office when the salary of the postmaster is $1,900, with almost the same amount of labor, only $240, or $300 at most, may be allowed him under the regulations.

I submit the report of the Postmaster-General shows that the gentleman from Missouri can scarcely be correct.

I have before me a tabulated statement of the gross receipts and expenses, net revenue, etc., of the Post-Office Department. I find that at one office where the salary is $2,400 there is an allowance of $4,863 for clerk hire—twice the amount of the salary of the postmaster; and the salary is only $500 more and the labor, I undertake to say, proportionately more than they might be in a third-class office, where $240 would be allowed. I have a number of similar instances here. In another second-class office, where the salary is $2,500, $3,595 is allowed for clerk hire. In another office, where the salary is $2,300, $2,500 is allowed for clerk hire. At another office, where the salary is $2,400, $2,900 is allowed for clerk hire.

The Post-Office Department recognizes the fact, I undertake to say, in those allowances that in the case of the $1,900 office the salary must be largely absorbed by the payment of clerk hire.

I notice that the opposition in this case comes from gentlemen from large cities, where they have but little of this service. The amiable gentleman from Chicago wants economy. Ah, but he wants economy at somebody else's expense, not at the expense of his own office.

Mr. MANN. He wants justice, which he can not get at the Department.

Mr. HEPBURN. Has there been a word said by any one of these economical gentlemen in favor of cutting down the enormous allowances for first and second class offices? Here is an aggregate of $20,000,000 for clerk hire in first and second class offices.

Five hundred thousand dollars proposed for clerk hire in third and fourth class offices where 52 per cent of the United States have their postal accommodations, while $20,000,000 is allowed to the offices where 48 per cent of the people have their accommodations, and not a word of criticism, not a word about economy, by any one of these economical gentlemen from the large cities. [Applause.] You have got it all to yourselves; you are content, at least for the present. You have got the high-priced offices. These clerks that are to have $2,400, these high-priced clerks, inspectors, stampers, and all of that class, the bill grades them from the highest sum down to the low ones. You manage to have all of the high-priced men in your localities, and yet you prate about economy. You are disinterested American citizens just now, when you are trying to make the other fellow economize. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "five hundred thousand" and to insert "one million five hundred thousand."

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, will he yield for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. You began your remarks by saying that I was mistaken——

Mr. HEPBURN. I know you are, with regard to the third-class offices in my district.

Mr. COWHERD. When I said the salary of the postmaster is equal to or better than that of any other salaried man in the community where he lives. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that salaried men in cities and towns of under 2,000 people rarely receive more than $75 or $100 a month?

Mr. HEPBURN. There is not a county officer in my district who does not get at least fifteen hundred dollars salary.

Mr. COWHERD. And he has to go out and make his campaign. Do you intend to make the postmaster make your campaign?

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. COWHERD. In the salary paid to every county officer there is an allowance for campaign expenses, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, I do not think that is true. I do not live in Missouri. We do not have to make that class of campaigns there. We do not have to spend half the salary in watching the polls. [Laughter.]

Mr. COWHERD. But the gentleman knows that in Missouri we limit the campaign expenses, and you do not, I understand, in Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman intends that as an argument at all; but in good faith I make this motion, and I hope the committee will vote it in. It ought to be there. It is just that it should be there, that there should be some approximation to equality in these expenditures.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

As a new paragraph, following line 7, page 11, insert:
"For unusual business accruing at third and fourth class post-offices, $500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the words "one million;" so that it will read:
"For unusual business accruing at third and fourth class post-offices, $1,500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when one of the distinguished Members of the House representing a rural district is hard up for any sort of comments to make on the post-office appropriation bill, I have always known that he addressed himself to abuse of the large cities. The distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. HEPBURN] adds zest to that, because at least once a year, ever since I have been here, he delivers a vigorous lecture to me on the floor. My respect and love for the gentleman from Iowa prevent me ever responding in the tone which he assumes, and he knows why.

The cities may need defense upon the floor of this House. Unfortunately, the membership of the House is so constituted that defense of the cities does but very little good. Congress never appropriates for postal facilities in the large cities any money which it can possibly help itself from appropriating, and if it were not that the post-offices in the cities are carried on partly for the benefit of the people who live in the country, because correspondence necessarily takes place between the city and the country, the House and Congress, constituted as it is, would probably take away half the money which is now appropriated for the cities.

To say that no clerk hire is given to the country is a peculiar statement. There is carried in this bill an item of $23,250,000 for compensation to postmasters, most of which goes to postmasters of the third and fourth class offices—clerk hire just as much as if it was specifically designated as clerk hire.

There is carried in this bill $20,000,000 for delivery in the country; but it is popular, and it will continue to be popular. I did not make the point on this item for economy or that there was extravagance. If I had my way, I would give to third-class postmasters of the country additional compensation in the way of clerk hire. I recognize the incongruity of the present law. It forbids, practically, clerk hire if the postmaster receives less than $2,000 salary, and the moment he passes the limit permits him to receive from $2,000 to $4,000 for clerk hire. I have known, or suspected, cases where the postmaster sold stamps amounting to $900, that he managed to sell or give away $1,000, so that he might get a $2,000 office, and make for himself probably an additional $1,000 in salary and have clerks to the amount of $1,000 or $2,000 more. If we want to have a reorganization of the service and deal fairly with all parties, very well. I do not oppose this item. I do not care how much we appropriate for this service; but I demand, so far as I can in this House, that the service in the cities shall not be crippled, and the purpose of the House and of the gentleman from Iowa is to cripple the service of the cities just as long as that can be done, until we can have no business transacted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to reports of committees of conference on the amendments of the Senate to bills of the following titles:

H. R. 5176. An act granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutcher;

H. R. 3903. An act granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman;

H. R. 3776. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Judy;

H. R. 958. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers;

H. R. 892. An act granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt;

H. R. 468. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy; and

H. R. 6022. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PROCTOR, Mr. QUARLES, and Mr. COCKRELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7239. An act granting a pension to Lydia M. Hill;

H. R. 6494. An act to approve and ratify act No. 73 of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona;

H. R. 10058. An act for the relief of Kirby Thomas; and

H. R. 199. An act for the relief of John H. McLaughlin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 58.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2323) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill all after "namely," in line 13 of the enrolled bill, down to and including line 20 of said bill, be stricken out and the following inserted: "Lot 4, section 1, township 7 south, range 34 east, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, section 18, township 7 south, range 35 east, and the east half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 6 south, range 34 east, and which have heretofore been appraised, shall be paid for at the said appraised value, at the time of and by the person making entry of the respective tracts upon which such improvements are situated;" so as to correctly describe the range, inaccurately stated in the bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5054. An act to provide for the disposal of timber on public lands chiefly valuable for timber, and for other purposes;

S. 3905. An act to establish aids to navigation in Delaware Bay and River;

S. 3165. An act providing for second and additional homestead entries, and for other purposes;

S. 2540. An act authorizing the appointment of Allen V. Reed, now a captain on the retired list of the Navy, as a rear-admiral on the retired list of the Navy;

S. 2284. An act for the relief of John T. Wertz and Walter H. Shupe;

S. 2164. An act for the relief of Henry E. Rhoades, assistant engineer, United States Navy, retired; and

S. 1362. An act for the relief of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is a very delicate and embarrassing situation to be assailed upon my left for two days for unfairness in appropriations for the city service and now upon my right for unfairness in the appropriations for the country districts. Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, I stand between these two gentlemen, both of whom I feel are somewhat in error, although I confess some merit in the claims of each. Yet the House will appreciate the situation which confronts us. There is but one law upon the statute books which gives us an anchorage for an amendment upon this bill which will, in a measure, relieve the districts now covered by the third-class post-offices. I appeal to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], whose sense of fairness has been the guiding star for me in many, many debates, that he argues in favor of an appropriation which must necessarily lead to extravagance, if not to unfortunate waste.

We seek here to reach a remedy in a small degree without full information as to the facts upon which we should base an appropriation. The amendment offered by my friend from Iowa would give more than $500 clerk allowance to every third-class office in the United States, and it could be spent regardless of the merits of the case or the conditions which prevail. I think he himself will admit that that is going too far. I have said on more than twenty-five occasions in the last two days that we seek in this bill to segregate the appropriations carefully and critically, so that we may insist on and be able to show at the end of the fiscal year whether or not it is a proper and accurate expenditure. Unfortunately we have not full information at hand upon which we can base an appropriation to meet the situation of the third-class offices.

How can you, therefore, segregate for this item? Will my friend give approval now, by his amendment, to a wasteful, if not extravagant, administration of that appropriation, which he and I know operated as a strong factor in the recent unfortunate misappropriation and maladministration in the postal service? How can we consistently justify our position with the country and before our constituents when we make a lump-sum appropriation of $1,500,000 for the use of clerks at third-class offices, when we know full well that, beginning at the lowest, with $1,000 salary for the postmaster, no man, until the gentleman from Iowa offered his amendment, has suggested a higher allowance than $100? I believe the gentleman will realize the embarrassment under which we suffer.

I know that we are all agreed that a careful analysis of the appropriation bill must be made, and the most careful restriction thrown about the item, that there can be afforded some means of providing, if possible, against extravagance and waste. That has been a troublesome problem in the postal service for at least ten years. I can remember more than six years ago the appeal of the gentleman from Iowa upon this floor for the relief of this class of officers. I believed then, as I believe now, that this is a situation for which some relief should be extended. I offered at last, in my individual capacity, not as a committee amendment, a clause to appropriate half a million dollars for that purpose. There is no other way in which it can be done upon this bill, except as relates to the statute for "unusual business." Let us try that. Let us experiment with that.

Let us see at the end of the fiscal year how that has been used. Then, if possible, by close scrutiny of the expenditures, by fuller information upon the subject, provision may then be made for segregation or possibly for fixing allowances, and if it takes or requires more money, then I have confidence in the patriotism of this body that it will recommend it; but as the time is not yet at hand let us not go beyond a reasonably fair appropriation under all the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended while I ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the time of the gentleman from Indiana will be extended to allow the gentleman from Maine to ask him a question.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Has there been any appropriation made heretofore for this purpose?

Mr. OVERSTREET. There has never been, in my judgment, since 1889, any appropriation for unusual business. There has been the usual appropriation for separating service, which has grown from about half a million dollars four or five years ago to $1,300,000 in the present law. That fund has been drawn upon in allowances for clerical service at third-class offices where separating service did not justify an allowance, and under a construction of the law that it would properly meet the drafts for unusual business.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Still, that is recognized as legally distinct from unusual service?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; exactly so.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Now, is the gentleman in possession of any information from the Department in regard to how much probably would be needed for unusual business, or could be legitimately expended for that purpose under the law as it stands?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We asked, upon the hearing, the First Assistant Postmaster-General and the gentleman whom he had with him, under whom this appropriation would be disbursed, if they could separate, how much would be for purely separating service and how much for purely unusual business, based upon the assumption of $1,300,000 that the present law carries. They were loath to give a definite answer. They said, however, that if limited exclusively to separating service they would think that $1,300,000 for the fiscal year 1905 would be a proper estimate, based upon their belief that there were a number of offices in the country not now receiving allowances for separating service which are entitled to it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And did they give any estimate of what would reasonably be required for unusual business?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not for unusual business, for the reason that it is an elastic term and information has not been gathered. Let me say to my friend that it was also stated upon the hearing that the rule, or law rather, of restriction of allowances strictly to the separating service has not been rigidly enforced, except since the 1st of last July, under the law of to-day.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if there was anything in language or gesture on my part that was offensive to the gentleman from Chicago, I was entirely unconscious of it, and I desire to make that proper apology that under such circumstances should be made.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I know that the gentleman never has desired, in any way whatever, to say or act in any way offensive to myself. The gentleman's relations to myself are of too cordial a nature to permit anything that might be said upon the floor of this House to affect the affection which I have had for the gentleman and, I think, the respect which the gentleman has for myself.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, if I attempted to read a lecture to the gentleman and have been persistent in that habit for the last twenty years, the House at least will suggest that I have been ineffectual in my attempt. [Laughter.] He is in error, too, in the supposition that I have made at any time an assault upon the cities.

I recognize the fact that they have to exist and that I have some relations to them and that my people have, and sometimes we are a little better for their existence, although often we suffer. I have made no assault upon any appropriation that has been made for postal facilities in the cities, and yet I confess that millions of dollars every year are recklessly squandered in the attempt to give them expedition in the delivery of their mails. I do not recognize the wisdom or justice of the United States Government making eleven, in some instances I am told, deliveries over the same territory in a city a day. I do not believe in the millions that we expend in expediting the passage of a letter or letters. There is not one in a hundred, one in a thousand, that needs this extraordinary expedition. The 999 others do not. I have made no complaint in the way of trying to reduce any of your facilities.

I am willing that you should have them, but that which seems to be astonishing is, while you must recognize the fact that all the Members from the rural districts aided in getting facilities for the cities, that you should stand day after day, year after year, trying to cut down these necessary and proper expenditures that do not give to the rest of the country its share. I have no assault to make upon the cities. I sometimes do feel a little irritation at the insolence that sometimes is manifested, not upon this floor, but elsewhere, where people of the cities regard themselves as the "whole thing" in the "shooting match" and talk about the "business men" of this country being in the cities. Why, bless your soul, Mr. Chairman, if I may be indulged in that familiarity, there are no business men in the real sense of the creation of wealth, or but a few of them, in the cities. These so-called "business men" are, in many instances, the financial operators who stand at the end of the route and tap and take away a large percentage of that which the other people of the country create and produce.

What wealth is produced in the cities compared with the other regions of the country? The business men of the city are those who levy tribute upon that which others produce. I am only permitted by my own sense of propriety to make this suggestion by these constant statements that are made here by gentlemen who come from dense populations about the superiority of the cities in the great contribution and the great aggregate of the wealth of the United States.

Mr. BENNY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me the contention on the floor of the House between the gentleman from a country district [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from a large city district [Mr. MANN] borders upon the ridiculous. I think they are both wrong. I come from a small city, and perhaps I may be classed as an outsider, and therefore may view that contention from an unbiased standpoint. I do not like to see a Member of this House from the country throw things at the large cities, nor do I care to see my friend from a city district sitting on my right throw aspersions upon the smaller places—the country districts.

To my mind the city is just as necessary to the country and the country is just as necessary to the city as the engine room of this House is to this Chamber and as this Chamber is to the engine room in order to make a complete and comfortable meeting place. It is wrong to suppose that the country district can get along without the city post-office being in a first-class condition all the time. What in the world would the country districts do with its mail if it were not for the fact that the great cities of New York and Chicago have postal facilities for handling the mail?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. BENNY. Yes.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. When the gentleman says we have facilities for handling the mail at New York, I want respectfully to call his attention to the fact that he is somewhat in error, because while we have been clamoring year after year on the floor of this House, while the business men and men from the rural districts have been talking about the want of postal facilities in New York, because of the feeling which has been manifested by the gentleman from Iowa we have been unable to secure the facilities which we in New York and the whole country are entitled to.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BENNY. After I get through with the gentleman from New York. One at a time. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana if I have time. I want to suggest to the gentleman from New York that he may get up and ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to continue my remarks beyond the five-minute limit, because I think most of my time is consumed by his query. I do not mean to say that New York has the facilities that it ought to have. I say that it has not. But one thing New York has that perhaps no other post-office in the world is equipped with, a force of official cats to keep the mice and rats out of the post-office. [Laughter.] And this is necessary because of the condition into which the New York post-office building has fallen on account of the overcrowding of that structure, which has been growing worse and worse from year to year. There is an appropriation in this bill, as I understand, for that purpose, and I ask the chairman of the committee if that is not so. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. We do not carry cats in our bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNY. Well, perhaps they are provided for under some other head, just as the drivers and coachmen of many officials' carriages in the city of Washington, when it was thought wise to hide the fact of their employment, were engaged as "laborers." New York has not proper facilities, nor has Chicago, and I doubt if any city has all the facilities it ought to have.

I want to give you my experience in mailing a letter to my own home from the city of Washington. I mailed it myself at noon on Friday and followed the letter in person some thirty-six hours later. I overtook the postman delivering the letter at my house. The house I live in is only seven hours from the Pennsylvania Railroad station in Washington. We do not have the facilities that we ought to have in the city of Bayonne. I asked that that situation be remedied, and the Postmaster-General took up the matter and did remedy it as far as he was able to.

Now, I am going to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa. I want the city and the country districts to get the postal facilities they ought to have.

I am going to insist, Mr. Chairman, on more money being appropriated for the great cities, so that they may have the postal facilities they need. The people of our country are great enough and rich enough to insist that the postal facilities of the United States of America shall be properly increased. It is time we had better facilities all over the land, and we are going to get them, and if the gentlemen from the city and the country districts will stop quarreling and fighting—on the one side for the city districts as against the country districts and on the other side for the country districts as against the city districts—if they will all get together and work together they will obtain the money necessary to remedy this trouble in the country districts, as well as in the city districts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this item and amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYNE. Is not debate already closed on this paragraph and amendments? I think there is an amendment to an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to an amendment, and then the gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last word of his amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. That is an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will modify my motion, Mr. Chairman, that debate on this item and the amendments thereto close in six minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I think that both the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] are right and I think that both are wrong. Each is right when he is trying to keep the other from increasing our already extravagant appropriations, and each is wrong when he is trying to increase them for either the country or the city. I am very glad indeed that the combination which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BENNY] speaks of or hopes for can not be made. I hope that circumstances will continue to be satisfactory with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and that he will prevent the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] from being extravagant, and that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will prevent him from being extravagant. Heaven knows that if the country and the cities get together and organize a raid upon the Treasury of the United States it will be rather bad for the poor fellows at home who pay the taxes and do not draw the salaries—the merchants, and the mechanics, and the merchants' clerks, and the farm hands in the fields.

Now, as to our postal facilities, we are getting magnificent postal facilities compared with what we have gotton in the past, and the Post-Office Department is growing healthfully and conservatively, and it ought not to grow too rapidly. No one of these things ought to take place with too great a stride. We go from the past into the future by gradual steps, and I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will not prevail. I think that we already have the most extravagant Government upon the face of this globe, and as far as I have been able to find out about the expenditures of any other country I think that is true. I do not like the idea that a Congressman's duty is to get a salary raised, a salary which is being drawn in his district—that is, that it is his chief duty. It is the smallest of his duties. His chief duty is to remember the people who pay the taxes. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will not prevail. We are seeking in a fair and reasonable way to meet an embarrassing situation.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will the gentleman state why he fixes the amount at $500,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I fix it as an arbitrary sum, and will state that when the First Assistant Postmaster-General and other officials were before the committee they asked for only $400,000 for all of the third-class offices, grading the clerks from $100 up. I propose, if this amendment is voted down, to first offer, before my amendment for $500,000 is voted upon, a proviso that the Postmaster-General shall report to Congress prior to February 1, 1905, the method of the application of this sum and all circumstances under which the appropriation has been disbursed; and I hope that when we have experimented with this amount to meet a delicate and embarrassing situation that we may be in a better position at the end of the next fiscal year to legislate more definitely than we are doing now.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And on the basis of actual results.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; on the basis of actual results. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this will be done.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will first report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pending pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I now offer another amendment to the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment to the pending amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended except in accordance with regulations published by the Postmaster-General at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. One moment. I will withdraw the amendment after asking a question or two of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. My purpose in offering the amendment, Mr. Chairman, was simply to ask a question or two of the chairman of the committee. Are there any regulations now under which this allowance will be expended, or is the expenditure purely at the discretion of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is no appropriation for clerical service accruing at third and fourth class post-offices on account of unusual business.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Then, under the amendment just offered, will not the situation next February be precisely what the situation is now, so that it will become necessary under that provision to submit to Congress all the correspondence and the communications which Members of Congress may receive from their constituents in regard to the expenditure of this appropriation?

Mr. PAYNE. I rise to a point of order. That debate has been closed.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. This is a new amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know whether the amendment of the gentleman from Texas did not prevail, and whether it ought not to have been read by the Clerk, with the amendment which I originally offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas has been agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then, let my amendment as amended be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For unusual business accruing at third and fourth class post-offices, $500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish the rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not yet offered my amendment. Does the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] insist on his amendment?

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. No; I do not insist on that particular amendment, but I insist that Congress should not again be placed in the position in which it has been placed heretofore, of knowing absolutely nothing about the manner of this expenditure.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] will appreciate that the amendment already agreed to is substantially the one first offered.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I accept the gentleman's statement and will withdraw my amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I offer as an amendment to the pending amendment the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall report to Congress, prior to February 1, 1905, the method of application of this sum and all circumstances under which the appropriation has been disbursed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] as amended by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For separating mails at third and fourth class post-offices, $1,000,000.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 9, page 11, insert:
"Provided, That this item shall be construed to include separating mails from and to rural mail routes."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this amendment is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of this money. The language, "separating mails," as I understand, has been construed by the Department to include only such mails as are transferred from one railroad to another or from a star route to a railroad. I think that is the construction adopted by the Post-Office Department. That is simply a piece of executive legislation, as the gentleman from Mississippi characterized it. This amendment simply directs the attention of the Department to the fact that the rural mail service may be equally a part of the separating service; and the amendment is not, in my estimation, new legislation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the law under which an appropriation is now made and disbursed for separating mails is found in section 3859 of the Revised Statutes—section 308 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, page 138. That section is as follows:

SEC. 3859. The Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail routes as distributing or separating offices; and where any such office is of the third, fourth, or fifth class he may make a reasonable allowance to the postmaster for the necessary cost of clerical services arising from such duties.

At the time of the enactment of that law there was no such service in existence in this country as rural free-delivery service. There was, however, in existence free-delivery service of mails in certain cities. It never has been contended that the separating service applied to the free-delivery service in cities, nor by anyone that that character of service is "mail-route" service in the definition of that term. "Mail route" under that section alludes to the star service entirely, and the construction of this section by the Department limiting it to star-route service is, in my judgment, the only construction under all the circumstances which can be given to the section.

Mr. HINSHAW. Why should there be a construction put upon that language that would exclude the rural mail route any more than the star route?

Mr. OVERSTREET. We have just taken care of that condition by the section we have put in the bill.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is not the question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I know; but you ought not to seek to accomplish one thing by evading the law, when you have just voted an appropriation to cover that situation.

Mr. HINSHAW. But the statute——

Mr. OVERSTREET. The star service may be said to be supplemental to the steam railway mail service. It comes in the category of transportation, not in the definition of delivery. Delivery is the rural service; the star-route service is part of the transportation service. Therefore this is new legislation, and, I think, clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, the language of the statute is that the Postmaster-General may designate offices at the intersection of mail routes as distributing or separating offices.

Now, I do not understand how any possible construction could be put upon that to the prejudice of the rural mail route. It is certainly as much of a mail route as is a star route, and it is the intersection of mail routes where a rural route comes in connection with a railroad or a star route.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The amendment is clearly an enlargement of the statute, and not a limitation.

Mr. HINSHAW. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. It is quite clear to the Chair that this amendment places a construction upon the existing law, and takes from the Postmaster-General the general discretion which he now has under existing law, and therefore is new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment after the word "dollars," in line 9, the same as was adopted a moment ago. It is before the Clerk now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish the rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of same.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish to ask my friend if that is the same language as his former amendment?

Mr. BURLESON. Identically.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is intended by him to include at this point the language in the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee before?

Mr. BURLESON. Just as the Clerk read it just a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices, $2,550,000: Provided, That there shall not be allowed for the use of any third-class post-office for rent a sum in excess of $400, nor more than $80 for fuel and light in any one year: And provided further, That the Postmaster-General may, in the disbursement of this appropriation, apply a part thereof to the purpose of leasing premises for the use of post-offices of the first, second, and third classes, at a reasonable annual rental, to be paid quarterly, for a term not exceeding ten years; and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to lease for post-office purposes for a period not exceeding fifty years a building to be erected over the tracks of the New York Central Railroad in the city of New York, State of New York, within the space bounded by Lexington avenue, Madison avenue, Forty-second street, and Forty-sixth street, at an annual rental not exceeding $90,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I wish to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My point of order is that the language beginning, in line 20, with the word "and," on page 11, and ending with the word "dollars," line 3, page 12, is new legislation.

I make this point of order for this purpose: I want to ask some questions and to get some explanation, especially of this part of it. The language is this:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to lease for post-office purposes for a period not exceeding fifty years a building to be erected over the tracks of the New York Central Railroad in the city of New York, State of New York, within the space bounded by Lexington avenue, Madison avenue, Forty-second street, and Forty-sixth street, at an annual rental not exceeding $90,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The question I want to ask is this——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not in the middle of a sentence; I will in a moment.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the point of order will be reserved.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I said I will not yield.

Mr. SULZER. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, then, it seems to me it is a very large rental, $90,000; and it seems to me that it is a very long period for the Government to tie its hands, in entering into a contract for fifty years. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will reserve the point of order, so that this can be discussed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I made the point of order. That was the first thing I said when I asked the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the committee, to explain the matter.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I confess the point of order if it shall be insisted upon.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish to have read at the Clerk's desk a letter from the Postmaster-General and a duplicate of a letter of the president of the New York Central Railroad touching upon this proposed legislation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just let this be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks to have certain letters read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1904.

Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to page 12 of my annual report, I desire to call your attention to the absolute necessity for some action to relieve the congested condition of the postal facilities in the city of New York, as at present the building is entirely inadequate to the business which must be performed in it.

After a very careful consideration of the subject, the Department has concluded that the best and most feasible way to give relief to the postal business in that city is through the securing of additional accommodations in connection with the proposed terminal facilities of the great railroad corporations which are about to enter that city, namely, the New York Central and the Pennsylvania system. With the Pennsylvania system it would be necessary to purchase the property, but in the case of the New York Central system we have received what I esteem to be a very liberal proposition for the rental of a building to be erected over the terminal tracks of that company. The proposition is that the railroad company will erect a suitable building for the purposes of the Department, and rent it to the Government on a basis of 2½ per cent of the cost of the building and the value of the land upon which the building is to be erected, provided, however, that the rental shall not exceed $90,000 per annum. The expenses of the Forty-second street station and the cartage of the mails to the railway station of the New York Central Company at present costs the Department in the neighborhood of $70,000 per annum, and the facilities are very inadequate and cumbersome.

With the new building proposed we would be able to do away entirely with the cartage of the mails, as they would be elevated to the building and lowered from the same alongside the postal cars by elevators. This would insure a saving, on an average, of at least thirty minutes in the dispatch of the mails, which, as you know, would mean very much to the business interests of New York and the country.

There is the greatest necessity for immediate action, as at best it will be from three to four years before the new terminal facilities of the company are ready and this building available for the purposes indicated, and in the meantime the congestion of the postal business will continue to increase.

I believe it to be greatly to the interest of the Government to secure such a lease which will result, almost in the nature of things, in a permanent occupancy of these quarters. We all know that, as the years go by, the value of property adjacent to a great railroad station like the one here proposed will increase, and I have no doubt that a lease made now will double in value in twenty-five years. Therefore I esteem it to be greatly to the advantage of the Government to secure as long a lease as possible.

Respectfully, yours,

H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

NEW YORK CENTRAL AND HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD CO.,
GRAND CENTRAL STATION,
New York, February 9, 1904.

Hon. HENRY C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Understanding that you prefer to have a proposition for a post-office at the Grand Central Station, within the space bounded by Lexington avenue, Madison avenue, Forty-fifth street, and Forty-sixth street, which is not based on a fixed rental, as proposed in my letter to you of February 4, I submit the following:

This company will furnish the ground, construct the building, and rent it to the Government for a long period—say fifty years—at a rate per annum based upon 2½ per cent on the value of the ground and 2½ per cent on the value of the building. The aggregate amount to be paid by the Government on this basis is not to exceed $90,000 per annum and the space to be furnished is to be approximately 100,000 square feet.

In this connection I would again call your attention to the fact that the Government is now paying for Station H, adjoining our terminals, $25,000 per year (approximately $1 per square foot), and in addition thereto about $5,000 per year for transferring the mails between the post-office and our depot.

The proposed new post-office over our tracks will afford space nearly three times as great as at Station H and in a modern building, constructed with especial reference to the requirements of the mail service, at a maximum increase in cost of less than 30 per cent above the amount now paid.

Very respectfully, yours,

W. H. NEWMAN, President.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi made a point of order as to this paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I made the point of order for the purpose of getting an explanation and making some remarks about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized by the Chair upon the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman made a certain inquiry and I had this correspondence read, bearing directly on the inquiry. At the present time, Mr. Chairman, the station near the New York Central Railroad which the post-office occupies has about 35,000 square feet, for which the Government pays an annual rental of $35,000. The station is so located that the necessary cartage and transferring the mail from the New York Central postal cars to and from the post-office station require an annual expenditure of an additional $35,000; so that under present conditions there is an expense of $70,000 in connection with the station of the New York post-office situated near the New York Central station.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let me ask the gentleman this: Are these other two rentals to be done away with?

Mr. OVERSTREET. These other two rentals are entirely done away with.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then it is only $20,000 above what we are now paying?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is only $20,000 above what we are now paying, and for a greatly increased facility, about 100,000 square feet, and the arrangement, as detailed by the officials, would admit of the elevation of the mails from the tracks to the post-office room and their descent therefrom to the cars at the expense of the company, $90,000, or not to exceed $90,000, covering all of this expenditure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, 90 per cent of all the mail that goes in and out of the great city of New York is carried by the two railroad companies, the New York Central and the Pennsylvania. Of that 90 per cent, 60 per cent is taken care of by the New York Central and 40 per cent by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The New York Central Railroad Company is now progressing in the construction of a building for its station requiring a very heavy expenditure. They make the offer, as reported from the Clerk's desk, by the president of the road, that in the process of that construction they will properly equip an office containing at least 100,000 square feet, equipping it for post-office purposes, to take care of the mails that their road carries into and out of New York, for a sum not in excess of $90,000 a year.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. In a moment. This proviso does not appropriate $90,000, nor does it provide that shall be the figure. It merely limits it to that, and if they are paid——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Practically it will be that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I merely call attention to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Whenever you say in one of these bills not to exceed a certain amount it means that that amount will be given.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I appreciate that. Now, for the reason of the very heavy expenditure and the large amount of money required in the construction of that great railroad station, the New York Central Railroad declines—and I think the gentleman will appreciate for good business reasons—to enter into a lease with the Government for a limited period of time.

I believe, and I think business men generally will approve of the belief, that in a city of the character of New York leased buildings of that character and equipment would grow in value rather than decline in value, and the Government, in the judgment of the committee and the Department, is in no danger of suffering any loss by reason of a long lease, for in the event we should seek to make a change, which we can not foresee, we could dispose of the lease at a profit.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman of course is aware of the fact that $90,000 a year is 2 per cent interest upon four and a half million dollars.

Mr. BURLESON. And in fifty years the Government will pay out four and a half million dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the Government could buy it for four and a half million dollars it would be cheaper. I have heard the explanation and, as far as I am concerned, I do not desire to insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph be closed in twenty minutes. I withdraw my request for unanimous consent; I wish to speak on this subject.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas renews the point of order, and it is still pending against this paragraph.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices will yield to me for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi raises the point of order against this paragraph for the purpose of having it explained. It seems to me the explanation has been given most adequately by the chairman of the committee. It is, however, necessary to state, in reply to the query of the gentleman from Mississippi, that he can hardly expect the railway company of which mention is made in this paragraph to put up a handsome, substantial, and adequate building for a less term of years than a lease of fifty years.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand the gentleman from New York to say that this building is a separate and distinct building from the depot they propose to erect, or is it part of that depot?

Mr. HARRISON. I understand it is to be part of the depot buildings of which the railway is to occupy the ground floor, but all the upper parts of the building are to be occupied by the post-office, and the railway company proposes to lift the mails from the cars up to the receiving and distributing rooms, and it seems to me those are facilities that the people of New York desire. This proposition is really a corollary to the proposition to establish postal facilities at the termini of both the great railway systems. The chairman of the committee has explained that 90 per cent of the mail of New York is carried by two railway systems at present. Now, we can not afford to take the position that we are opposed to this contract or this lease simply because a railway corporation is at the other end of it. It is a fact that the railway corporations do carry the mails of the United States, and, accepting that as a fact, it is entirely unreasonable to attack a contract because a corporation is a party to it. It has nothing whatever to do with politics, it seems to me, upon that account.

As appears from the statement before the committee and from the statement of the Postmaster-General in the letter which the Clerk has just read, this is an entirely reasonable sum for the New York Central Railway to demand for these postal facilities. It is less in proportion than the sum that we are now paying per square foot for our facilities at present near the Grand Central station. It is not only that, but it is much less per square foot when we consider the fact, as stated in the letter we have just heard read, that an almost equal sum to the amount of rent paid is at present paid for transporting mails to and from the railway station to the substation post-office. In point of view of these facts it is not necessary, it seems to me, to debate——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask if the gentleman does not think it would be much better to accept the proposition made by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to buy the property outright and let the Government own its own building and everything? And is he aware of the further fact that this fifty years which the lease is to run will cost the Government $90,000 a year, or four and a half million dollars, and will it not be better in every respect for the Government to own its own building?

Mr. HARRISON. That question does not affect the subject under consideration. It is an entirely separate and distinct question, and when the time for debating that question comes I will be very glad to join in debate with the gentleman upon that subject.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a great many of my colleagues desire to be heard upon this question. I yield such time as he may need to my colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE].

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has made a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understand, then, the point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, no; it is reserved, if the gentleman wishes to speak to it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the parliamentary status. Is the point of order withdrawn?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was withdrawn, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] renewed the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Chairman, in the interest of progress upon the bill, I wish to submit that it is not quite fair to the House to take up a whole lot of time in discussing the merits of a measure if the point of order is going so be insisted upon. I should hope that it would not be insisted upon, but I do not like to stand in the position of knowing in advance that the time will be absolutely wasted if the point of order is certain to be made.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understand the point of order was reserved, Mr. Chairman, and I rise to discuss the matter, and presume I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the point of order is reserved it can only be by unanimous consent, and if any gentleman of the committee calls for a ruling upon the point of order it is the duty of the Chair to rule. The Chair would state, however, that before ruling on this point of order he would be glad to hear the gentleman insisting upon the point of order, first, in reference to the present law governing leases of premises for post-office purposes, and, secondly, in regard to the time for which such leases under the law can be made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It changes existing law.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to explain the position I take on the point of order. It is new legislation. It points out a particular place in the city of New York where a post-office shall be available and where a post-office shall be built, and there is nothing in the existing law that refers to that. It provides for a fifty-year lease at $90,000 a year rental, and there is certainly nothing of the kind in the present law. On both points it is new legislation and is not germane to any part of the bill. Under the present law only leases of ten years can be made. This provides for a lease of fifty years at a stated rental of $90 000, amounting to four million and a half dollars. I think that it would be cheaper and better for the Government to own the building. At the end of the fifty years the Government would have nothing, and it would still have to build a building.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Several Members rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Texas to insist upon an immediate ruling upon the point of order?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Texas will reserve his point of order for a few minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas reserve his point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I will for the present, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chatrman, the city of New York, which I have the honor to represent in part on the floor of this House, is the richest city in the world, the most populous city on this continent, and the metropolis of our country. Every citizen in all our land has every reason to feel a just pride in the commercial greatness of the Empire City, and it seems to be a remarkable fact and a most humiliating condition of affairs here that, no matter what the great city of New York wants or how badly something there is needed, it can have no relief, it can get no aid from the Congress of the United States. The greatest city in our country is and always has been studiously ignored by the National Legislature. The way we are treated here is an outrage, and I say it has got to stop.

For years, Mr. Chairman, the people of New York City have been making a determined but a fruitless effort to get a new post-office, and the Representatives of that city in this House, in season and out of season, month in and month out, have done everything in their power to secure the necessary legislation; but all in vain. We have pleaded and begged and appealed, but without avail. Congress seems to be deaf to the supplications of the first city in the land. The humblest hamlet in any State can get a Federal building or a magnificent post-office for the mere asking, but New York City can not have simple justice in a matter of the greatest urgency and necessity and that affects more or less every other part of our entire country and all the people. It is strange, but then there is a reason for it.

The present post-office building in the city of New York is a disgrace to the Federal Government. It is old, damp, worn-out, overcrowded, and dilapidated. It is totally unfit to properly transact its immense postal business. It was built many years ago, and its usefulness is now practically a thing of the past. New York City to-day is more in need of better post-office facilities than any other city in the United States. This old post-office building away down town is wholly inadequate, and has been so for years, to properly handle and distribute the vast amount of mail that comes in and goes out of the great metropolis. It is damp and dirty and dingy. It is cramped and clammy and unhealthy. The Government employees there, compelled to work underground, are daily endangering their health and risking their lives, and are so crowded for lack of space and necessary room that it is impossible to expedite the distribution of important mail matter. And this deplorable situation affects, I say, not only the people in the city of New York, but the people all over the country, because it is well known that New York City is our greatest postal distributer.

Mr. Chairman, the post-office of New York City pays the Government an immense revenue profit every year; more, I believe, than any other three cities in the land and more than many States of the Union. The net annual revenue from the New York City post-office is about $8,000,000, and increasing more and more every year. With these apparent facts staring us in the face, it is a shame, in my judgment, that for this reason or that excuse it has been absolutely impossible for the people of New York City, or their representatives in Congress, to get Congress to remedy the postal evils in New York City and give the people there a post-office that will reflect credit on the Federal Government and facilitate the distribution of the mails.

It is well known, Mr. Chairman, to those Members familiar with this question that after several years of weary effort and arduous struggle we finally succeeded in getting the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of this House to pass a law merely appointing a commission composed of the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Attorney-General to go to New York City and select a suitable site for the new post-office building. No appropriation to pay for the site was made in this law, because we were told such a proposition was unheard of and contrary to precedent, and that no appropriation was ever made by Congress until the site was selected, and that just so soon as the site was selected Congress would forthwith appropriate all necessary money to pay for the same and to begin the construction of the building.

The commission recommended purchasing a site for a large substation at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad in New York City at an expense of $2,000,000, and this matter is now before the Appropriations Committee. We hope to get this provision in the sundry civil bill. The New York Central Railroad is willing to build and lease another large substation to the Government at its terminus in the city of New York on fair and reasonable terms, and this matter is now before the House. I am in favor of both these propositions, because it is the best we can get, in my judgment, at the present time, and the deplorable postal situation in our city admits of no further delay. We must have immediate relief, and we must act at once.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I concur substantially in all that has been said by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], and I appeal to the Members of this House for fair play, and in the name of justice I beg you to listen to our appeals, to hear our side of this question, and to give New York City the postal legislation that is so earnestly prayed for—so urgently demanded by the necessities of the situation—and that will to some extent relieve our present congested postal conditions.

There has never been a time, in my opinion, when legislation along these lines was so absolutely required as at the present moment. If we do not get this relief now, we will get none this session, and the post-office service in New York City will be crippled worse than it is now, and conditions there will become more deplorable than ever. It is a shame the way you play fast and loose with this important matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SULZER. In a moment. Not just now. There should be no further delay; and I repeat that if this provision is stricken out of this bill, it will be a great injustice to the country, because it is well known that the city of New York is the great distributing postal center of the United States, and better facilities there for the speedy handling and immediate distribution of the mail will help every person in the land and benefit every business concern in the country.

Every man, every woman, and every commercial enterprise all over this land is anxious to send and have delivered as quickly as possible the mail that must go through and be distributed by the post-office in the city of New York. The constituents of every man in this House are deeply concerned about this matter and, to a greater or lesser degree, interested in the passage of this provision for postal relief for New York City. There should be no objection to it from anyone. It is honest and fair and just. It is not local; it is general, and for the benefit of all our people.

This postal-relief matter has been thrashed out for years over and over again before two committees of this House. It is no new proposition. We all understand it. The New York Members in this House to-day are united for this legislation. I regret exceedingly that the objection to it at the last moment comes from this side of the House, and I regret yet more that it comes from my friend from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]. I hope he will not insist upon the point of order. I appeal to him now, and I hope he will be as good a friend of New York as New York has been of Texas and, in the interest of justice and in the name of common sense, help us to get what we need—what we ought to have. I appeal to him, and I hope he will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. I will if the gentleman will make it short. I have only a little time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman why he prefers a fifty-year lease to absolute ownership and control by the United States Government?

Mr. SULZER. I will answer that question. The fight for increased postal facilities for New York has been going on in Congress for the last ten years, but with no success. Officials of the Post-Office Department declare that there is no need for a new post-office; that what the city needs are branch offices capable of handling enormous quantities of mail at the terminal stations of the important railroads—the New York Central and the Pennsylvania.

For ten years, I say, the New York delegation has been fighting in Congress day in and day out, month in and month out, year in and year out, to get a bill for a new post-office building in New York City, but we never have been able to accomplish it. The nearest we came to it was to get a commission appointed, consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster-General, and the Attorney-General. The commission visited New York City, made an examination, and reported to Congress. It was adverse to a public building and in favor of this plan. The bill apparently can not be passed. Congress treats New York City unjustly, outrageously, and with an unfair discrimination that we resent and will continue to resent and protest against. The commission reported against a public building and in favor of this plan. This is all we can get. It is this or nothing. That is all there is about it.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? What has been the obstacle?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman——

Mr. SULZER. One at a time, now, please. I will answer all questions. Let me say that you all know, or ought to know, that at the present time it is an absolute impossibility to pass a law for a new post-office building in the city of New York. The report of the commission sent to the last Congress settled that, I am sorry to say, and the only relief we can now get, the only remedy presented for the congested postal conditions there is this lease from the New York Central Railroad and the purchase of the site from the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The people of New York City are in favor of these propositions; the newspapers are in favor of this mode of relief; the great commercial bodies, the trade organizations, the business people of New York City are in favor of this method for speedy postal relief; and as it is the best we can get for years to come, I favor it, I advocate it, I hope it will pass, and I beseech my friend from Texas to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that we have room enough in Texas for the whole city of New York and its population.

Mr. SULZER. Yes, Texas is a great State, and she has no greater friend on the floor of this House than myself. I want the gentleman to understand that. I have always been a consistent friend of the Lone Star State.

Now, I will tell you why we are in favor of this New York Central lease. It is because the New York Central Railroad will not consent to sell its property to the Government, nor will it go to the trouble to spend its money to put up this magnificent substation postal building at its terminus except on a long-term lease. If the lease can be made for fifty years, I believe it will be to the advantage of the Government. Rents are very high in this section of the city. Property there is increasing in value more and more every year. And I say to you that if we do not accept this, the Government in the future will have to rent other property and will have to pay twice as much for it. This lease at the price stated is cheap indeed, and entirely to the advantage of the Government.

The Post-Office Department is paying to-day for a little substation—Substation H, I think it is—at the New York Central terminus, in New York City, $35,000 a year rental for a space containing about 30,000 square feet; and it pays a contractor $35,000 a year more for cartage, making a total of $70,000 a year. By the terms of this lease we get a space of over 100,000 square feet for a sum less than $90,000 a year on a long-term lease, and that will save the Government money in the end and do away with the cost of cartage and save time in hauling the mails. The Government to-day, I repeat, pays a contractor in New York City for carting the mail from the depot around to this substation $35,000 a year. That makes $70,000 a year that the Government is now paying, and the mail is delayed, and the entire method is conducted under the most disadvantageous circumstances. This lease on the terms stated is dirt cheap in the opinion of every man familiar with the situation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not the Government save $20,000 a year by continuing the present method?

Mr. SULZER. No, I think not; because the Government must have more space, and it can not rent the space required in that neighborhood—say a hundred thousand square feet—for less than $150,000 a year, to say nothing about the additional cost of cartage, which will be in a few years $50,000 a year more. In my opinion the proposition of the New York Central will conserve the best interests of the Government, the Post-Office Department, and the people, and from a financial standpoint will be a great bargain for the Government, to say nothing about the quick dispatch and the saving of time in the speedy delivery of the mails. The New York Central Railroad now carries, and will for years to come continue to carry, at least 50 per cent of all the mail going to and from New York City.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to know whether there is any provision for a renewal of this lease at the option of the Government? And does not the gentleman consider that if we are to have a fifty-year lease entered into now there ought to be the right of renewal at the option of the Government at the expiration of the fifty years?

Mr. SULZER. No; but I see no objection to that. No doubt it could be arranged by the Postmaster-General. Fifty years, however, is a long time, and in the light of the past who can assume to predict what New York City will be and what the governmental postal policy will be fifty years hence? But, all things carefully considered, I believe this provision in this bill for this lease is a fair, just, safe, wise, and conservative proposition, and Congress should authorize the Postmaster-General to make it on the best terms possible. I have heard no objection to it from anyone in New York City, and I sincerely hope there will be no objection to it here.

It is a New York City matter, and every one of the Members here from that city is in favor of it without reservation. It will go a long way to solve the trouble, remedy our postal difficulties, expedite the carrying and the delivery of the mails, and in the end I firmly believe it will prove to be wise, economical, beneficial, and advantageous. I trust the point of order will be withdrawn and the provision agreed to and passed.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For the purpose of putting an inquiry to the gentleman from Texas, who raised this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from New York for an inquiry?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman from Texas believe that the New York Central Railroad or any owner of real estate in the vicinity of the station of the New York Central Railroad would thoroughly equip and furnish for postal requirements a building of the size and kind suggested in the offer unless they were assured by the lease that the post-office would remain there for a long time? And does not the gentleman from Texas realize the fact that expensive furniture and expensive equipment would not be put into the building at the cost of the owner only to be carted away as old junk if the term were a short one and the Government saw fit to abandon the building?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think the United States Government should put itself in the power of a railroad company for fifty years, to be "held up" on a rental of $90,000 a year for a building costing four millions and a half, when it can itself erect a suitable building that will afford proper mail facilities for the city.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman believe it is possible at this session, any more than it was possible at the last session, to get through here a bill for the acquisition of a site and the erection of a post-office building in the city of New York?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will answer that by asking this question: Has the New York delegation attempted to get through a bill of that kind?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; for ten years.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Texas propounded a question to me; I want to answer it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask for a ruling now on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I should like to answer the question of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has asked a ruling upon the point of order, and the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Texas put a question to the Member now occupying the floor, and the Member was about to answer that question. The inquiry put by the gentleman from Texas was pending. Now, I desire to know whether I am not in order to answer the pending inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, in answer to the parliamentary inquiry, that all proceedings in the Committee of the Whole are now going on really by unanimous consent, unless directed distinctly to the question of order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask unanimous consent of the Committee that I may be permitted to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to be permitted to answer the interrogatory of the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I desire that there be some limitation as to the time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Let the gentleman be limited to five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks to occupy not exceeding five minutes in answering the question of the gentleman from Texas. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The gentleman from New York will proceed.

[Mr. GOLDFOGLE addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SULZER. Just a word in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee. If the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his point of order, I believe that the New York delegation on the floor of this House will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I have a little voice in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I simply want the regular order, so that the ruling may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is ruling on the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that I may have three minutes on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to be recognized for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I object.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will be able to discuss this subject——

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I hope the gentleman will kindly withdraw his objection.

Mr. SULZER. In the interest of fair play, I hope the gentleman from New York will have a hearing.

Mr. PAYNE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. Is it not within the province of the Chair to continue this debate in the discretion of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that all proceedings except decision on the point of order was proceeding by unanimous consent. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] be heard for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I hope that we will be able to discuss this question in a dignified and proper manner. I do not wish to say one word or make a single claim that is not fair and honest for the city of New York, but our necessities are urgent and should have attention. It is true for years, ever since I have been in this House, and for many years previous, Members from New York have been endeavoring to obtain some consideration for bills to give that relief which it is frankly admitted upon all sides is due us. This is the first proposition that we have been able to place before the House, owing to reasons that were not our fault as a delegation. On this question the entire New York delegation are a unit, and we shall stand for it. The proposition has been carefully investigated by Postmaster-General Payne, it has been thoroughly looked into by the post-office departments in Washington and New York City, and it commends itself, after a careful examination, to the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads. Surely, with this abundant evidence before us, no one in the House will object, and thus put us back after all these years of effort and oblige us to start all over again.

As to the lease itself, the Postmaster-General tells me that he will make the best bargain he can with the New York Central Railroad. He states that he will exact favorable terms in making this lease. In all probability instead of $90,000 he may be able to secure the necessary space, perhaps, for $70,000, and that is the only reason why I would object perhaps to the suggestion of the gentleman who spoke a few minutes ago and asked for a $75,000 lease and ten-year rental. We may do better. As to the rental period, I do not think that the New York delegation care anything about that point. We would be just as willing to have that lease for ten years as for fifty years. It is immaterial, but it is a well-known fact that real-estate values in New York do not stand still, that they advance yearly, and in all probability by making a long lease now we will do better than by taking the property on shorter time, and then having to enter into further negotiations later on with the New York Central Railroad. There is no doubt whatever that opposition has arisen in the House by reason of the proposed change in the law in relation to the term of lease.

Now, as regards the amount to be paid, $70,000 or $90,000 yearly, you must remember that New York is increasing rapidly in population and the country in proportion, and there is an immense mail coming daily into our city. These railroads are establishing great stations—the New York Central at Forty-second street and the Pennsylvania between Seventh and Ninth avenues and Thirty-first and Thirty-third streets—and they are each spending some fifteen or twenty million dollars for terminal facilities. It is absolutely essential that New York City should have a substation at both places. If we do not get them now, owing to the justice of our position and by courtesy and kindly consideration of this House, there is no question whatever but that a yearly appropriation under the general law will be necessary, and we will ultimately pay more.

It is an actual fact, as has been stated by my colleagues on the other side of the House, that we are paying to-day about $70,000 a year for post-office facilities at a point close to the Forty-second street station, including cost of cartage. I sincerely hope the gentleman from Texas will kindly withdraw the point of order, and he will be doing no injustice to himself, this House, or the Government by his action.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I now ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. BAKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BAKER. I rise to say that as one of the New York Members I ask unanimous consent that I be given one minute to explain my position on this matter.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has raised the point of order against the paragraph in the bill which the Clerk will read, beginning in line 20 on page 11:

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to lease for post-office purposes for a period not exceeding fifty years a building to be erected over the tracks of the New York Central Railroad, in the city of New York, State of New York, within the space bounded by Lexington avenue, Madison avenue, Forty-second street, and Forty-sixth street, at an annual rental not exceeding $90,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair has not been directed by any members of the committee favoring this item to any provision in the statutes which confers upon Congress the right to select sites for post-offices, and the Chair has been unable to find any such provision in the statutes. If this item can be sustained at all it must be under the provision of section 3829 of the Revised Statutes, a part of which relating to this subject the Chair will read:

The Postmaster-General shall establish post-offices at all such places on post-roads established by law as he may deem expedient, and he shall promptly certify such establishment to the Sixth Auditor.

It is very clear from a mere cursory reading of this paragraph that entire and complete discretion has been lodged by Congress in the Postmaster-General to establish post-offices within his discretion. Without considering the other features of this item, it will be sufficient for the purposes of this ruling to call the attention of the House to the fact that this item specifies the exact site which the Postmaster-General is directed to lease. This direction to the Postmaster-General is of course an amendment or a change in the law which says he shall select the post-offices at such places as he shall deem expedient. It is very clear, therefore, that this one provision in this item makes the paragraph new legislation, or a change in existing law, and the Chair feels impelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I offer in lieu of the words stricken out under the point of order the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add in lieu of that stricken out the following:

"For lease of post-office at New York City, $90,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for said purpose unless the Postmaster-General shall lease for post-office purposes for a period not exceeding fifty years a building to be erected over the tracks of the New York Central Railroad, in the city of New York, State of New York, within the space bounded by Lexington avenue, Madison avenue, Forty-second street, and Forty-sixth street, at an annual rental not exceeding $90,000."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I raise the same point of order to that, Mr. Chairman. It points out the time, place, and manner.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am ready for a ruling, Mr. Chairman, and as soon as the ruling is made I shall move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana appropriates $90,000, with the proviso that no part of this sum shall be available except upon certain conditions. This is one of those limitations with which members of the committee are all familiar. It does not take away from the Postmaster-General the discretion vested in him, for the reason that it does not direct him to use any of the money appropriated. This doctrine of limitation, as sustained in parliamentary rules, proceeds upon this theory, as the Chair understands it: That Congress may use arbitrary power in appropriating money, or in not appropriating money, for purposes specified by law. Congress may refuse to appropriate money for any purpose for which the law provides, either a salary or a definite annual payment. If Congress can refuse to appropriate money for any purpose, it is quite clear that Congress may appropriate money for a specific purpose, to be expended only upon certain conditions. In this case the amendment leaves it to the Postmaster-General to decline to use the money on the ground that the amendment makes the appropriation authorized by law with a limitation as to the mode of its expenditure. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the post-office appropriation bill and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9480. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 891. An act granting certain lots in Gnadenhutten, Ohio, to Gnadenhutten special school district.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. POWERS of Maine was given leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Henry G. McDougall, Fifty-seventh Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Douglass Taylor, administrator of estate of John Haynes, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Douglass Taylor, administrator of estate of Edward Moore, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Amelia Simpson, administratrix of estate of Randolph Simpson, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

COURTS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. HOAR. I report back favorably without amendment, from the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill (H. R. 8335) to amend an act entitled "An act to determine the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin," approved March 31, 1892, chapter 28. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to send the bill back to the House by striking out the last section. The committee understands perfectly well that there is no importance attached to that section.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT ST. JOSEPH, MO., FOR STREET PURPOSES.

Mr. STONE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3761) ceding certain land appertaining to the custom-house at St. Joseph, Mo., for use as a street, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a House bill authorizing the Government to cede or grant to the city of St. Joseph, for street purposes, 10 feet of ground belonging to the United States in connection with the building for the post-office and other Government offices. I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5123) for the widening of the Bladensburg road, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5124) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Avery; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5125) granting an increase of pension to William O. White; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HOAR. I introduce, by request, a bill to create a colonization bureau and to provide for advances to actual settlers on the public domain.

I desire to state that this bill is introduced at the request of the head of the Salvation Army, an organization which has done very great service in relieving the condition of the poor and criminal classes in our cities. It was prepared under the advice and with the full approval of the late Senator Hanna, who expected to introduce it, and he would have done so but for his lamented death.

There may be some amendments of the detail in the matter of working out this very interesting and important plan. I do not desire to be committed to all the detail of the bill. That will be considered by the committee. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill (S. 5126) to create the colonization bureau, and to provide for advances to actual settlers on the public domain, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill, with the accompanying paper, will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that the bill contemplates an appropriation of public lands, and therefore I think it should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. I have no very great choice about the matter of reference. The bill comprehends not only providing for settlements on the public land of the poor of our cities, but it also provides a pretty large scheme of benevolence by national aid, and that is out of the Treasury. The latter would bring it within the domain of the Committee on Education and Labor, but if the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands will take interest in the measure, and I am sure he will, I will consent to change the reference and let it go to his committee.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the first step is an appropriation of public lands, and therefore the bill ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands in the first instance. I will give it every attention, I assure the Senator, that the subject warrants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts make any objection?

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOAR. I had originally proposed to send it to the Committee on Public Lands, but it has been the custom of the Senate to send to the Committee on Education and Labor all bills for humane and benevolent objects having in view mainly a regulation of the property of the United States, as of the public lands, but having also in view the elevation of the people by some national instrumentality. It has been the custom of the Senate always to send such bills to the Committee on Education and Labor in the first instance, and for that reason I changed my original intention. But as the Senator from North Dakota prefers to have the bill go to the Committee on Public Lands, he can send it to the Committee on Education and Labor afterwards, as he will see fit and as may be proper.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Very well.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 5127) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Ricker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5128) to facilitate the taking of testimony to be used before either House of Congress or the committees thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 5129) granting an increase of pension to Thompson Martin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for one chaplain at the Military Academy from $2,000 to $3,000, intended to be proposed by him to the Military Academy appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURROWS submitted an amendment providing that all monthly fraternal publications entered to the second class of mail matter when deposited for local delivery by carriers shall be subject only to the pound rate of postage, intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MARTIN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the extension and completion of the sea wall and the construction of any other necessary works for protecting Jamestown Island, Virginia, from the encroachments of James River, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500 for completing the public building at Alexandria, Va., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUARLES submitted an amendment providing for the collection of statistics of the births and deaths in registration areas for the year 1902 and anually thereafter, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LABOR TROUBLES IN COLORADO.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for an order to print 3,000 copies of Senate Document 86, "A review of the labor troubles in the metalliferous mines of the Rocky Mountain region," and Senate Document 163, "Statement of the Western Federation of Miners in the State of Colorado." I ask that the two documents be printed as one, and that the 3,000 copies be placed in the Senate document room. It will cost less than $100.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing, and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 3,000 additional copies of Senate Document No. 86, "A review of the labor troubles in the metalliferous mines of the Rocky Mountain region" and of Senate Document No. 163, "Statement of the Western Federation of Miners in the State of Colorado," Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, be printed in one document and placed in the Senate document room.

COLON FIRE CLAIMS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas it appears from Document No. 264, Senate, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, parts 1 and 2, and also from Document No. 199, Senate, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, containing messages from the President of the United States to the Senate in regard to the claims against the Republic of Colombia, known as the "Colon fire claims," that the said claims arose out of a riot or insurrection at Colon, headed by one Pedro Prestan, in March, 1885, against the authority of the Colombian Government, during which disturbances of the peace the transit across the Isthmus of Panama was obstructed and the said city of Colon was set on fire by the said Prestan and his followers, to the great loss and damage of various citizens of the United States who were residing and engaged in business in the said city on faith of the treaty of December 12, 1846, as interpreted by the claims convention of September 10, 1857, between the United States and New Granada (Colombia), and whose dwelling houses, warehouses, stores, and merchandise were destroyed in the said conflagration; and

Whereas it appears from the aforesaid documents that the Government of the United States in its correspondence with the Colombian Government, and in a report from the Secretary of State to the President, has maintained that the Republic of Colombia was responsible in damages for the injuries and losses suffered as aforesaid by citizens of the United States on account of the failure of the Colombian Government to preserve peace and good order along the transit route as agreed in the aforesaid treaty of 1846, and expressly acknowledged by the said Government, under similar circumstances, in the aforesaid claims convention of 1857; and

Whereas the United States has endeavored to induce the Colombian Government to join in the establishment of a mixed commission to the end that the said claims might be examined and satisfied, but the Colombian Government has refused so to do, and the United States has refrained from enforcing the obligation of Colombia in the premises on account of her poverty and the successive revolutions from which she has suffered; and

Whereas the city of Colon, where the aforesaid injuries and losses were inflicted on citizens of the United States, in violation of the said treaty, and the Isthmus of Panama, with the interoceanic transit, have passed into the possession and sovereign control of the Republic of Panama, by whose inhabitants and within whose territory the aforesaid breaches of the peace and violations of the treaty were committed when the Department of Panama was one of the constituent States of the United States of Colombia; and

Whereas it is a recognized principle of the law of nations that, on the division of a state into two or more separate and independent nationalities or sovereignties, either the seceding or the parent state may be held liable in solido for international liabilities subsisting prior to the separation, irrespective of any arrangements which they make between themselves for an apportionment of the same; and

Whereas the United States, by treaty, has guaranteed the independence of the said Republic of Panama, and has acquired certain rights of property and administration in respect of the said interoceanic transit in the territory of the said Republic, for which certain payments are to be made to the said Republic by the Government of the United States: Be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that it is desirable and proper that the President should negotiate with the said Republic of Panama, and he is hereby requested to open negotiations with the said Republic, for the purpose of adjusting and settling the amount or extent of Panama's liability for the aforesaid losses and injuries, and arranging for the adjudication and payment of the same, with a corresponding release of Colombia, in whole or part, as may be agreed upon by the sovereign parties concerned.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE BAY (FLORIDA) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar at the entrance of Alaqua Bayou, on Choctawhatchee Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to securing a depth of 6 feet of water across said bar.

PENSION ORDER OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CARMACK. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether, in the opinion of said committee, there is any authority of law for a recent order of the Secretary of the Interior to the effect that all persons who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and who have reached the age of 62 years, shall be presumed to have incurred such disabilities as to entitle them to receive pensions under the act of Congress, June 27, 1890.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the resolution will propose to direct the Committee on Pensions to make the inquiry. That committee has general jurisdiction of the subject. They are familiar with the pension laws.

I will say to the Senator that in my judgment the Committee on the Judiciary could not, in justice to other business with which their docket is somewhat cumbered, get at that inquiry at the present session of Congress. I suppose the Committee on Pensions, which will have occasion to consider this question and all about it, can report within a week. I hope the Senator will send it to the other committee.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution has gone over under the rule.

Mr. CARMACK. I ask that it be printed and go over subject to call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has gone over under the rule.

Mr. CARMACK. I will confer with the Senator from Massachusetts about it.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 16th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1487) creating an additional land office in the State of North Dakota.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 17th instant approved and signed the act (S. 4387) to authorize the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Gilbertsville, Ky.

The message further announced that the President of the United States had on the 18th instant approved and signed the act (S. 201) to establish a port of delivery at Salt Lake City, Utah.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had on the 19th instant approved and signed the act (S. 64) to correct the military record of William B. Thompson.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am compelled to be out of the Senate Chamber very often, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 4640) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," approved February 28, 1903, be put on its passage. It is a bill consisting of only ten lines.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN ALASKA.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3678) to provide for the creation of an additional land district in the district of Alaska.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 2, page 2, line 3, after the word "Alaska," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the President may, in his discretion, designate the United States marshal for the second judicial division of the district of Alaska to act as ex officio register, and the clerk of the United States district court for the district of Alaska, second division, to act as ex officio receiver of said land office, and in case said officers are so designated they shall each receive, in addition to the salaries now provided by law for them, the sum of $500 per annum, but all fees received by them as ex officio register and receiver shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or during the recess thereof, and until the next session after such appointment, a register and receiver for said district; and they shall be subject to the same laws, and be entitled to the same compensation as is or may hereafter be provided by law in relation to the existing land offices and officers in the said district of Alaska.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVENPORT WATER POWER COMPANY.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4142) granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain wing dam, canal, and power station in the Mississippi River, in Scott County, Iowa.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the assent of Congress is hereby given to the Davenport Water Power Company, a corporation created and organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a canal along the north bank of the Mississippi River between Leclaire and Davenport, in Scott County, in the State of Iowa, to erect, construct, operate, and maintain a power station thereon, and to project, erect, construct, operate, and maintain such dams and other works as may be necessary within said limits for the development of water power and the generation, use, and transmission therefrom of electric energy and power at, in, and upon the Rock Island Rapids of the Mississippi River: Provided, That the said canal and appurtenant works shall be so designed, constructed, and operated as not to interfere in any way with the safe and convenient navigation of steamboats and other vessels or of rafts and barges over the Rock Island Rapids at any stage of water; and the expense of any reconstruction or extension of or addition to existing works for the improvement of navigation on the said Rock Island Rapids which may be found necessary, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, on account of the construction, maintenance, or operation of the said canal and appurtenant works, shall be borne by the said company, its successors, or assigns, under conditions to be prescribed by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That detailed plans for the construction and operation of the said canal and appurtenant works shall be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of War before the commencement of the construction of any portion of the said works; and that after the approval of the said plans no deviation therefrom shall be made without the prior approval by the Secretary of War of the said deviation: And provided further, That the said works and appurtenances shall be so designed, constructed, and operated as not to overflow or otherwise damage the lands and other property of the United States at Rock Island Arsenal, or injure or diminish the water power of the United States at the said arsenal, or the water power of any person, firm, or corporation having hydraulic works already constructed: And provided further, That before entering upon the construction of the said works, compensation shall be made to any person, firm, or corporation whose lands or other property may be taken, overflowed, or otherwise damaged by the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said works, in accordance with the laws of the State where such lands or other property may be situate.

SEC. 2. That the withdrawal of water from the Mississippi River and the discharge of water into the said river, for the purpose of operating the said canal and appurtenant works, shall be under the direction and control of the Secretary of War, and shall at no time be such as to impede or interfere with the safe and convenient navigation of the said river by means of steamboats or other vessels, or by rafts and barges, or to injure or diminish the water power of the United States at Rock Island Arsenal, or the water power of any person, firm, or corporation having hydraulic works already constructed: Provided, That if any litigation arises from the construction, operation, or maintenance of the said works, or from the obstruction of any part of the Mississippi River by the said works or any portion thereof, cases may be tried in the proper courts as now provided for that purpose in the States of Illinois and Iowa, and the courts of the United States: And provided further, That suitable fishways shall be constructed and maintained by the said company, its successors and assigns, at such of the dams and in such manner as may be required from time to time by the United States Fish Commission.

SEC. 3. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the works herein authorized be not commenced within three years and completed within six years from the date hereof.

SEC. 4. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power station, and appurtenant works in the Mississippi River, in Scott County, Iowa."

PUBLIC BUILDING ELEVATOR, RICHMOND, KY.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5052) to provide for the construction of an elevator in the United States public building at Richmond, Ky.

The bill was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be constructed in the United States public building at Richmond, Ky., which is three stories high, and contains the United States court rooms, clerk's office, post-office, rooms for use of internal-revenue officers, and offices for board of pension examiners, an elevator connected with each of the three stories of the building and appropriates $10,000 therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 196) to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect. The bill has heretofore been read in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the bill was heretofore read, and I should be very glad to hear it read. I ask that it may be read for information, subject to objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill was read; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 7, line 4, after the words "as to," to strike out:

Article 5 thereof, which is modified and changed so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE V.

"The schools now located upon the above-named reserve are to be maintained in efficiency, as at present, not exceeding twenty years, and increased as necessity may require during said period."

And as to article 8, which is hereby rejected.

And to insert:

Articles 4 and 5 thereof, which are modified and changed so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE IV.

"In consideration of the premises and the foregoing cession the United States agrees to pay to the said Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians the sum of $1,000,000, such amount to be paid either in cash or yearly installments, in such sums as the Secretary of the Interior may consider for the best interests of said tribe of Indians: Provided, That in case the Secretary of the Interior does not see fit to pay the sum hereinbefore mentioned in cash, but considers it for the best interests of the Indians of said tribe to pay the same in yearly installments, he is hereby authorized and directed to expend such portion of the pro rata share of each Indian on the reserve, as his needs may require, in building, improving, and repairing the houses of such Indians, except as hereinafter agreed.

"ARTICLE V.

"The schools now located upon the above-named reserve are to be maintained in efficiency, as at present, so long as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior conditions demand the maintenance of such schools, not to exceed, however, the term of twenty years."

As to article 8, which is hereby rejected.

As to article 11, which is hereby rejected.

So as to make the section read:

That said agreement be, and the same hereby is, accepted, ratified, and confirmed, except as to articles 4 and 5 thereof, which are modified and changed so as to read as follows:

"ARTICLE IV.

"In consideration of the premises and the foregoing cession the United States agrees to pay to the said Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians the sum of $1,000,000, such amount to be paid either in cash or yearly installments, in such sums as the Secretary of the Interior may consider for the best interests of said tribe of Indians: Provided, That in case the Secretary of the Interior does not see fit to pay the sum hereinbefore mentioned in cash, but considers it for the best interests of the Indians of said tribe to pay the same in yearly installments, he is hereby authorized and directed to expend such portion of the pro rata share of each Indian on the reserve, as his needs may require, in building, improving, and repairing the houses of such Indians, except as hereinafter agreed.

"ARTICLE V.

"The schools now located upon the above-named reserve are to be maintained in efficiency, as at present, so long as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior conditions demand the maintenance of such schools, not to exceed, however, the term of twenty years."

As to article 8, which is hereby rejected.

As to article 11, which is hereby rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, this is an important bill, and I should like the Senator from North Dakota to make some explanation of it. I suppose he can make a brief one.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will make a brief explanation.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator has this bill been referred to the Department of the Interior?

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been so referred again and again.

Mr. SPOONER. And been recommended by the Department?

Mr. McCUMBER. It has been.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand the Senator can, without trouble, make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I can make a brief statement.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator from North Dakota allow me to make a short statement before he proceeds?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in 1881, I think it was, Secretary Schurz withdrew from the settlement laws a very large tract of territory in that section of the country, including the lands proposed to be ceded. The land had been so withdrawn, I think, a year or a year and a half when I became Secretary of the Interior. I secured a vacation of that order and opened the land to settlement. At that time there was pending in the Senate a bill to pay those Indians $4,000,000 for this same property. My recollection is that that bill had passed the House of Representatives; at all events, it had passed the committee and had the approval of the Interior Department. I thought the title of the Indians was somewhat uncertain because of the difficulty in determining where the lines of the several tribes came, and I asked the Senate to withhold action upon that bill, which the Senate did.

Now, I understand this is to close up the matter. There are some persons here who are opposing this bill and claiming that, instead of a million dollars, we ought to pay eight or ten million dollars for the land. It seems to me the best thing to do is to get rid of the controversy by the passage of this bill.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have considered the bill and put it as an item on the Indian appropriation bill; but in order to strengthen it, it was thought best to pass this bill.

The Senator from North Dakota may now make his explanation. He knows more about the matter than I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I can only add to what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has just said, that this covers a vast tract of land in some of the very best portions of the State of North Dakota. This land will average in value from fifteen to twenty-five dollars per acre, some of the land being worth less than $10 an acre, and some of it worth $30 an acre. There were about 10,000,000 acres that were claimed by the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, and a question arose as to their title. The then Secretary of the Interior, the present Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], held that whatever might be the result of an investigation as to their title, there was no necessity of holding this vast tract of land from settlement. So an executive order was made, setting aside two townships for a temporary reserve for the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas, the report of the Secretary recommending that the question of title be taken up at some other period.

Some two or three different commissions were appointed for the purpose of settling not only the question of title, but also the number of the Turtle Mountain Indians belonging to the American side. The first commission that was appointed succeeded in determining to their own satisfaction the number of Turtle Mountain Indians who were American Indians, and not Canadian Indians. They ascertained, I believe, that there were some 2,300 or 2,400 of them, whom they put on the rolls.

The commission of which I was a member was appointed by President Harrison in 1892. We were required to determine two things: First, the title of the Chippewa Indians to this entire tract of land or the extent of their title thereto, and also to make a roll of the American Chippewas and to eliminate from any previous roll such of the Canadian Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians as might be on it. We proceeded to do that, passing upon both the question of title and the question of who were Chippewa Indians of American extraction or birth.

We were rather strict in our holdings in reference to who were American Turtle Mountain Indians, and we excluded from the list any Indian who had lived for any portion of his life or had taken up his residence practically in Canada. We excluded those who had taken government lands under the Canadian laws in Canada, and we reduced the number to seventeen hundred and something—not quite 1,800—for the entire band. That constitutes the present roll.

It was then stated to us that there were a great many who were outside of North Dakota at that time who belonged, by reason of their relation to those who were American Indians, to that particular band, and though we did not claim that we had made up the entire list correctly we, I think, enumerated some seventeen hundred and sixty-odd Indians. Since that time there have been placed on that roll by those in charge of the reservation a number which would equal about 2,300 or 2,400 in the aggregate.

Now, I wish to call attention to some of these reservations, and especially to the cessions of lands which have been made between the Chippewas and the Sioux. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] understands that the great Chippewa Nation occupied the entire northern part of the Central States of the United States—in fact, all the way from the Delaware clear to the Missouri River—and the Sioux in Minnesota, western Wisconsin, southern Minnesota, and in North and South Dakota occupied a position directly south of the Chippewa Nation.

Now, when we commenced to secure cessions of lands from the Indians we, of course, took those cessions in slices from the east, going westward each time, all the way from 1782 up until 1863, which I think was the last cession of land by the Chippewas. There arose a question as between the Chippewas and the Sioux as to their own border line. They themselves settled that by an agreement between themselves. Commencing in the eastern part of Minnesota they followed a line by metes and bounds all the way through the State of Minnesota and clear on to the Missouri River, and declared that it should be the boundary line between the Chippewas and the Sioux.

Prior to that time the Chippewas had claimed south of this line in some places, and the Sioux had claimed a tract of territory north of it. I have prepared a little map here showing the several cessions of lands by the Chippewas and the Sioux, covering the western portion of Minnesota, the northern portion of South Dakota, and all of North Dakota.

We have here, in October, 1851, a cession by the Sioux whereby they granted this tract of territory [indicating] which I have marked here in black. They granted up to a certain river which they had agreed upon as being the boundary in Minnesota, which was the Buffalo River, that emptied into the Red River of the North, which is the boundary line between the Chippewas and the Sioux.

Then in 1867 the Sioux made another grant of their territory, following the same line exactly which had been agreed upon between the Chippewas and the Sioux, and they granted on February 19, 1867, by treaty, this tract of territory in both North and South Dakota, indicated on the map by the light-green or yellow-green color.

In 1863, almost at the same time, a grant was made by the Chippewas of a tract of land lying in Minnesota east of the Red River, and also in North Dakota west of the Red River, and they granted as far south as this line of demarcation [indicating]. At the same time that they granted this, in 1862, they reserved what they called their "pasture lands" west of this tract [indicating], which ran up clear to the Missouri River.

In 1868 the Sioux granted another tract to the Government of the United States, which is indicated by the dark blue on the map, and in that grant they followed this line of demarcation, of which I have already spoken, as the line between the Chippewas and the Sioux. Then again in 1868 the Sioux granted another tract of land, marked upon the map in pink.

Now, the line north of that and up to the Missouri River was a line that was agreed to in 1851 between the Mandans, the Arickarees, and the Grosventres on the Missouri River and the Sioux to the south, and the Sioux granted up to the territory claimed by the Mandans and the Arickarees, which dividing line had been agreed upon between those two nations.

When the agreement was made in 1868 again by the Mandans and the Arickarees, they granted up as far north as the line occupied by the Chippewas. Now, that left all of this tract [indicating] which is marked here in red as unceded land, and all of it was claimed by the Chippewas. There were some 10,000,000 acres of land. We investigated the title very thoroughly, coming to Washington and spending considerable time. We found that the Chippewas had always laid claim to this land [indicating] lying north of there [indicating] and north of that line [indicating] and that there was no dispute between them and the Sioux as to any tract north of the line which I have indicated here.

The number of Chippewas in that tract of land has been variously estimated. In 1851, when the treaty was made granting the land—the north portion of the Red River Valley, in the States of Minnesota and North Dakota—by Governor Ramsey, he estimated that there were only about 300 of the full-blood Chippewas west of there; but as a matter of fact there were a great many more half bloods or mixed bloods than there were full bloods west of that line. So I think it is safe to say there are at least twenty-five hundred Chippewas.

Now, their headquarters was at Turtle Mountain, a strip of mountain land on the border between North Dakota and Canada, about 75 miles in length and about 35 miles in width. That land consisted simply of timber land, of lakes and hills, with no tillable land whatever in that particular section of country, and none of it that could be used for agricultural purposes. That was the headquarters of Little Shell, the chief of the band of Turtle Mountain Chippewas, and his father and grandfather, and as far as we can go back, from time immemorial. There can be no question about the title, so far as these Chippewas are concerned. There is considerable question as to their number and the extent of their roaming over the other sections of this unceded land.

The fact still remains that this portion of the Chippewa's claim has never been ceded to the United States. It amounts to about 10,000,000 acres. It required a desperate effort to get them to make any kind of a treaty whatever with us. They had their attorneys there who claimed that they had title to 10,000,000 acres, and it certainly ought to be worth a dollar and a quarter an acre, or $15,000,000, and one of the attorneys has been down here for a great many years opposing this measure upon the ground that it is not proposed to pay enough. But the Committee on Indian Affairs, considering the number of Indians there, thought it was equitable and fair, and so this agreement has been confirmed by the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs several times.

I simply want to say in addition that these Indians knew that there was a claim that they did not own the land. So they have acted upon the theory that if they took any Government land in that section it would be equivalent to yielding their claim, and so all the full bloods have gone out of this reservation of two townships; and, by the way, there are only about twelve or thirteen thousand acres of land in those two townships that can be said to be agricultural land. They took up lands on the border. They did not file on them. They refused to file on them, claiming that they were their own; and they opened them up and settled on them. They commenced to raise crops. Ten years ago, when the treaty was made, we could have had all that land. At the present time every quarter section is taken right up to this reservation. Now settlers have gone on there, and you will find the claim shanty on the same quarter section that you find the Indian shanty.

I will give you a little instance to show you how necessary it is that we settle this thing at once. There was an Indian full blood who had cleared up 40 acres, moved the stone from it, broke it, and had cropped it. A settler came in last year, filed a homestead on it, and put in his crop last spring. He raised a crop this last fall, and harvested it, cut and shocked it. Every full-blooded Indian in that section of the country came over one Sunday with their teams and wagons and hauled away every shock on that place, as they did on several others. They were arrested and brought before a magistrate there.

Now, those Indians made this claim. They said: "Here, we have been docile. We have never been at war with the United States. We have been their scouts when they had wars with the Sioux. We have always been friendly to them. We have never received anything at their hands. On the other hand, the moment the Sioux raised in arms against the whites the Government went down in its pockets and paid them $2.50 to $3 per acre for their land." When they had the trouble over in Minnesota a few years ago at Leech Lake, the Indians saw they could not get any settlement until there had been bloodshed, and they reasoned, and reasoned properly, that the only way to get the Congress of the United States to look at their claims and go into the matter and to deal with them was to get into a war with them and then take their chances. So the Chippewas feel that perhaps this is their only hope.

When this man was arrested they all came armed to the courthouse, and the conditions were such that bloodshed would have followed had they attempted to punish this Indian. They are in a deplorable condition. The churches around there have been trying to support them. The white settlers have their land, and they are upon the same tract of territory. I think we can get this measure through at the present session of Congress, and if we get it through we will avert a great deal of trouble and have the matter fully disposed of before next spring, when the seeding commences. If the situation remains unchanged until that time, there is absolutely bound to be trouble there with those Chippewa Indians.

I can explain anything else about the matter that any Senator may desire.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, it is only fair to say that I think the Senator from North Dakota has abundantly vindicated the bill. I am glad to have his statement go into the RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. Thank you.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire of the Senator having charge of the bill whether or not, in his judgment, article 6 will result in the issuance of scrip or exchange rights on the part of the Indians.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly do not think so. I do not think there is anything in the bill that will authorize the issue of any scrip.

Mr. HEYBURN. The section reads:

> All members of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians who may be unable to secure land upon the reservation above ceded may take homesteads upon any vacant land belonging to the United States without charge.

It is without limitation.

Mr. McCUMBER. "Without charge."

Mr. HEYBURN. And "without charge." Under provisions of law nearly similar to these there has grown up a right to exchange the right to select lands; that is, to sell the right to select land, which is equivalent to a scrip right. This is rather a dangerous and unprotected clause:

> May take homesteads upon any vacant land belonging to the United States.

I do not know to what extent that might go. Suppose there were a large number of Indians who, for some reason, and no cause is specified in the bill, should conclude that they were unable to select homesteads within this tract, and preserved to themselves the right to make selections of homesteads anywhere on the public lands of the United States. Might they not sell that right unless there was some restriction in the act? May they not go into some other section of the country and select lands? If so, it is another roving commission to select land anywhere in the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. In answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Idaho, I will state that this is the present law, and this article is copied practically from the law as it now exists. Wherever allotments are granted Indians, no charge is made for them, and it is simply intended by this section that the Indians who can not obtain their allotments within those two townships may take homesteads upon Government land any place where they can find it. The only limit here intended is that they shall not be compelled to pay the $14 entry fee or any other fee. There can be no exchange of scrip.

I can say, also, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator, that perhaps 90 per cent of these Indians will have to go elsewhere to secure homes. At the time this treaty was entered into there was plenty of vacant land there to supply them all, but now, there being only about twelve or thirteen thousand acres of tillable land in the two townships, and all having been taken up outside of those two townships, they will have to go somewhere else. But I trust the Indian Bureau will find some place where they can locate and get Government claims. The result will be to destroy the tribal relations of the Turtle Mountain tribe, because the Indians will have to be scattered. The land is not there for them.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think there should be an amendment to the effect that this right existing in the Indian shall not be transferable.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not transferable by law anyway any more than any homestead right is transferable. A man can go upon the public domain and have a homestead, but he can not transfer that right under the law as it now exists, and I think the proposed amendment is wholly unnecessary, if the Senator will allow me to differ with him upon the necessity of the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Except that the Indian might be induced to commence to exercise a homestead right and commute, and this bill, as I understand from the statement of the Senator, affects a very large amount of land. The Indians might be used as instruments for commuting under the present system of law.

Mr. McCUMBER. These Indians have not yet been made citizens; they are wards of the Government at the present time, and therefore they could not make an assignment of their homestead entry or release without the consent of the Indian Department. So I think it is safeguarded. However, if the Senator can suggest an amendment which he thinks will make it better, I have no objection to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not seeking to raise any captious objections to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly understand that.

Mr. HEYBURN. But having recently had our attention called to an existing evil, under which lands in one State may be exchanged for lands in another by an assignee of a grantee of the Government, which has resulted in flooding certain sections with what is called "scrip," although it is not represented by scrip, but is merely a right of exchange, I think it well at this time to be very careful when you turn loose upon the market public lands amounting to some millions of acres.

Now, while it is true that the Indian is a ward, yet he is given by the terms of article 6 of the proposed act the rights of a homesteader, and it does not make any difference how much of a ward of the Government he is, his rights are coextensive with those of any other homesteader, and he should not be allowed to alienate those rights, because, if I am not mistaken, this affects some eight or nine million acres of land, and the next thing we know some assignee will be turning up at the land offices in our timber States seeking to use the rights of those Indians.

I have in mind a case in point where the name of a Sioux Indian (it was found afterwards that no such person existed) or his power of attorney was used in an attempt to take land which is now in the city of Wallace, in our State, and I can readily see that there is possibility of danger unless we limit the right to the Indian himself, taking away the right to alienate or to be represented by an attorney in fact in the exercise of the right, as was the case with the Sioux scrip. If the Senator will accept it, I will move an amendment to insert at the end of the article.

Provided, That the rights given to the Indians under the provisions of this section shall not be subject to alienation or representation by power of attorney.

I believe that will remove the possible difficulty.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have no objection at all to the amendment, because, as I have stated, I do not think he would have the power anyway, and I certainly do not object to its being made absolutely clear in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Will the Senator from Idaho please send to the desk his proposed amendment, that it may be read for the information of the Senate? Pending that, if there is no objection, the next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 3, page 9, line 3, after the words "sum of," to strike out:

Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, covering the five first annual installments, which sum shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

And insert:

One million three thousand dollars, to be expended as provided by Article IV of the treaty and section 2 of this bill.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,003,000, to be expended as provided by Article IV of the treaty and section 2 of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is suggested to the Senator from North Dakota that the word "bill" should read "act."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is right.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so corrected, if there be no objection.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs to the preamble was, on page 3, to strike out Article IV, as follows:

In consideration of the premises and the foregoing cession the United States agrees to pay to the said Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians the sum of $1,000,000, of which sum there shall be paid annually the sum of $50,000 for the period of twenty years, which sums shall be invested annually in food, clothing, bedclothing, houses, cattle, harness, all kinds of agricultural implements and farm machinery, and products for seed for husbandry, and such things as may be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, who shall have authority to direct such expenditures and at such times in the building, improving, and repairing of houses as the needs of the Indians on the above reserve may require, except as hereinafter agreed.

And to insert as new Article IV the following:

In consideration of the premises and the foregoing cession the United States agrees to pay to the said Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians the sum of $1,000,000, such amount to be paid either in cash or yearly installments, in such sums as the Secretary of the Interior may consider for the best interests of said tribe of Indians: Provided, That in case the Secretary of the Interior does not see fit to pay the sum hereinbefore mentioned in cash, but considers it for the best interests of the Indians of said tribe to pay the same in yearly installments, he is hereby authorized and directed to expend such portion of the pro rata share of each Indian on the reserve, as his needs may require, in building, improving, and repairing the houses of such Indians, except as hereinafter agreed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out Article V, as follows:

The schools now located upon the above-named reserve are to be maintained in efficiency as at present and increased as necessity may require.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The schools now located upon the above-named reserve are to be maintained in efficiency, as at present, so long as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior conditions demand the maintenance of such schools, not to exceed, however, the term of twenty years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out Article VIII, as follows:

ARTICLE VIII.

And in further consideration of the foregoing cession and stipulations, it is further stipulated that the 640 acres of land heretofore reserved to Red Bear, a Chippewa Indian, by the treaty between the United States and the Red Lake and Pembina bands of Chippewa Indians, concluded in Minnesota October 2, 1863, amended March 1, 1864, proclaimed May 5, 1864, be patented to Red Bear, a member of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewas, who is the only son and heir of the Red Bear named in the eighth article of the treaty above referred to and mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out Article IX, as follows:

It is mutually agreed that the sum of $5,000 of the $50,000 above stipulated be annually paid to the Turtle Mountain band of Indians in cash, and that said sum be distributed per capita.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. While the Senator from Idaho is preparing his amendment, I should like to move an amendment. In Article II, after the word "conveyance," line 9, I move to insert:

For the purposes mentioned in article 3 hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I have one more amendment. After the word "survey," on page 3, at the end of line 18, of Article III, I move to insert "and lands in said reservation which shall not be taken by said Indians within such time as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior after the ratification of this agreement may be opened for settlement as other public lands."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I submit an amendment to come in at the end of Article VI, on page 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of Article VI, page 5, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That such right of alternate selection of homesteads shall not be alienated or represented by power of attorney.

The amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4937) to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 4, line 12, in section 4, after the word "confinement," to strike out the words "and in irons, double or single, if, in his judgment, necessary;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That if any of the offenses herein described shall be committed on board a vessel of the Revenue-Cutter Service while she is upon the high seas, the commanding officer of such vessel shall have power to apprehend the offender and place him in confinement until such vessel arrives at some port of the United States within the jurisdiction of a court having cognizance of such offense.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. This bill comes from the Committee on Commerce?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISBRANDED SALMON FISH.

Mr. FULTON. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 220) prohibiting the introduction into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, from any other State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or from any foreign country, or shipment to any foreign country, any misbranded salmon fish prepared or intended for use as an article of food.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has once been in Committee of the Whole before, and was read in full. Is there objection to its consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with amendments, in section 1, on page 1, line 4, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or Alaska;" in line 5, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or Alaska;" on page 2, line 1, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or Alaska;" in line 2, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or Alaska;" in line 4, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or Alaska; and, in line 8, after the words "District of Columbia," to insert "or Alaska."

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 23, after the word "Territory," to insert "or District."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, immediately following the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly."

Mr. TELLER. Is the bill up?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is up. It is, however, open to objection at any time.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the Senator amending his bill as he wants it, and then I should like to look at it. The bill as reported to the Senate ought never to pass. It needs more amendment, I am afraid, than the Senator will give it, but I will refrain from objecting until the bill has been amended. Then I shall ask to have it printed so that we may see how it stands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other amendments submitted by the Senator from Oregon will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 2, following the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly"

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 4, page 2, after the word "having," insert the word "knowingly."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 7, page 2, after the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 10, page 2, after the "shall," insert the word "knowingly."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the bill be printed as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further amendments, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I thought I had objected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Wisconsin is that the amendments may be concurred in in the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, no, Mr. President; I asked that the bill be reprinted as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator. Objection being made, the bill goes over. The bill as amended will be printed.

HEWLETTE A. HALL.

Mr. BACON. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 463) to pay Hewlette A. Hall balance due for services in connection with the Paris Exposition. It is a bill reported from the Committee on Claims.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Hewlette A. Hall $1,583.35, being balance due of $2,000 promised him for services in connection with the Paris Exposition.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH E. JENKINS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 2876) for the relief of Sarah E. Jenkins.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 7, after the word "Navy," to strike out "an amount equal to" and insert "$4,896, being;" and in line 10, to strike out "that of," the first two words in the line; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Sarah E. Jenkins, of Maryland, daughter of the late Rear-Admiral Thornton A. Jenkins, United States Navy, $4,896, being the difference between the retired pay of a rear-admiral and the highest pay of that grade, from March 25, 1874, to June 30, 1877, in full compensation for the services of the late Rear-Admiral Thornton A. Jenkins, United States Navy, as commissioner and representative of the Navy Department at the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia, 1876.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIGHT VESSELS FOR THE PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4563) for the delivery on the Pacific coast of two light-vessels now being built in New York and New Jersey.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the light vessels now being built in New York and New Jersey shall be delivered to the inspector of the twelfth light-house district at San Francisco, and that the cost therefor shall be paid from the unexpended balances for building the relief light vessel for the twelfth and thirteenth light-house districts, the relief light vessel for the third light-house district, Five Fathom Bank light vessel, New Jersey; Cape Lookout Shoal light vessel, North Carolina; Heald Bank light vessel, off Cape Mendocino, California, Pacific Ocean; each of which appropriations was made in the sundry civil appropriation act approved on March 3, 1903.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONNECTICUT RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have got to leave the Senate. I ask unanimous consent therefore at this time that the bill (S. 4672) to authorize the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River may be considered.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its considereration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 4, after the word "shall," to strike out "alter" and insert "order."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 6, to insert the following as a new section:

SEC. 4. That all railroad companies desiring the use of said bridge shall have and be entitled to equal rights and privileges relative to the passage of railway trains over the same and the approaches thereto upon payment of a reasonable compensation for such use, or, in case of disagreement, upon such terms and conditions as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War upon hearing the allegations and proofs of the parties in interest.

The next amendment was, in section [4] 5, on page 3, line 23, after the word "right," to strike out "to construct a" and insert "of way across said bridge for;" and in line 24, after the word "postal-telegraph," to strke out "over said bridge without charge therefor" and insert "and telephone purposes; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That the bridge constructed, maintained, and operated under this act shall be known as a post-road, upon which no higher charge shall be made for the transportation over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United States than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over railroads or public highways leading to said bridge; and said bridge shall enjoy the rights and privileges of other post-roads in the United States, and the United States shall have the right of way across said bridge for postal-telegraph and telephone purposes; and equal privileges in the use of said bridge shall be granted to all telegraph and telephone companies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PURE-FOOD BILL.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire at this time to give notice that on next Monday, the 28th of March, I shall ask the Senate to take up House bill 6295, known as the "pure-food bill." The notice that I formerly gave having expired, I renew it.

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. Certain Senators who are not in the Chamber expect to propose some amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several amendments to be acted on.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that the bill is too important for so thin a Senate as I see now. I know certain Senators desire to be here when the bill is considered, and I suggest a call of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Alger,	Cullom,	Hopkins,	Newlands,
Allee,	Dillingham,	Kearns,	Overman,
Berry,	Dolliver,	Kittredge,	Penrose,
Beveridge,	Dubois,	Long,	Perkins,
Blackburn,	Fairbanks,	McComas,	Platt, Conn.
Burnham,	Foraker,	McCreary,	Quay,
Burrows,	Foster, Wash.	McCumber,	Scott,
Carmack,	Frye,	McEnery,	Simmons,
Clapp,	Gallinger,	Mallory,	Stewart,
Clark, Wyo.	Gorman,	Martin,	Teller,
Clarke, Ark.	Hale,	Morgan,	Warren,
Cockrell,	Hansbrough,	Nelson,	Wetmore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-eight Senators have responded to their names. There is a quorum present. There is pending, as in Committee of the Whole, to the amendment of the committee an amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 8, after the word "architects," strike out "to" and insert:

The successful architect shall receive compensation in full for plans, specifications, and detail drawings not to exceed 2½ per cent of the total cost of said building, and shall also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words regarding the amendment to the amendment. I have sought information as to the cost of the plans and supervision of public buildings when undertaken by the Supervising Architect's Office as compared with the cost when under the supervision of a private architect. I made inquiry of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury. I ask leave to put his communication upon this subject in the RECORD:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 11, 1904.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to office letter of the 10th instant, in reply to yours of the same date, I have the honor to state that in the endeavor to make a prompt reply a table made in 1902 was used without noticing that it was not an exact answer to your question (item No. 3), although it is correct taken in connection with the text of the letter of which it forms a part, copy of which was inclosed to you in office letter of March 10.

I now submit as a proper reply to item No. 3 the following table, with request that it be considered a substitute for that inserted on the first page of my letter above referred to:

Year.	Expended on construction.	Expended, Supervising Architect's Office.	Per cent.
1899	$2,520,367	$120,974	0.048
1900	3,214,545	136,045	.042
1901	5,444,408	152,363	.032
1902	3,924,618	161,369	.042
1903	4,765,763	184,306	.039

Under the heading "Expended on construction" is included the cost of construction of buildings exclusive of sites.

Under the heading "Supervising Architect's Office" is included the compensation of persons employed in making drawings, specifications, etc., being 70 per cent of the total pay roll, and includes cost of all such work as would be done by a private architect.

Respectfully, J. K. TAYLOR, Supervising Architect.

The Supervising Architect of the Treasury tells me that the cost of making drawings, specifications, etc., in his office has ranged during the past five years from about three and a half to over four and a half per cent of the total cost of construction. That has been the case during the past five years, and this cost covers what would otherwise be included in and covered by the fee of 5 per cent allowed to private architects. I do not understand what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] remarked the other day, that the payment to a private architect of 5 per cent on Government work is in addition to the expenditures incurred in the Supervising Architect's Office. On the contrary, the 5 per cent paid to a private architect includes and covers the expenses that would otherwise be incurred by the Supervising Architect, with the exception simply of the supervision on the Government's behalf by the Supervising Architect or some subordinate employed by him.

I am told also that with reference to the Government Printing Office the expenditures there on account of plans, draftsmen, supervision, etc., amount to over 5 per cent. I shall ask to insert in the RECORD a letter from——

Mr. TELLER. Let it be read.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Colorado asks to have the letter read, and I will send it to the desk.

Mr. HALE. I wish the Senator would state whom the letter is from.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is from the president and secretary of the American Institute of Architects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF ARCHITECTS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, THE OCTAGON,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1904.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Complying with your request, I beg to advise you that we have information from various architectural societies of the world on file at the Octagon, the offices of the American Institute of Architects. We have special information on government structures, and this data shows the following fees are charged by architects: England, 5 per cent on the cost; France, 5 per cent on the cost; Germany, 5 to 10 per cent on the cost; Italy, 8 per cent on the cost; Russia, 3 per cent on the cost; Switzerland, 5 to 8 per cent on the cost.

The architect invariably superintends these structures, and the government, in addition to the percentage, pays for a superintendent and an inspector, who shall remain constantly on the work. Draftsmen's service in Europe cost about one-third less than similar service in this country.

Communications have also been received from all architects in the United States who have constructed buildings which approximate Government buildings in size and character, and they all charge 5 per cent on the cost. They all testify that the cost of producing drawings, exclusive of superintendence and personal service, is never less than one-half of the fee received for their professional services, and frequently more than one-half.

We also have information from the office of the Supervising Architect, excluding the cost of sites, superintendence, and buildings erected under the Tarsney Act, and find that the cost of producing drawings in that office amounted to about 5 per cent on the total amount expended during the past three years. In this computation 30 per cent of the office expenses have been deducted to pay for purely departmental routine work.

The reports of the amounts expended on the Government Printing Office would indicate that drawings and superintendence cost 7½ per cent on the amount expended in the building.

We also have data from a large number of railway engineers and municipal engineers and find that the preparation of drawings and superintendence cost from 5 to 10 per cent of the cost of the work.

The fees enumerated cover the employment of an architect from the beginning to the completion of the enterprise, and it has been abundantly proved that only by the continuous supervision of the architect can satisfactory results be attained.

In considering this question it is to be remembered that the stroke of the pen of an inexperienced or incompetent man may increase the cost of a building unnecessarily by an amount beside which the architect's fee will dwindle into insignificance.

Yours, very truly, W. S. EAMES, President,
GLENN BROWN, Secretary,
American Institute of Architects.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, further, that it is the custom in the Supervising Architect's office whenever an appropriation is made for a public building, whether the construction of that public building is intrusted to a private architect or not, to set aside in the account of the cost 5 per cent for the purpose of covering plans, specifications, drawings, and supervision. So the custom of the Supervising Architect corresponds with the practice and the charge of the private architects of the country.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator means when the Supervising Architect takes charge of a building?

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Colorado inquires whether I mean that the statement covers the case where the Supervising Architect takes charge of a building, and my answer is, "Yes."

I telephoned to Mr. Bernard R. Green this morning regarding the average cost of plans, drawings, supervision, etc., of the Congressional Library building, and his answer was that the cost approximated 4 per cent. So here we have a difference of only 1 per cent between the charge imposed by architects of distinction on the outside and the actual cost where the plans and specifications and supervision are all under the direction of an employee of the Government.

It is also the statement of the Supervising Architect and of Mr. Bernard R. Green that the constant supervision of an architect is required in great works of the character now under contemplation—monumental works; that the plans themselves are really almost the least part of the work; that the work really commences after the plans are made; that constant supervision is required in the construction of the buildings in order to carry out the designs of the architect, and that the cost of this constant supervision is trifling as compared with the extra cost which may ensue from a lack of this supervision.

I will state that this whole matter can be carefully gone into, it seems to me, by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. They can take the testimony of the leading architects of the country; they can take the testimony of Mr. Bernard R. Green, of the Supervising Architect, and of Captain Sewell, who has charge of the Government Printing Office building, and in that way we can get down to a statement of what is a fair and reasonable charge for this service.

It seems to me it would be very unwise in this bill to so limit the compensation as to prevent the commission for which this bill provides, from securing the services of an architect of the highest standing. It should be remembered that the architect has to make a large outlay—from one-half to three-fifths of his total compensation—in paying draftsmen, designers, artists, and experts. His own profit is the smaller part of the percentage hereceives.

Mr. President, there was another matter that came up in the discussion the other day to which I wish to refer. I shall not refer to it at great length, for I know the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. FAIRBANKS] is anxious to proceed with and to finish the consideration of this bill to-day, but there appear in the RECORD of the last debate certain statements regarding the services of the firm of McKim, Mead & White which do them great injustice.

In the course of that debate I insisted upon it that we owed a debt of gratitude to those architects for maintaining the individualized appearance of the White House; that the temptation presented to a great architect would be to create something himself, instead of to restore, according to the original designs, something that had been already created.

We were told by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that the law itself compelled the restoration of the White House according to the original plan, and that the credit was due to the law and not to the architects. I have to say, with reference to that, that the law is contained in an appropriation bill. I have looked over that bill, and I find no directions whatever as to the methods to be pursued regarding the plan. There is an appropriation of a considerable sum, to be expended under the direction of the President.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Does the Senator from Colorado wish to interrupt me?

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Senator tell us, before he gets through, what particular part, save the exterior of the White House, those architects have preserved? They have added to it what I think is a monstrosity; they have destroyed the original building, and inside they have entirely changed it, so far as I have been able to observe.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, in the first place——

Mr. TELLER. They have possibly left one room, what we call the East Room; but they have overhauled that to such an extent that I think it has destroyed its beauty, at least.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think that others will differ from the Senator from Colorado in that view. I assume that it was conceded in the last debate that, so far as the White House is concerned, everything was most creditable and that the only criticism was directed toward the Executive office.

Mr. TELLER. I am not willing to concede that myself. I think it is most absurd. I may not be so good a judge as is the gentleman to whom the Senator refers; but I have yet to find anybody who has been inside of the White House with whom I have discussed the question, unless it may be the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], who has not entertained the same opinion that I have.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That has not been my experience.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to take that question up at some time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. This question of taste or of judgment is one that can hardly be settled upon the floor of the Senate. I imagine the best way would be to obtain the opinion of competent experts on that subject if there is any doubt in the mind of the Senate.

Mr HALE. The easiest way, undoubtedly, would be to leave it all to the architects.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is the easiest way.

Mr. HALE Undoubtedly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. And the best way.

Mr. HALE. No doubt the Senator believes that the easiest and best way would be to leave it all to the architects.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The best way would be to leave it to the architects and artists of the country, and I have no doubt we should then have a very much better judgment than can be exercised by the men of this body, untrained as we are in this great art.

Mr. TELLER. If I may be allowed to enter into the Senator's speech, I should like to say that if that work represents the judgment of the architects, and what the Senator calls "the best taste of the country," I am greatly mistaken.

Mr. NEWLANDS. As I said before, that is something which we can not settle by debate upon this floor.

I merely wish to call attention to certain inaccuracies of statement in the last debate. It was insisted upon that the law itself compelled the restoration of the White House according to the original plan. I have examined that law, and there is nothing to that effect. So the Senator from Iowa was mistaken when he insisted on that.

The Senator from Maine also insisted upon it that if it had not been for the action of the committee of conference the White House would have been practically despoiled. Let me quote his words upon this subject. He says:

> The subcommittee waited upon the President. * * * I may say an adjuration was imposed upon the President that this man McKim should not be allowed in any way to interfere with the architectural beauty of the White House, and the only man from whom any danger was contemplated as likely to arise was this same architect.

Then he goes on to say that had not the committee jealously guarded the building—> it would have been stripped, dismantled, ransacked, changed and perverted, and practically destroyed if we had let it go into the hands of the architect.

So I assume from this that the Senator from Maine, at all events, did not think that as a matter of fact the White House had been stripped, dismantled, ransacked, changed, and perverted, but that all this had been averted by the action of the committee of conference; that the work on the White House was good work and was the result of the action of the committee of conference, and not of the action of this architect. Regarding that, I have to say that the RECORD shows that from the start the idea, and the only idea, of Mr. McKim was to restore the White House according to the designs and the general plans of the original architect, and to expurgate all the heresies in architecture that meanwhile had been produced there.

We find in the report of the architects regarding the White House that they first quote the act authorizing them to go on with the restoration, and then they state their purpose, which was:

> First. To make the White House structurally sound.
> Second. To relieve the White House of the executive offices, which had so encroached upon the space as to diminish the residence portions of the house to an unreasonable and abnormal extent.
> Third. To make a rearrangement of the White House space so as to permit the comfortable and dignified entertainment of such number of guests as a house of that size might reasonably be called upon to accommodate.
> The first aim, therefore, was to discover the design and intention of the original builders, and to adhere strictly thereto, in so far as the public or state portions of the house were concerned; and then to make the apartments reserved for private or family uses comfortable, according to modern requirements and standards.

I am told that most diligent search was made for the original plans and drawings regarding this building, and those original plans and drawings developed the fact that upon each side of the White House was the arcade which has now been restored, and part of the remnants or ruins of the east arcade were found in the glass convervatory, which was destroyed under their direction.

Now, with reference to the offices they say in their report:

> To construct within those grounds a building sufficiently large and imposing to stand as permanent offices would be to detract from the White House itself so seriously as to be absolutely out of the question. The one possible solution, therefore, was to occupy the only available space with a temporary building which should be comfortable within and inconspicuous in appearance, leaving Congress at its leisure to take up seriously the question of a permanent, adequate, and thoroughly dignified office for the Chief Executive.

They then quote their original estimate made to Congress, the very estimate upon which the Appropriations Committee acted in the law which has been referred to by the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Iowa; and that estimate clearly calls for—I will quote it:

> Provision for temporary quarters for the executive offices is comparatively a simple matter. A building of brick, one story high, and containing from 50 to 75 per cent more room than the offices now occupy, can be constructed in the grounds of the White House opposite the entrance to the Navy Department. The building would take the place now occupied by a brick wall which screens a number of hothouses and forcing beds for plants, functions which may well be provided for elsewhere, in connection with the propagating gardens.

It then goes on to state what the temporary building would include, and makes an estimate for the cost of this temporary building, exclusive of furniture, of $33,000.

I have had this building cubed, and I find that it is a little over 100 feet long, 50 feet wide, and over 30 feet high, and that it contains between 180,000 and 200,000 cubic feet. There is not a man who is familiar with building who does not know that ordinary suburban building of frame costs from 22 cents to 25 cents a cubic foot. This building cost not to exceed 25 cents a cubic foot. It was intended to be a temporary building, and was and is a temporary building.

It is true that the Committee on Appropriations, when it came to consider this measure, added $10,000 to the estimate, but it is simply, as stated in the law, for the purpose of making the walls more durable. I quote from the appropriation act:

> And said building shall be constructed with sufficient foundation and walls suitable for a durable, permanent building, and of sufficient strength for an additional story when needed.

If the Committee on Appropriations desired a permanent building to be constructed there, it was incumbent upon them to make a sufficient appropriation, and the appropriation should have been at least 75 cents or a dollar a cubic foot for such work as goes into these great ornamental, monumental buildings. As it was, they added only $10,000, and they simply stipulated that the walls should be sufficient for a permanent, durable building. They did not say that the building itself should be permanent; on the contrary, they contemplated changes in the form of the construction itself when they suggested that an additional story should be added.

The work of these architects came within the appropriation. The cost of this building was about $45,000, an average of about 25 cents per cubic foot, about the cheapest kind of construction that is known. It was impossible for them, within the limits of the appropriation, to make any better showing than has been made and at the same time to give the space that is absolutely essential for the executive offices.

Right there in that suggestion of the law comes the difference between the legislative mind and the artistic mind as to what the character of the building adjoining the White House should be. These architects in their report refer to this stipulation in the appropriation bill that the walls should be of such weight and permanence as to support an additional story, and say that they hope that an additional story will never be put upon this building, for that, of course, would be to subordinate, to that extent, the White House, and the controlling principle of its construction was to make it as inconspicuous as possible.

If the Congress does wish Executive offices of sufficient durability and dignity to be constructed, it is easy enough to do it by appropriating sufficient money. If Congress concludes that the present location is the best for those offices, it will be easy enough to construct to the south of this building an additional building of marble or white stone, a permanent building, put the President's offices there, and then tear down the existing building, or keep the latter for the clerical force, facing it with marble or white stone, using the same material as in the new building, and connecting it with the new building by a passageway such as connects the Senate wing with the main or central building of the Capitol. This would be much better, according to the view of architects, than to put a second story on the existing building. But such a work would probably cost $150,000 or $200,000 if you wish to make it compare in material durability and decoration with the monumental work of public buildings in this city.

So it seems that it was clearly contemplated at the very start by these architects that they should pursue the original plans; that they should carry them out; that they should simply take away what is false in art that had been introduced during the intermediate time by supervising architects and builders and contractors, for all of them had a shy at this.

Since the classic simplicity of our early public architecture, the architecture of Washington's and Jefferson's time, we have had the Pullman-car era in architecture, we have had the steamboat era in architecture, and we have had the Hoffman House era in architecture—these very brilliant displays of glass and light and everything of that kind. But I am glad to say there has has been a renaissance in art since that intermediate time; and this building, I firmly believe, has been built according to the best rules of this reformed art, which has simply meant the return to the simplicity and dignity of earlier days. At all events, it was clearly contemplated that the architects should stand by the original plans as to the White House itself, and that these Executive offices should be quickly and inexpensively constructed to meet the pressing requirements of the President.

The President was eager to get into these offices, so that the public business could be transacted without inconvenience; he wanted to have a home, and the whole country wanted him to have a home, not to be invaded for purposes of business. So it was necessary to construct them in the short space of four and a half months; to have taken longer would have been to the injury of the public business. I insist upon it that these architects did the very best thing that could be done under the circumstances.

It is easy enough for Congress, if it wants a permanent and durable and monumental building there, to construct it. I trust, however, that Congress will carry out the views of these architects and make this building as inconspicuous and as unobtrusive as possible.

I have no doubt that it would gratify some to see a Chinese pagoda there, to see a big dome, to see minarets and towers, to see the roof colored sky blue and the cornice red—anything that is brilliant and conspicuous—but I submit that people of good taste will be better satisfied if this building is so inconspicuous and so unobtrusive that its existence will hardly be observed; and that will be the highest triumph of art.

I will read a little further from the report of the architects on this matter:

> The preliminary survey contemplated merely putting the house in order and making it safe. There was no consideration given at that time to more ample provision for large dinners and for accommodations for the large public receptions. A study of the historic White House, however, and the discovery in the Library of Congress of old prints and plans of the house show that by a return to the original design the White House can be put into such a condition that it will serve every use intended for many years to come, and that the increased demands for room in the house can be met in a dignified and satisfactory manner at a cost which is small when compared with the cost either of a new residence or of additions to the present building, both of which projects are objectionable from many points of view.

They go on to say:

> The principles on which the restoration would be done are these:
> To put the house in the condition originally planned, but never fully carried out.
> To make the changes in such manner that the house will never again have to be altered—that is to say, the work should represent the period to which the house belongs architecturally, and therefore be independent of changing fashion.

It is very natural for the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Iowa to fall into error regarding this plan and to charge Mr. McKim with responsibility for plans that had been made prior to his employment, but I think the confusion in their minds arises from this: It is true that during Mr. Harrison's Administration Mrs. Harrison had a plan for the enlargement of the White House—a very handsome plan and a very ambitious plan—which involved the addition of wings fully as large, I believe, as the White House itself.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, nearly as large. That is my recollection, for I saw the design.

The design was a good one, but it was not the old White House; it was a new creation. The old White House was almost lost in the new structure. That plan was under consideration for some time.

Then, later on, Colonel Bingham took up the work when he became superintendent of public buildings and grounds, and, with the aid of a draftsman and designer in his office, he presented a plan even more ambitious, with wings adjoining and magnificent domes upon each side. In those plans the White House was subordinated to the new structure. They were presented to the consideration of the American Institute of Architects, which happened to be in session at Washington, at the White House upon the invitation of President McKinley. The plans met the disapproval of the American Institute of Architects, who passed resolutions in which they expressed their wish that the old simplicity and dignity of the White House should be maintained and that no structure should be put there which would subordinate it, which would make it the inferior structure. They declared against all these plans.

So it seems that prior to the propaganda of which the Senator from Maine speaks—the propaganda conducted by the conference committee, I believe, of the Committee on Appropriations—and before they had adjured the President not to permit any deviation from the original plans, this movement was at work, and it was a movement that was inaugurated by the American Institute of Architects, which has been under such criticism here. Later on the President called into consultation Mr. McKim, and Mr. McKim presented the plans which have been carried out.

Mr. McKim never contemplated the erection of a structure there that would destroy the old White House or subordinate it. He never for a moment contemplated anything but the restoration of the old dignity and simplicity of the White House. He never contemplated putting up any structure there which would be a monument to his genius or talent, but simply in the short space of four months and a half such an additional structure as was absolutely necessary to meet the wants of the President and which would be as unobtrusive and inconspicuous as possible.

So I claim that my remark in the preceding debate, to the effect that we owe these architects a debt of gratitude for the practical restoration of the old White House and the carrying out of the original plans and designs, is borne out by the record in this case, and that the structure as it exists to-day was not either compelled by the law or controlled by the committee of conference. Their remarks to the President were simply confirmatory of the plans he had had in his own mind as the result of his conference with Mr. McKim and Mr. McKim's advice.

Mr. President, I have taken up quite a long time with the consideration of this matter, which is really extraneous to the pending bill, and I beg pardon of the Senator from Indiana for detaining the Senate so long. But it does seem to me that when great artists do a great work for the public in an unaffected and self-effacing way, their action should not be the subject of mistaken representation here and that they should receive here the vindication they deserve.

I ask leave to insert as an appendix to my remarks an extract from the report of the architects concerning the work of repairing and refurnishing the White House and the erection of the Executive Office building.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> [Extract from architects' report in Senate Document No. 197, Fifty seventh Congress, second session, entitled "Restoration of the White House." Message of the President transmitting the report of the architects, McKim, Mead & White.]
> These problems may be stated briefly as follows:
> First. To make the White House structurally sound.
> Second. To relieve the White House of the Executive offices, which had so encroached upon the space as to diminish the residence portions of the house to an unreasonable and abnormal extent.
> Third. To make a rearrangement of the White House space so as to permit the comfortable and dignified entertainment of such number of guests as a house of that size might reasonably be called upon to accommodate. This was perhaps the most imperative as well as the most perplexing problem. The perils to health, and even to life itself, of the exposure of large numbers of people on the unsheltered north portico during occasions of public receptions, the use of a window exit, the enforced giving up of a considerable portion of the main floor to dressing rooms—all these things had combined to bring about a strong demand for some change for the better.
> Fourth. To provide the White House with a state dining room of dimensions sufficient to enable the President to entertain at table on occasion about 100 guests.
> Fifth. To remove such excrescences as had been allowed to accumulate about the White House to the detriment of its fine architectural features and its dignity as the home of the President of the United States.
> Recognizing the feeling prevalent among the people, you stipulated that none of the essential features of the White House should be sacrificed in the restoration; that the nation's historic house should be left intact, and that even the state rooms should continue to be known by the names made familiar by long usage. These limitations—if limitations they can be called—were welcomed, because among no class of the people was the feeling for the historic White House stronger than among the members of the profession of architecture. The first aim, therefore, was to discover the design and intention of the original builders, and to adhere strictly thereto in so far as the public or state portions of the house were concerned; and then to make the apartments reserved for private or family uses comfortable, according to modern requirements and standards.

TEMPORARY EXECUTIVE OFFICES.

Obviously the first step was to find some place other than the White House for the Executive offices. Every suggestion for the location of a permanent office building was open to some objection that seemed insuperable. No location outside the White House grounds could be decided upon and secured in the short time available. To construct within those grounds a building sufficiently large and imposing to stand as permanent offices would be to detract from the White House itself so seriously as to be absolutely out of the question. The one possible solution, therefore, was to occupy the only available space with a temporary building, which should be comfortable within and inconspicuous in appearance, leaving Congress at its leisure to take up seriously the question of a permanent, adequate, and thoroughly dignified office for the Chief Executive.

The statement made to Congress when the appropriation came before the Senate was as follows:

"The problem of the location of a permanent building for the offices of the President involves many considerations as to the amount of accommodation needed and the scope and variety of the functions to be carried on in such a building. Provision for temporary quarters for the Executive offices is comparatively a simple matter. A building of brick, one story high, and containing from 50 to 75 per cent more room than the offices now occupy, can be constructed in the grounds of the White House opposite the entrance to the Navy Department. The building would take the place now occupied by a brick wall which screens a number of hothouses and forcing beds for plants, functions which may well be provided for elsewhere, in connection with the propagating gardens.

"The temporary building would include:

"1. A Cabinet room.
"2. President's office and retiring room.
"3. Offices for two secretaries.
"4. A telegraph and telephone room.
"5. A large room for the stenographers.
"6. A room for the press.
"7. A main hall to be fitted as a reception room.
"8. File rooms and closets in the basement."

Congress stipulated that the walls should be sufficient to carry a second story, and increased the appropriation by $10,000 for this purpose. Accordingly the walls were strengthened to meet this requirement. It is to be hoped, however, that no increase in height will be permitted, because of the injury that would result to the White House.

Of the total amount available, $6,000 was assigned to the superintendent of public buildings and grounds for inspection and for the removal of the greenhouses. The cost of the building alone was $45,126.75, and $14,054.77 was expended on furniture, carpets, rugs, electric lighting, and other fixtures. The work began on the approval of the sundry civil act, June 20, 1902, and the building was completed on the 29th day of the following September, although it was not occupied until about the middle of October, the postponement being made for the purpose of securing perfect drying.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is in the right direction, but it does not cover all that should be covered before this subject passes from the attention of the Senate. From the observation of Senators in the past and the debate here it is disclosed that Congress is now confronted not simply with the question of the erection of a single building in one place, but of some marked and defined and large plan under which costly buildings for the use of the Government will hereafter be erected in Washington. For one I do not and shall not consent that anything be done until the whole subject is investigated, until it is seen at what reasonable expense desirable property to a large extent can be purchased, and I shall insist that nothing further be done until an examination is made and a report is submitted to Congress upon some large plan which will involve the erection upon Government property of the numerous public buildings which will be required in the course of the next twenty years.

And in considering that question the subject of the intrusion of the architect should also be considered, and no step should be taken and no contract should be made with any architect until reports are made to Congress at the next session of Congress covering that as well as the question of the location of public buildings. So I repeat the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is in the right direction, but does not sufficiently provide for and guard the future.

Now, as to the points which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has raised here with reference to the connection of the architect with the White House establishment and the office near by, nothing that I said the other day or that the Senator from Iowa said the other day—and I know I speak for him as well as for myself—will be withdrawn. The committee had to stand jealously over every step that was taken with reference to the work on the White House to see that the architect did not practically destroy the whole effect, the fine effect, the beautiful effect of that building. The architect was opposed to the erection of any building for an office for the President, for the reason that at that time the scheme which the Senator from Indiana now fathers, and which provides for a public building on the farther side of the square—I say provides for its building there because everybody understands it will go there if this bill passes——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I do not know the basis of the Senator's belief that it will go there if this bill passes. The Senator understands very well that the Commission is given authority by the bill to consider a number of sites, this being one of the number. I certainly would strongly favor its going there.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. But whether the Commission would favor its location there, I do not know.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is very frank about it, and that tells the whole story. But the original scheme was that this immense building—the largest in range upon the ground of any in Washington and the most expensive, not containing the most room and the most facilities for public business, but the largest in range spread upon the ground—should contain not only the two Departments provided for there, but the Presidential offices. The scheme was grand. It was to give an entire floor of this immense building to the President's offices and to put him into a building where two other Departments of the Government were engaged in doing their work, so that he would be at all times open to the visit of everybody who went to the building in connection with other Departments. That was the scheme of the architect, and the architect stood resolutely against everything which interfered with it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Maine whether he intends to say it is a scheme of Mr. McKim to put the President's offices over in that building?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Is not the Senator from Maine aware that the architect of that building is a Mr. Post, of New York, and not Mr. McKim?

Mr. HALE. It is a question of one architect or another, and all the architects who go to make up the general association of architects—I do not know what it is called—work together. But that was the scheme.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit another interruption, let me say that in conversation with Mr. McKim upon this subject he said that it was the idea of the President in the first instance to have the Executive offices away from the old White House.

Mr. HALE. It was.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But that subsequently he changed his mind.

Mr. HALE. The President abandoned it——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Absolutely abandoned it.

Mr. HALE. Not at the incitation of Mr. McKim. Of course I do not know who spoke to the President. I know what did occur.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Maine whether he thinks Mr. McKim was engaged in an effort to persuade the President to move the Executive offices over to that corner and to locate them in the building which was designed by Mr. Post? Does not the Senator think it much more reasonable that Mr. McKim was simply pursuing the directions the President had in his own mind regarding the location of the Executive offices?

Mr. HALE. I do not know upon that point and I do not care. I am going to recite what the committee had to do in order to protect the situation.

The joint committee of the two Houses, acting together, visited the White House and went over the ground, and protested to the President that the architect should not be allowed in any way to interfere with the simplicity and the grandeur of the White House; not a great, immense, massive structure, but simple and grand in its smaller details.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator whether or not, prior to the time when the committee made that visit, there had been any action on the part of Congress authorizing the reconstruction of the White House?

Mr. HALE. It was all comprehended in the provision which I propose to read from the appropriation act. The joint committee upon it was the committee that visited the President. It was all done on the appropriation bill.

Mr. BACON. I understand that, but I want to know whether that provision in the appropriation bill was subsequent to the visit that the Senator speaks of?

Mr. HALE. My impression is that the final phrasing of the provision and putting it into form by the committee may have been subsequent to the visit, or there may have been more than one visit. But it was the result of what the committee considered the danger we were under that there would be bold and unwise innovations in that building.

Mr. BACON. The particular inquiry that I desire to address to the Senator is whether it is not true that this work was undertaken and designed prior to any action by Congress authorizing the reconstruction of the building?

Mr. HALE. I do not know——

Mr. BACON. Is it not true that the visit was due to the fact that information came to members of the committee that this work was about to be undertaken?

Mr. HALE. Oh!

Mr. BACON. And that subsequent to that time provision was made in the appropriation bill for carrying it out?

Mr. HALE. If the Senator means that the scheme for entirely going over the White House and making changes there was in the minds of other persons before it came to the Committee on Appropriations, that is true, undoubtedly.

Mr. BACON. Is it not true that the architect was engaged and on his work before there was any authorization by Congress?

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt whatever of that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit an interruption, I will state that the entire design by this architect was before the Appropriations Committee when this appropriation was made. I have in my hand the original design of this office, which is marked "Temporary Executive Offices," and the estimates upon which your committee acted show that they simply contemplated a restoration of the White House, and not a new and original structure.

Mr. HALE. I want to comment, by and by, upon the impudence of the architect who, in the face of the act of Congress, persisted in declaring that this office should be only a temporary office. Congress did not provide that and did not intend that. It did not intend that great space should be given in another building far away, but that suitable and commodious quarters for a permanent establishment of the Executive offices should be made; and to prove that, this is the language which, after these conferences with the President, the committee finally put into the bill:

For a building to accommodate the offices of the President, to be located in the grounds of the Executive Mansion, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, including heating apparatus and light fixtures, furniture, and removal of greenhouses, all to be done according to plans the details of which shall be approved by the President—

That was put in because the committee had adjured the President, and he had declared to us in terms and in his characteristic manner that if he had to sit up nights he would see to it that the rude hand of no architect was laid upon that building. So we put in the provision:

the details of which shall be approved by the President and completed in every respect within the sum hereby appropriated, $65,196—

Now, why so large? Because the design of the committee—the design adopted by Congress—was not what the architect impudently thrusts upon us as a transient, temporary building, but a permanent building, one story of which was to be built at the time and the other afterwards. Now, let me go on—to be expended by contract or otherwise, in the discretion of and under the direction of the President—

Again we were very careful to limit that—and to be immediately available, and said building—

That is, the office—

shall be constructed with sufficient foundation and walls suitable for a durable, permanent building, and of sufficient strength for an additional story when needed.

I know something about this, because I had something to do with drawing that provision, and I knew if we did not do that and did not put it in the act the architect, who was determined that there should be no permanent office there, would put up such a building that he could declare thereafter that it could not be increased and that another story could not be added to it. That is why we followed this thing up and were compelled to follow it up; and to-day there are thrust before us a programme and sketches and drawings for a temporary office. I do not like to see Congress dealt with in that way.

Whether it be an architect, or a contractor, or whoever it may be, it is the business of anybody executing the law of Congress to conform to it and carry it out, and not to continue to harbor and lurk privily with his own designs in order to ineffectuate everything that Congress does.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I assume the Senator will admit that if the Committee on Appropriations contemplated a durable and permanent building of a monumental character, it was necessary for them to make a sufficient appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. Who has said anything about a building of a monumental character?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is talking the jargon of the architect. I have not said anything about a building of a monumental character. It needs to be a plain, distinct, modest building of two stories, which will not in any way interfere with the President, with none of the roseate colors that the Senator has pictured, and without minarets and domes and all that. That the committee had nothing whatever to do with. It ought to be a a plain, modest structure; and instead of its being confined and the President being put down on the ground, right on the floor, he should be put up on the upper floor, and the lower floor should be used for clerks and offices. It should be a place where, when we visit the President, we will not have to be put in holes and corners, as all of us are. But the architect does not want that. He never did want that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit another interruption?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the fact that while the committee provided that the building should be a structure "with sufficient foundation and walls suitable for a durable, permanent building, and of sufficient strength for an additional story when needed," they certainly did not at that time contemplate a completed building.

Let me add that the architect has provided durable walls; that they are permanent, and that they are of sufficient strength for an additional story when needed. All that the architect says is that it will be an architectural defect if the additional story is added.

As to my remark regarding the monumental character of the building, that was provoked by the general criticism of the design, the assumption that the offices were inferior in appearance, not partaking of the general character of the public buildings of this city, and my answer to that is that it could have been secured if the committee of which the Senator is a member had provided a sufficient appropriation. The appropriation asked for was only $33,000 for a temporary building, and the Appropriations Committee added $10,000 to that, and it was simply contemplated to make a strong foundation and durable and strong walls, all of which was done by Mr. McKim. So there is no criticism to be indulged in against the architect for his alleged failure to comply with the directions of the committee or of the law. They have been complied with to the letter. The point is that the architects designed simply temporary offices and asked an appropriation of $33,000. The committee added $10,000 for the purpose or making strong foundations and walls. This has been done. The building is durable enough; but owing to the small appropriation is not of the same standard in material and decoration as other public buildings, and hence it must be regarded as a temporary device to meet an emergency.

Mr. HALE. Only as I have said; it was intended to be a permanent structure. We thought we would put on one story and see how it would work. Everybody has seen that it does not work. There is not room enough there. But a moderate story, plain, can be superimposed upon the present building, with no decorations, no spires, no false coloring, which will give ample accommodations for the President and all his offices for forty years to come. That was the design of the committee—to try one story. If we had not put on the provision I have read, the architect would have built a building on which he would have told us it was impossible to superimpose another story.

I wish to say a few words on the general claim that the Senator makes and the architects' association makes for large fees for all public buildings. I make no war upon architects. Where we maintain a very large Supervising Architect's force, whose only purpose and whose only work is to make plans and prepare for public buildings by sketches and plans, and to control it and manage it and see that it is done according to the law, I do not think an architect should come in and charge what he charges a private individual or a railroad company or an association or an insurance company that builds a building and has no such force as we have.

By the way, I had an experience illustrating this. The Supervising Architect's Office is under the control of a very competent gentleman. Of course he is an architect, and when the architects lay down to him fees he will not report against his fellow associates. But he has a very large office, and this year he wanted more, and at his request, in company with the Assistant Secretary, when I had charge of the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, I visited the Treasury Department to see what was needed. We gave him additional room and additional force to do this very work of preparing plans and supervising the construction of Government buildings.

I find here, on page 17 of the legislative act just passed, a provision for the Supervising Architect, with his assistants, messengers, etc., and it provides for a general force, including draftsmen, engineers, computers, accountants, copyists, and all that.

And the services of skilled draftsmen, civil engineers, computers, accountants, assistants to the photographer, copyists, and such other services as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary and specially order, may be employed in the office of the Supervising Architect exclusively to carry into effect the various appropriations for public buildings, to be paid for from and equitably charged against such appropriations: Provided, That the expenditures on this account for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, shall not exceed $350,000.

We are keeping up, and have kept up, and will keep up, a force in the Supervising Architect's Office to do all this work, which force until a few years ago, until the Tarsney Act—and nobody knew how far it would go, nobody knew when it was passed what would be claimed for the act—did all this and did it well. There was no objection found with the erection of buildings throughout the United States under the Supervising Architect, but at that time, without much heat, without scrutiny enough, Congress passed the so-called "Tarsney Act," which was never intended to substitute and to make additional to all this force an outside architect for every public building. It was only supposed that it would apply in a minor degree in certain cases. Now, no building anywhere can be erected by the Government, paid for by the Government, plans made by the Government—if this great force is doing anything in the Supervising Architect's Office—unless there is some professional architect who gets his big fees.

I quoted the other day from the report of the House committee——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Nevada will excuse me. I quoted the other day from the report of the House committee on the urgent deficiency bill, showing where $500,000, or about that, was given by Congress for an extension to the insane asylum across the river. It was not difficult work. The Supervising Architect's Office could have done the whole of it easily. But a firm of architects was employed. They charged $9,000 for the plans. Then they charged their percentage on the whole contract, and then a percentage on every payment on the contract, and they drew out of the Treasury $47,000 as their fee. Now, you can not make me believe, and the Senator who is enamored of architects and sees nobody else, who is enamored of all the schemes and plans of the architects, can not make me believe that that was necessary.

Before this bill passes from the supervision of the Senate there will be amendments offered which will restrict and constrain not only the architects, but everybody else. We ought not now, meeting, as we do, the opportunity for acquiring at a reasonable expense a great tract of land on the south side of the avenue and changing it from a rookery of old buildings to the site of magnificent public buildings, to let it pass unavailed of. We ought not to provide for dumping down a public building anywhere else until we get a report from some suitable commission telling us what that triangle will cost; and then, when that is done, at the next session of Congress—I hope I have not gone into this thing superficially—what the Senate ought to do is to provide a special committee to take this matter in charge.

These things do not come especially under any one committee. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds deals with the general question of public buildings and grounds throughout the country. Not a single building that I know of has been built in Washington in the last ten years under the control of that committee. Neither does the District Committee seek to do that.

There ought to be a committee made up of such Senators as the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, for the District is interested in this matter; the Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS], who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and who is a conservative, careful man; the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]; the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who has had long service here, and other Senators. They ought to take this whole matter in charge and report to Congress a plan upon which we can begin to construct buildings on the lower side of the Avenue; and then the question of the architects' fees will come up also. But we ought not to be hurried along and driven to pass a bill of this kind, putting up an immense structure on the western side of that park, when we ought to put everything that is built hereafter for the next thirty years on the land below the Avenue.

Mr. STEWART obtained the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. CHARLES WINSTON THOMPSON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message also announced that the Speaker had appointed Mr. WILEY of Alabama, Mr. CLAYTON, Mr. BOWIE, Mr. PADGETT, Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, Mr. LITTLEFIELD, Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin, Mr. DARRAGH, Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, Mr. HILL of Connecticut, Mr. SCARBOROUGH, Mr. SOUTHARD, Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina, Mr. HOUSTON, and Mr. AIKEN members of the committee on the part of the House.

BUILDING FOR DEPARTMENT OF STATE, ETC.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech, but I rose to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to several sample buildings here which were constructed before the war. Why is it that the general style of our buildings has so much fallen off from the ancient model? I refer to the Treasury Department building, the Patent Office building, and the old Post-Office building opposite the Patent Office.

Mr. HALE. And the Smithsonian.

Mr. STEWART. And the Smithsonian. Those are buildings which are creditable. The plans were adopted and the buildings constructed with great care. There are only two buildipgs which have been put up since the war that are not subject to severe criticism. Those are the Library building and the new Printing Office.

The Printing Office does very well and has a fine appearance, though I have not been in it to examine it. But look at the other buildings. Everyone is sorry when he looks at them. There has been too much of the architects' originality here. The State, War, and Navy Department building cost enough. It could have been made a dignified building on such a plan as the Patent Office building or on that of one of the other old buildings, and it would have been agreeable to look upon.

I hope that we will not give too much latitude to the genius of originality on the part of the architects. Originality is not always the best thing. There are some things which are old that are still good. I think the architecture of the ancients in many respects surpasses the moderns. Travelers and students of architecture visiting the ruins of Greece and Rome, and particularly of Greece, still admire the ancient architecture, and yet they are unable to pattern after it to the fullest extent. I think they might study the architecture of the ancients and have here something dignified and agreeable, something that is stately and in keeping with a great government. I think that before we give a large percentage to architects, to let them boss us, we should have some idea whether they are going to exhibit a wild originality that everybody will be sorry for. I am disgusted with the wild originality of architects in this capital for the last thirty years.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it seems unlikely that this bill can be finished this evening, and I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions which have come from the other House in respect to the death of Hon. Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I was in hopes, Mr. President, that we might have concluded the consideration of the bill this afternoon.

Mr. GORMAN. That is impossible.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. But of course I would not venture to delay the Senate in the consideration of the resolutions. That matter takes precedence of all other business.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE THOMPSON, OF ALABAMA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions of the House of Representatives, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 21, 1904.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound regret of the untimely death of Hon. CHARLES WINSTON THOMPSON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That a committee of fifteen Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expense in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES WINSTON THOMPSON, late a Representative of the Fifth district of the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join a committee on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. MORGAN, Mr. PETTUS, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. MCLAURIN, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. DOLLIVER.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate, as a further mark of respect, do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 22, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 21, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in Heaven, profoundly impressed with the uncertainty of our earthly existence by the removal of another of our Congressional family, cut off in the midst of a useful and successful career, we most fervently pray that we may so order our lives that when the summons comes we shall be ready with faith and confidence to move forward, realizing that death is not an extinction of being, but an epoch, an event in the grand eternal march of existence.

Be graciously near to those whose hearts have been touched, wounded by this death. Comfort them by the blessed thought that though he may not come to them, they shall surely go to him and dwell with him in the realms of eternal peace. Hear us in the name of Him who taught us the resurrection and the life, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of Friday's proceedings was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 36. An act to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mail;

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3658. An act ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Oklahoma, legalizing the waterworks bond election held by the city of Geary, in said Territory.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas Hon. ROBERT BAKER, of New York, on March 18, 1904, obtained leave in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to insert remarks in the RECORD; and
Whereas under the leave so given he has printed as his remarks charges against a Member of this House in his representative capacity; and
Whereas the said charges against the character of a Member were not in order and were an abuse of the privilege of the House: Therefore Resolved, That the said remarks, extending on pages 3603, 3604, and 3605 of the RECORD of the date of March 18, 1904, be, and are hereby, expunged from the RECORD, and are declared not to be a legitimate part of the official debates of the House.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the matter referred to is to be found on page 3603 and the following pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Instead of the matter that is put in the RECORD, I send to the Clerk's desk the actual record that was made at that time, and desire that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to insert some remarks in the RECORD on this bill.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert some remarks in the RECORD on this bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, at the time the gentleman from New York arose in his place the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was considering the post-office appropriation bill, and this clause was under consideration:

For unusual business accruing at third and fourth class post-offices, $500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish the rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of the same.

To which Mr. OVERSTREET offered an amendment:

And provided further, That the Postmaster-General shall report to Congress, prior to February 1, 1905, the method of application of this sum and all circumstances under which the appropriation has been disbursed.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] offered an amendment, as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be disbursed until the Postmaster-General shall publish the rules or regulations governing the Department in the allotment of same.

That was the matter, Mr. Speaker, to which debate legitimately should have been addressed.

I do not care to enter into any discussion of this subject. It will be apparent to every Member of this House who has read the portion of the RECORD that is referred to that a flagrant violation of the rules of this House was committed; that under the permission to print that that was legitimate, that that was authorized by the rules of the House, a gentleman has indulged in certain remarks and has attempted to reenforce them by extracts from newspapers and extracts derived from other sources that contain grievous charges against the honor and integrity of a Member of this House. No man would have been permitted to use the language in debate that is found in these extracts. He would have been promptly called to order. He would have been compelled to take his seat. But in this irregular manner this offense has been committed, and therefore it seems entirely proper that the House should show its unwillingness that such procedure should occur by, in this mild way of rebuke, expunging the offensive matter from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi and Mr. BAKER rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, what part of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] propose to expunge?

Mr. HEPBURN. All of it; the entire speech and exhibits.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the part of the gentleman's remarks beginning with the words "Mr. Chairman" and ending with the words "Post-Office Department," at the end of the heavily printed type, should be expunged. I have not had time to read all of it and I will ask the gentleman from Iowa what part he thinks is expungeable.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is all expungeable for this reason, that it was not debate upon a pending question, and that is sufficient. It is offensive and so declared by our rules that require the five-minute debate to be responsive to the subject then pending.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is undoubtedly true that a Member of Congress under the leave to print has no right to make a personal attack or an attack upon the integrity or honor of another Member of Congress. That is perfectly true. A motion based upon that idea could not be resisted. But the gentleman from Iowa bases his motion upon nongermaneness to the amendment and paragraph under consideration under the five-minute rule, when the gentleman from New York arose, and the other day Members were rising in their places and were getting one minute, two minutes, and four minutes for the purpose of extending in the RECORD. Extension in the RECORD was being given, and in nearly every instance the Members did not confine themselves to the amendment under consideration or to the paragraph, but in many instances were making explanations of their connection with the Bristow report and very many other things in connection with the post-office bill generally. Now, I think the gentleman from Iowa ought to modify his resolution so as to include only that part of the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] which constitute a charge against a Member of Congress and also this part, if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will pardon me, on page 3603, in the first column, where the large print is to be found—the part beginning "As tending to show how closely the relationship which is said to exist" and ending with the words "Milwaukee, Wis.," at the end of that paragraph. That is the only part of the large print that I see which touches upon the question of taking advantage of leave to print to make a personal attack.

Mr. Speaker, furthermore, in this connection, the other day the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOUTHWICK] had read, subject to this same objection, if we had been carrying out the rules strictly, an article from the New York World. None of us objected. I did not want to object. Later the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] had inserted in the RECORD, under leave to extend, an article from the newspaper of ex-Postmaster-General Smith—the Philadelphia Press. Of course if we are going into this strictly on the rules, as applicable to the pending paragraph, none of them are applicable; but we were all agreeing that all this should go on in order that Members might have an opportunity to explain their connection with this Bristow report. I do not think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] ought to invoke the rule too strictly or too technically. I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] will himself recognize that under the right to extend he made a mistake in bringing in the name of any Member and that that part of his recorded remarks ought to go out.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Permit me to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the fact that at the very beginning of the remarks just referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] made reference to certain individuals (without naming them) and their peculiar friendship, and the latter part of the remarks seems to indicate that by these introductory remarks the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] meant to refer to the person named in the item which he puts into the RECORD. In the former part of his remarks he says:

> The railroads have always had their friends; and it is therefore not surprising that they should recognize their friends.

We have there, in the very beginning——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That is no personal attack upon an individual.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But the gentleman follows it with extracts which clearly show the reference intended.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I understand; but that first portion of the remarks to which the gentleman from Indiana refers can not become obnoxious by reason of the matter which follows when the matter which follows shall be, as it ought to be, stricken out.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The things are so interwoven——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Indiana and I have frequently made remarks of that character. I think everybody will admit that "the railroads have their friends, and that they recognize their friends." Remarks of that sort are made upon this floor very often.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But not connected with such statements as are made in these extracts from certain papers.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That part making direct reference to an individual ought to be stricken from the RECORD; to that I agree. It is indefensible as a precedent.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is scarcely accurate on the part of the gentleman from Mississippi to say that he and the gentleman from Indiana every day, or frequently, indulge in discussion of that kind. I am sure that neither one of those gentlemen has ever indulged in discussion of this kind.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said that we frequently indulge in remarks like that in regard to the "railroads having their friends and the railroads recognizing their friends."

Mr. HEPBURN. There is a purpose throughout the whole of these remarks as printed by the gentleman from New York to bring reflection and to cast dishonor upon a Member of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. That part ought to be stricken out.

Mr. HEPBURN. The other remarks are merely introductory and are for the purpose of emphasizing and giving currency to the statements that are later to be found in the publication, and which are, I may say, mere additions to the previous remarks.

I am not able to distinguish between different parts of that which the gentleman is reputed to have uttered. The fact is, there was no utterance by the gentleman on this subject. The fact is, that this publication is not an extension of remarks upon this bill. The truth is, that not one word of all this was uttered by him; and the greater part of it could not have been uttered by any gentleman in the presence of this House without his being called to order.

I am not disposed to make nice and refined distinctions in this matter. The whole of it is objectionable, clearly objectionable, under a rule of the House, and therefore, while all of it may not perhaps be so objectionable under the rule which requires decorum and decency in debate, it offends under the other rule which requires that discussion should be germane to the subject-matter. I therefore think the gentleman from Mississippi ought not to be strenuous in asking that we should attempt to dissect this matter and select particular sentences that may not be so offensive as other sentences.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. HEPBURN. How much time?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Five or ten minutes; I do not think I shall need so much time.

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am going to move to amend the resolution by moving——

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not yield for an amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, has the previous question been called?

Mr. HEPBURN. No; but I have the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, have I not the right in my own time——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is speaking in the time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, in that time I wish to say that I do want to offer, if the opportunity be given to me, an amendment. I propose to move to strike out all that part of these remarks except what I shall now read. I ask the attention of the House on both sides to what I shall read, to see if under the operation of the rule as enforced the other day, and in view of the manner in which the House was conducting itself, there is anything to be expunged other than what I omit to read.

Now, then, Mr. Speaker, if these remarks shall be expunged—that is, the part I am going to read now—I shall follow it by a motion to expunge from the RECORD the editorial put there the other day by the gentleman from Ohio on leave to extend.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a word? I asked a special privilege to publish the particular thing which I did publish, and it did not assail any Member of Congress or the good faith of anybody else.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I know that, and for that reason——

Mr. GROSVENOR. And it bore upon the special question under consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Speaker, it did not bear upon the special question under consideration. I have not yielded to the gentleman, because I have only a minute of time. Since he has interrupted me, however, I want to acquit him of any sort of wrongdoing in putting the article in the RECORD. There was none. He asked permission to extend his remarks, and in extending them under that permission he put in the RECORD this article from the Philadelphia paper, which did not——

Mr. GROSVENOR. I beg the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me—which did not reflect upon any Member of this House. There was absolutely nothing wrong in putting it in the RECORD, and the only objection that could be made to it would be the technical objection that the article did not refer to the paragraph under consideration or to the amendment immediately preceding it—precisely the point raised by the gentleman from Iowa. The only ground that can be made for striking out of the RECORD the remarks which I am now going to read is that technical ground; and if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will give me the opportunity to amend his resolution, I will move, or I will accept from him, an amendment to expunge from the RECORD all except the following; and I ask the gentleman's attention, to see if there is a word in this that ought to be expunged under the operation of the House the other day.

[Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi then read the first two paragraphs of Mr. BAKER'S remarks, which he omits herefrom in consequence of his agreement and the subsequent action of the House.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, skip to where I am going to read now:

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman—

Is the gentleman from Iowa following me?

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order against the gentleman reading that. I do not propose by this method to allow him to get into the RECORD what the House is now considering the propriety of striking out.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I move to strike out——

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. There is no point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I make one, if there is not any.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I want to skip the next paragraph.

The SPEAKER. One word. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has read the two first paragraphs on page 3603, and he gives notice that he is proceeding to read the third paragraph——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. No; I do not want to read the third paragraph. I want to read the fourth. I want to skip the third because I think the third ought to be expunged. The third contains the name of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to the gentleman stating that while the point of order is pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order, as the Chair understands, that the reading of the fourth—and does he intend to read the fifth?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; the fourth and the fifth.

The SPEAKER. The third, fourth and fifth——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not the third.

The SPEAKER. The fourth and fifth.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, there is not one word in either the fourth or fifth that mentions any Member or hints at any Member.

Mr. PAYNE. It refers to a Member. It has no point whatever unless it does refer to one.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Oh, well, I think it has. The House can judge of that if the gentleman will let the House hear it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I will suggest to the gentleman that every Member has this before him.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I know; but every Member has not read it.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is on his desk, and the gentleman ought not to try to violate the rule by getting matter into his speech which has been inserted in violation of the rule by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not trying to violate the rule. I will go further and will say to the gentleman from Iowa that if the House adopts the resolution to expunge all of this speech of the gentleman from New York I will expunge from my remarks the reading of this part of it.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see how it can be expunged after it has been read, without another motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not at all. I will take it out under the power of revision, or I will ask unanimous consent that it go out.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that it is not in order to read the fourth and fifth paragraphs, which the gentleman is proceeding to read. Now, it seems to the Chair that, as to those paragraphs, the gentleman's point of order is well taken. But the gentleman from Mississippi now says that he desires to read those paragraphs with the understanding that, if the sense of the House is that they should be stricken out, all that he states will be stricken out, and ask unanimous consent therefor. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I state that if the judgment of the House shall be to strike out the entire speech that part of it which I read shall also be stricken out. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair understand the gentleman. The gentleman says if it is the sense of the House to strike out all——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Of Mr. BAKER'S speech.

The SPEAKER. All that is printed—that then the gentleman will strike out what he reads.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; being a part of it, and within the spirit of the House rules.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from New York made the point of order against the reading of those paragraphs.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I am not going to read anything but what I have said—the fourth and fifth paragraphs.

The SPEAKER. The fourth and fifth paragraphs. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think it worth while to try to edit this speech and try to make a speech of it on the floor of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to argue the point of order. I do not think the point of order will lie.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not think the point of order will lie. Does the gentleman from New York object?

Mr. PAYNE. I certainly do. I do not think it worth while to try to edit this speech and make a speech of it on the floor of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I do not think the point of order is good. It is the ordinary usage of this House that when any part of a speech made by any gentleman on the floor or under a leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD is objected to on the ground that it is of a personal character or involves an attack upon the integrity of any Member of this House, to move to strike out that part of the speech. It does not go to all the speech. There are precedents after precedents where that has been done. Now, if the gentleman is not going to give an opportunity to amend, I at least ought to be given an opportunity to suggest wherein I want to amend. I want to be perfectly fair.

I do not want to resist so much of the gentleman's motion as is right; I do not think that it is a part of my duty to resist that much of it. But I do think it is a part of my duty to resist so much of the motion as it seems to me is ill taken. Now, I have read a part of the remarks; the balance every Member of the House can read. In paragraphs 4 and 5 there is not one word that refers to a single Member of the House in any sense, and therefore, in my opinion, there is no part of it that can be affected by the gentleman's motion. If there is, we can take almost any speech out of the RECORD inserted under the leave to print in the debate under the five-minute rule on that day and the day previous. Gentlemen asked recognition and were recognized for two or three minutes, and then asked leave to print; and they printed in the RECORD their explanations of their connection with the Bristow report.

Those remarks made by gentlemen inserted in the RECORD in that way were not applicable to the paragraph which immediately preceded the remarks nor any pending amendment. Not a bit of it. What is the distinction between that and this? The only distinction is that in this case a Member of the House is named and a charge made involving the integrity of that Member. All those remarks constituting the exception I admit ought to be expunged from the RECORD. No defense can be made of that portion, and it is a violation of the rule that controls and ought in propriety to control all leaves to extend in the RECORD.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. How do you draw a distinction between a paper which is presented at the Clerk's desk and read to the House, where every Member of the House can make a point of order against it, and a paper that is published under a leave to extend remarks?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It was not presented at the desk.

Mr. TAWNEY. What is the distinction the gentleman draws between the two?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will call the attention of the gentleman to what occurred. Time and time again here Members have been recognized; they simply used the privilege to explain their connection with the Bristow report. There would be a certain part that would be written as original and documents would be inserted accompanying their remarks.

Now, I thought to be perfectly fair about this, Mr. Speaker. I believe in a very liberal use of the power of revision and the power under it to extend, but I think we all recognize, I think the gentleman from New York himself must recognize—he is a new Member and inexperienced and did not know, perhaps—but he will now recognize that under the leave to extend remarks in the RECORD one has no right to impeach the integrity, the honor, the truthfulness, the character, or the political standing of a fellow-Member of the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his objection just to the reading of these two paragraphs. Mr. Speaker, I submit this request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Just what does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that, having read paragraphs 1 and 2, I be permitted to read paragraphs 4 and 5, and I couple that request with this request, that if the House by its action shall expunge the remarks of the gentleman from New York that paragraphs 1 and 2 and 4 and 5, read by me as part of my remarks, shall also be expunged from the RECORD, or rather that I be not granted leave to insert them.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York demands the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to know how long the gentleman from Iowa is recognized?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has an hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa, do you propose to call the previous question without giving opportunity to amend?

Mr. HEPBURN. I propose to call the previous question; yes, sir. Mr. Speaker, now as to the point of order——

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been disposed of.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa demands the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 135, noes 100.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Let us have tellers, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 98, answered "present" 14, not voting 140, as follows:

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present." I voted "no," but I find I am paired.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I was present and did not hear my name called. I desire to be recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name should have been called?

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. I was doing my best.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman was paying attention and did not hear his name called, he is within the rule.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. I was paying attention and did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. WILEY of Alabama, and he voted "no," as above recorded.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with Judge TATE of Georgia. I understand he did not vote. I voted "aye" and I desire to be recorded as "present."

The name of Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS was called, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the preamble will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the last vote and lay that motion on the table.

Mr. BAKER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAKER. Do I understand that if this resolution is adopted that the Member (myself) who is affected by the resolution, will have no opportunity to state his side of the case?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will meet that question when it arises. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Iowa to reconsider and lay that motion on the table will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to correct the reference of a House bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to correct the reference of a House bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13867) to amend the act providing for national irrigation, approved June 17, 1902, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What committee is it desired to change this reference to?

Mr. LACEY. It is a bill to practically change the land laws of the United States. It was referred to the Committee on Irrigation, and it should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is it conceded that it should go to the Committee on the Public Lands?

Mr. LACEY. I concede it, and I think it should go nowhere else. It is a proposition to change the land laws of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reference will be changed from the Committee on Irrigation to the Committee on the Public Lands.

There was no objection.

REPORT OF ISTHMIAN CANAL COMMISSION.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 40.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 3,500 copies of the report and appendixes of the Isthmian Canal Commission, with illustrations, of which 1,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 for the House of Representatives, and 500 for the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

UNITED STATES STATUTES FOR LIBRARY OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 261.

Resolved, That the superintendent of documents be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the library of the House of Representatives, for use in said library, twenty-five copies of volume No. 30 of the United States Statutes at Large.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was considered, and agreed to.

SPECIAL REPORTS ON DISEASES OF THE HORSE AND OF CATTLE.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 53.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there shall be printed 3,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse and 1,500 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, for sale by the superintendent of documents under the provisions of section 61 of an act providing for the public printing, binding, and the distribution of documents, approved January 12, 1895; and the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to order reprinted, from time to time, such public documents as may be required for sale: Provided, That the appropriation for printing and binding shall be reimbursed for the cost of such reprints from the moneys received by the superintendent of documents from the sale of public documents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Under the circumstances this morning, Mr. Speaker, I think that resolution can just as well go over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

CEDED LANDS ON FORT HALL RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2323) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill all after "namely," in line 13 of the enrolled bill, down to and including line 20 of said bill, be stricken out and the following inserted: "Lot 4, section 1, township 7 south, range 34 east, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, section 18, township 7 south, range 35 east, and the east half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 6 south, range 34 east, and which have heretofore been appraised, shall be paid for at the said appraised value at the time of and by the person making entry of the respective tracts upon which such improvements are situated," so as to correctly describe the range, inaccurately stated in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that that is a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, the purpose of it is to correct an enrolled bill by a concurrent resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances does that require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not clear upon that point.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If it does require unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances this morning, I will ask that it go over.

The SPEAKER. It will go over. It is on the table, and the Chair is not clear whether it does or not.

LAWS RELATING TO CORPORATIONS IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following privileged report, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the resolution (H. R. 216) providing for the printing of 2,000 copies of the laws relating to corporations in the District of Columbia, for use of the House document room, recommend that the same do pass.

The Public Printer estimates the cost of this publication at $95.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 2,000 copies, for use of House document room, of "Laws relating to corporations in the District of Columbia," extracts from the Code of Law, and other laws for the District of Columbia, with an index of same.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

SENECA NATION OF NEW YORK INDIANS.

Mr. DRESSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11205) to ratify and confirm a lease made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to John Quilter, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to ratify and confirm a lease made by the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to John Quilter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I think that had better go over.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Mississippi.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. RANDELL of Texas, for two weeks, on account of imperative business.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE CHARLES W. THOMPSON.

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to announce to the House the untimely death of my late distinguished colleague, Hon. CHARLES WINSTON THOMPSON, who was the Representative from the Fifth Congressional district of Alabama in the Fifty-seventh and Fifty-eighth Congresses. Later on in the session I shall ask this House to take appropriate action in regard to the death of my deceased friend and colleague.

I now send to the Clerk's desk and ask the reading and immediate adoption of the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound regret of the untimely death of Hon. CHARLES WINSTON THOMPSON, late a Representative from the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That a committee of fifteen Members of the House, with such members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expense in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and the Speaker announced the following committee:

Mr. WILEY of Alabama, Mr. CLAYTON of Alabama, Mr. BOWIE of Alabama, Mr. PADGETT of Tennessee, Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, Mr. LITTLEFIELD of Maine, Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin, Mr. DARRAGH of Michigan, Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois, Mr. HILL of Connecticut, Mr. SCARBOROUGH of South Carolina, Mr. SOUTHARD of Ohio, Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina, Mr. HOUSTON of Delaware, Mr. AIKEN of South Carolina.

The Clerk then reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a favorable recommendation, the draft of a bill relating to the settlement of certain lands released from withdrawal for forest reserves—to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a copy of a concurrent resolution of the legislative assembly of Porto Rico extending the thanks of that body to Congress for privileges extended to the public school teachers of Porto Rico—to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with copies of certain communications, a recommendation that the time for the construction of the highway bridge across the Potomac at Washington, D. C., be extended—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the ship Statira, John Seaward, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the snow Thetis, Samuel Cameron, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7262) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians in the State of New York, and extend the protection of the laws of the United States and of the State of New York over such Indians, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1743); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

I move that the letter be referred to the Committee on Claims to accompany the bill (S. 4994) for the relief of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Springfield, Mo.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13480) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River in Vigo County, Ind., reported it with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is reported to take the place of the bill (S. 4585) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River in Vigo County, Ind., which is order of business 1157 on the Calendar. The Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed and the House bill will take its place on the Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7274) to amend section 76 of an act entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii," reported it without amendment.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4845) regulating the erection of buildings on the Mall, in the District of Columbia, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3361) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, to authorize and provide for the maintenance and supply of fuel and illuminating gas and its by-products in Honolulu, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4837) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a railway, street-railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., approved February 13, 1891," and acts amendatory thereof, so as to extend the time for completion of said bridge until January 1, 1905, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. President, I desire the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TYLER, TEX.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2148) to provide for the enlargement and improvement of the public building at Tyler, Tex., to report it favorably with an amendment. It being quite a short bill, I ask that it be considered at this time.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the committee was, on page 2, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for, secure, and cause to be erected and constructed upon the site now owned by the United States in the city of Tyler, in the State of Texas, and upon which is situated the public building of the United States, suitable improvements, enlargements, and additions to said public building or upon said public building site, together with such fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and all other necessary equipments and appointments for the use and accommodation of the United States courts and the United States post-office in the said city of Tyler, in the State of Texas, the cost of which said improvements, enlargements, and additions shall not exceed the sum of $40,000, which sum is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF TERRITORIAL GOVERNORS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print from the stereotype plates 2,000 copies each of the reports of the governors of Alaska, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma for 1893, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

REPEAL OF DESERT-LAND ACT.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 5168) to repeal the desert-land act and the commutation provision of the homestead act; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask that the second reading of the bill be temporarily deferred. I shall desire to express my views on the subject to-morrow after the conclusion of the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read once. The Senator from Montana asks that the second reading may be deferred, and he gives notice that he will address the Senate in relation to the bill immediately after the routine morning business to-morrow.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BALL introduced a bill (S. 5169) making Lewes, Del., a subport of entry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (S. 5170) granting a pension to Kate M. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5171) to authorize the improvement of Kansas River and to make appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana introduced a bill (S. 5172) for the relief of the heirs of D. C. McCan and Edward Conery, sr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5173) for the relief of William G. Labadie, a member and allottee of the Peoria and other tribes of Indians, Quapaw Agency Reservation, Ind. T.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of William G. Labadie, together with the affidavit of Dr. G. E. Smythe and letters from United States Judge J. A. Gill, United States Commissioner F. D. Adams, W. A. Jones, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and a petition of Harned & Wade and others. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I desire the attention of the committee to this particular bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY introduced a bill (S. 5174) to provide for the erection of a beacon light near Fair Point, in Pensacola Bay, in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. OVERMAN introduced a bill (S. 5175) for the relief of the estate of John Simpkins, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 5176) to create a recording district in the Indian Territory and to establish a United States district court at Okemah, Ind. T.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PROCTOR introduced a bill (S. 5177) to establish four permanent military camp grounds, in the States of Texas, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, and California, and for the enlargement of the Chattanooga and Chickamauga National Park; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GAMBLE introduced a bill (S. 5178) for the relief of the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ANKENY introduced a bill (S. 5179) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Gardner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5180) granting a pension to Thomas Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 5181) granting an increase of pension to John W. Pearson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5182) granting an increase of pension to Charles B. Davis; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NELSON introduced a bill (S. 5183) to modify the law pertaining to the acquisition and holding of lode claims in the district of Alaska; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. TELLER. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Mines and Mining as the appropriate committee.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that reference, but most bills pertaining to Alaska have gone to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. TELLER. This bill, as I understand it, and I heard a gentleman from Alaska talk about it, refers entirely to mining.

Mr. NELSON. That is correct—lode or quartz mining.

Mr. TELLER. That is a matter which I think the Committee on Mines and Mining can handle better than the Committee on Territories.

Mr. NELSON. I have no objection to that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5184) granting a pension to Ethel Talley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLEE introduced a bill (S. 5185) granting a pension to John W. Thomas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5186) granting a pension to Ellwood Craig; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington introduced a bill (S. 5187) to provide for the opening of the remaining portion of the Colville Reservation, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 5188) for the relief of the L. S. Watson Manufacturing Company, of Leicester, Mass.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 5189) for the relief of the firm of McNaught, Ormond & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 5190) granting an increase of pension to William Berry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. QUARLES introduced a bill (S. 5191) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth C. Way; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5192) granting an increase of pension to F. Heinemann; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 5193) granting a pension to Edward D. Lockwood; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Edward D. Lockwood for pension, together with brief and argument, and also the affidavits of Dr. J. F. Lane, Ferdinand Ebert, Samuel Miller, Hermann Gove, and Henry F. Reinkemeyer. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 5194) granting an increase of pension to Charles L. Overley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MILLARD introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 63) to extend the time for construction of the Akron, Sterling and Northern Railroad, in Alaska; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LONG submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,500,000 for the improvement of the harbor of Kansas City, Mo., and Kansas City, Kans., and for the permanent improvement of the Kansas River at and near its mouth, and for the removal of obstructions therein, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted papers to accompany the amendment submitted by Mr. GORMAN on the 8th instant, providing for the payment to Andrew Gleason and Patrick Maloney of the sum of $4,772.89, being the interest due upon a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in cause No. 16310 between the time when the transcript of judgment was presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment and the time said judgment was paid, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

An amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for survey from White Point to Hunts Bar, inclusive, on Blackwater Bay and River, Florida;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500 for survey of inner harbor of Fernandina, Fla.;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $3,000 for survey of Caloosahatchee River from Punta Rassa to Fort Myers, Fla.; and

An amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for continuing improvement at the Cypress Top mouth of the Choctawhatchee River, Florida.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,000 for rent, furniture, stationery, and printing for the offices of United States shipping commissioners, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $183,000 for the construction of wagon roads and bridges in the Mount Rainier National Park, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for grading and opening Eighth street NE., so as to make a passable roadway from Bunker Hill road through the grounds of the Catholic University north to the Bates road, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN WALLER.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agree to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 36) to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mail.

PAYMENTS TO DELAWARE INDIANS.

Mr. QUAY. I submit a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish forthwith to the Senate a statement showing the difference in value between coin and currency on payments made by the United States to the Delaware Indians, from and including the year 1862 to and including the year 1878; said payments being set forth in the report of the subcommittee of the Senate on Indian Affairs, dated March 29, 1902.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, that is a very important resolution. If any action is taken upon it, it not only opens this case, but opens all cases where payments have been made by the Government in currency instead of gold. The obligation which would be assumed by the Government if it makes good all its payments when gold was at a premium and pays the difference between a depreciated currency and gold will amount to hundreds of millions of dollars. I do not know in the present day, when everything in the nature of swelling Government expenditures is popular and passes without question, whether any protest of mine will avail in this case. I doubt whether it will. But I do not wish that the resolution should pass without every possible obstruction being placed in its way that can be placed there. Therefore I object to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the resolution goes over.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator understands, I suppose, that the resolution calls for information?

Mr. HALE. All such matters, Mr. President, begin in this way. Information is called for, and a Secretary is directed to report what is the difference, in the case of a payment years ago in a depreciated currency, between that payment and a payment in gold. It all means and leads to a claim that the Government shall make these things good.

Mr. QUAY. In this case——

Mr. HALE. It is absolutely appalling, when one considers the immense amount of money that is involved by a proposition of this kind, and therefore I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over under the rule.

PROPOSED HAWAIIAN LEGISLATION.

Mr. FORAKER. I am instructed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow morning the Senate will consider some Hawaiian legislation. There are three acts which I want to have the Senate pass upon. It will not take longer than an hour, I think, to dispose of them.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I gave notice the other day that I should feel obliged to object to requests for unanimous consent to take up special bills in the future. If the bills are what the Senator represents, there will be no difficulty in his moving to-morrow morning to take them up. I am sure every Senator will help to get them up; but when unanimous consent is given in this way we very often find when the time comes that we want to do something else than that which has been agreed upon. I must object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] gave notice that immediately after the completion of the routine business to-morrow morning he would desire to address the Senate on a pending bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not aware that such notice had been given. Of course, as the Senator from Connecticut objects, and I could not obtain the agreement——

Mr. STEWART. I am anxious that the Indian appropriation bill shall have the right of way until we get through with it.

Mr. FORAKER. I give notice, then, that at the earliest opportunity I shall move to take up these Hawaiian bills.

PENSION ORDER OF INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CARMACK, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether, in the opinion of said committee, there is any authority of law for a recent order of the Secretary of the Interior to the effect that all persons who served in the Army or Navy of the United States during the war of the rebellion, and who have reached the age of 62 years, shall be presumed to have incurred such disabilities as to entitle them to receive pensions under the act of Congress, June 27, 1890.

Mr. CARMACK. I shall ask that the resolution lie on the table for the present, subject to call. In the meanwhile, however, I wish to say that in asking the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary I intend no reflection whatever upon the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER. Or anybody else.

Mr. CARMACK. Or anybody else. It is an inquiry. I asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary because it seemed to me that it presented a purely legal question. The fact that it refers to pensions does not constitute an element at all in the importance of the resolution. It suggests that the action of the Secretary of the Interior referred to in the resolution was a transgression upon the rights of Congress and in violation of law. That is purely a legal question, and one which I think ought to be considered by the Judiciary Committee. At present, however, I shall ask that the resolution shall lie on the table subject to call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks that the resolution may lie on the table subject to his call. Is there objection?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not wish to make any objection, but I wish to announce at this time that I consider this a resolution pertaining purely to pension matters, and, therefore, though it may be a legal question, it is a question that should go to the Committee on Pensions. When the resolution comes up, I shall ask that it be amended so that it shall go to what I consider to be the appropriate committee, the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOAR. I rose before the Chair put the last question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I should like very much to enter a caveat now. I do not wish, of course, to diminish the authority or the dignity of the committee of which I am the chairman, but I do not agree to the doctrine that whenever a matter before the Senate presents a question of constitutional law, purely or chiefly, or indeed of any other law, that necessarily should take it from the jurisdiction of the committee dealing with that subject and send it to the Committee on the Judiciary. The entire Senate is made up of men who are supposed to understand the Constitution which they are sworn to support, and they are all persons who are charged with the function of lawmaking and understanding laws.

Now, when a question comes before the Senate as to the power of a Department officer to make certain orders with the authority of law relating to pensions, or the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to do something in regard to the finances of the country, or of a Department officer to do something in regard to the Indians, it does not seem to me that if it is a law question it must be taken from the proper committee and sent to the Judiciary Committee. That implies what I do not claim for my committee and least of all for myself, a superiority over our associates in the capacity to judge of such questions. No such superiority in fact exists, and no such superiority ought to be recognized in the customs of the Senate.

The function of the Judiciary Committee, as I understand it, is to deal with questions pertaining to the jurisdiction and practice of the courts, and with questions in regard to the general laws of the country, such as are to be enforced and administered in the courts, and not to deal with every question of a pension law or a post-office law or a law affecting the Indian Service.

I quite agree with my honorable friend the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who claims this jurisdiction for his committee. I think it belongs there.

ABRAM CLAYPOOL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 9791), "An act granting an increase of pension to Abram Claypool," by striking out the word "Illinois," in line 5 of said enrolled bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Indiana."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 885) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Gillham;

An act (S. 1543) granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson;
An act (S. 3274) granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long;
An act (S. 3878) granting an increase of pension to George Coffee;
An act (S. 3879) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Q. Lemmond;
An act (S. 3896) granting an increase of pension to Richard F. Nugent;
An act (S. 3936) granting an increase of pension to Sylvania S. Cheney;
An act (S. 3946) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Bright;
An act (S. 3977) granting an increase of pension to Luther S. Baker;
An act (S. 3978) granting an increase of pension to George W. Howard;
An act (S. 3979) granting an increase of pension to Sterling L. Parker;
An act (S. 4078) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Steele;
An act (S. 4246) granting an increase of pension to Louis Groverman;
An act (S. 4254) granting an increase of pension to William H. Collingwood;
An act (S. 4284) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Hankins;
An act (S. 4285) granting an increase of pension to John H. Shands;
An act (S. 4317) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Augur;
An act (S. 4329) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Nesmith;
An act (S. 4349) granting an increase of pension to Laura Ann Seaton;
An act (S. 4454) granting an increase of pension to John Seiler;
An act (S. 3919) granting a pension to Florence E. Foster;
An act (S. 4237) granting a pension to Hannah Small Wiggin; and
An act (S. 4371) granting a pension to Alison Clifton.

COLON FIRE CLAIMS.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I introduced yesterday a resolution relating to what are known as the "Colon fire claims" against Colombia. It was sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The resolution has a long preamble setting forth the facts as the petitioners understand them. It will be convenient to the committee and the Senate and counsel to have it printed in document form, not merely in resolution form. I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 14256) making an appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate to print 10,000 copies of the report of the Commission on International Exchange and the appendixes thereto, being House Document No. 144, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, etc.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to print 10,000 copies of the coinage laws of the United States, etc.; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 199) for the relief of John H. McLaughlin;
A bill (H. R. 468) granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy;
A bill (H. R. 892) granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt;
A bill (H. R. 958) granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers;
A bill (H. R. 3776) granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Judy;
A bill (H. R. 3903) granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman;
A bill (H. R. 5176) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch;
A bill (H. R. 6022) granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis;
A bill (H. R. 6494) to approve and ratify act No. 73 of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona;
A bill (H. R. 7239) granting a pension to Lydia M. Hill;
A bill (H. R. 9319) providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak.; and A bill (H. R. 10058) for the relief of Kirby Thomas.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the amendments of the Committee on Indian Affairs may be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall receive first consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, and read to line 24 on page 2.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs as to the pay of the agent at Leech Lake, Minn. That agent is an army officer, attached to the Regular Army, and he draws his salary as such. I do not see why there should be an appropriation of eighteen hundred dollars to pay him. We have another agent at White Earth, Minn., who gets the same salary, but he is a civilian and does not draw another salary. Leech Lake is under the control of Captain Mercer, of the Regular Army, and he draws a captain's pay. I do not think this amount ought to be appropriated in addition, and I move to strike out lines 23 and 24, in the following words:

At the Leech Lake Agency, Minn., $1,800.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senator from Minnesota will not make that motion. The army officer does not get an increase of pay. If he is a retired army officer, he does not get the double pay. The statute provides for that.

Mr. NELSON. He is not a retired officer. He is on the active list.

Mr. STEWART. If he is an army officer, no matter whether on the retired or the active list, the Government does not give him double pay. The statute provides for such cases. If the clause is stricken out and he should die, then there would be no provision for paying his successor.

Mr. NELSON. He does not get a captain's pay, then, in addition to this salary?

Mr. STEWART. No; he does not.

Mr. NELSON. With that understanding I withdraw the motion to amend.

The reading of the bill was continued. The first amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Current and contingent expenses," on page 3, line 14, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the agent at the Shoshone Agency, Wyo., from $1,500 to $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 22, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the agent at the Union Agency, Ind. T., from $2,500 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for pay of twenty-three agents of Indian affairs, from $39,300 to $40,100.

Mr. ALLISON. I have not had time to examine this bill, but I notice that the number of Indian agents is reduced to twenty-three. I notice also that some agents provided for are not estimated for, and other agents who are estimated for are not included in the bill.

I wish the Senator from Nevada, in charge of the bill, would explain the situation as respects these agencies. I notice one agent, I will say, in my own State, at the Sac and Fox Agency, is not provided for in this bill, nor is the place estimated for.

Mr. STEWART. That is true.

Mr. ALLISON. I merely wanted to understand the rule whereby agencies which are not estimated for are included in the bill. If so, I shall be prepared at some suitable time to offer an amendment providing for the Sac and Fox Agency, in Iowa.

Mr. STEWART. The explanation is this: The Department holds that they can have the service better performed by having the superintendent of schools to act as agent. They say there is no necessity for two officers, and that they can get along much better with one. They have not estimated for them, and they have asked that they be left out. This is done on the recommendation of the Department. The superintendents of schools act as agents.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Then, I should be glad if the Senator will explain why it is that the Yankton Agency, which is not estimated for, is included by the committee?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The House put it in.

Mr. ALLISON. But the committee did not strike it out. If there is to be a rule respecting this matter, that rule should be observed, it seems to me, by the committee having charge of the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I think if the Senator was on the committee he would find great difficulty in enforcing that rule.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt I would. I am only trying to ascertain the general plan.

Mr. STEWART. We are endeavoring to conform to the plan of the Department. They recommend it, but they are not always able to follow it, as the Senator is not, under certain circumstances.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that very well.

Mr. STEWART. That is the difficulty.

Mr. ALLISON. But I would be glad to have some one explain why the Yankton Agency, which is not estimated for, is included in the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Where is it provided for?

Mr. ALLISON. At the top of page 4.

Mr. STEWART. The Department simply did not estimate for it, because they think it can be done better by the superintendent of the schools, and the House followed their recommendation. We have not changed it. If the Senator knows a good reason and will offer an amendment it will not be violently opposed.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nevada states that the House and the committee have followed the recommendation of the Department?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, the recommendation of the Department is that there shall be no Indian agency at the Yankton Agency. They have not estimated for it, in other words. But it is still in the bill, notwithstanding; so that is a departure from the general policy. I did not know but that there was some good reason for it.

Mr. STEWART. We yielded to superior force; that is all.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 9, after the word "That," to insert "hereafter;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That hereafter the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may devolve the duties of any Indian agency or any part thereof upon the superintendent of the Indian training school located at such agency whenever in his judgment such superintendent can properly perform the duties of such agency. And the superintendent upon whom such duties devolve shall give bond as other Indian agents.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. That amendment may be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean by that amendment?

Mr. STEWART. The word "hereafter" was put in to make it a permanent law, so that it would not have to be reenacted every year. Some Senators have objected to it. I have no objection to leaving out that word, so that the same law will have to be enacted year after year. If the word "hereafter" were put in, it would remain on the statute as a general law. It has been suggested that that would perpetuate the power of the Department to dispense with agencies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator insist upon retaining in the bill the second proviso, from line 8 to line 16?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes; we must retain that proviso. The word "hereafter" is all that goes out.

Mr. SPOONER. I have very grave doubts of the wisdom of so completely transferring the power which is involved in this language to the Secretary of the Interior, however great and good an administrative officer he may be. It gives him absolute power to do away with every Indian agency if he chooses.

Mr. STEWART. For one year. We put in the word "hereafter" to make it permanent, but that has been stricken out.

Mr. SPOONER. If they ought not to be done away with permanently, they ought not to be done away with for one year.

Mr. DUBOIS. The Senator from Wisconsin is starting from wrong premises.

Mr. SPOONER. That may be. I am willing to start right if the Senator will be kind enough to do that.

Mr. DUBOIS. I can explain it better by an illustration. At the Fort Hall Agency, in Idaho, the agent will have charge entirely hereafter, doing away with executive control by the superintendent. It is not necessary that the superintendent shall take the place of the agent, but the agent oftentimes takes the place of the superintendent.

Mr. STEWART. Usually.

Mr. DUBOIS. He usually does.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, may I ask a question? There is no appropriation in this bill for the agent at the Fort Hall Agency?

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore when this bill becomes a law there will be no Indian agent at Fort Hall.

Mr. STEWART. There will be no agent, but the general appropriation will cover it. The general appropriation covers the superintendents.

Mr. ALLISON. Is there a general appropriation in this bill covering the agent at the Fort Hall Agency?

Mr. STEWART. There is an appropriation covering the superintendent of schools as acting agent.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will explain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the several Senators who have been occupying the floor?

Mr. SPOONER. I am waiting for the Senator from Idaho to give me the correct starting point.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, there is a superintendent at Fort Hall, and an agent also. I happen to be one of the Senators who think that there ought not to be two officials at an agency with full powers, you may say, so that there is a dual responsibility. The agent at Fall Hall will be dropped, but the present agent will be made superintendent, and will perform the duties devolved upon him just the same. His status will not be changed in the slightest degree, except that he will then be named the superintendent. It does away with two officers, neither of whom has full power at an agency. It does not necessarily mean that either the superintendent or the agent shall be appointed to have power over the agency both as regards the school and the agency.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I am not able to discover from the statement of my friend from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] that it is necessary for me to go back and start again in order to be right.

Mr. DUBOIS. I beg pardon. I thought the Senator from Wisconsin assumed that a superintendent would always be put in charge.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I assume this—I do not assume it, but I know it—that under this language the Secretary of the Interior has the power to do away with every Indian agent in the United States and to devolve his functions upon the school superintendent.

Mr. DUBOIS. Only where these agencies are so large that they have a superintendent and an agent.

Mr. SPOONER. This does not introduce that qualification. That is in the Senator's mind, and might influence the exercise of this power by the Secretary of the Interior; but it is not in the law. So far as the law is concerned, if this is to be made the permanent statutory provision—and if it ought to be enacted for a year, it ought to be made permanent——

Mr. STEWART. It operates for several years.

Mr. SPOONER. A man who has established his fitness before the Civil Service Commission to superintend Indian schools may be far, far away from being fit to perform the general administrative duties of an Indian agent at a large agency.

I have not been inclined to think that this large power ought to be given to the Secretary of the Interior. I think it is a large subject. The nominations of these Indian agents are now sent to the Senate, and they are either confirmed or rejected by the Senate. We have exercised a great deal of care heretofore as the confirming body in examining them. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] shakes his head to indicate, I suppose, that we have not; and I call attention to that in order to make what I say intelligible—we have not, perhaps, in some instances.

If this becomes a law all these agents—that is the growing policy evidently of the Department—will be appointed without any intervention of the Senate and without any examination as to the fitness of the official, except the civil-service examination. Primarily adapted though that may be for the ascertainment of the fitness of a man to superintend Indian schools, I do not myself like, as at present advised, that provision. I simply rose to ask the Senator from Nevada if he is so firmly convinced of the wisdom of the provision as to be unwilling to eliminate it. Next year we could give it a more complete examination, when it might be more fully reported upon by the Department.

Mr. STEWART. This is a matter in regard to which I have had a good deal of intercourse with the Department. The usual practice of the Department is that they take a good agent and put him in office without any previous arrangement and without any civil-service examination. The objection was raised—I raised such an objection—how are you going to get rid of an undesirable agent? They said they could get rid of him if he was a bad agent much more readily sometimes if appointed in this way than if appointed by political influence.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask why it is difficult to get rid of an agent?

Mr. STEWART. Because many of them have a good deal of backing, and it may be hard to stem the tide of influence in their favor.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it not be possible, notwithstanding that, to remove them?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; but it is very difficult to do so. The Department say that the adoption of this policy will enable them to promote a man who is familiar with the subject. I suggested to them, "If you get rid of an agent, how are you going to get a new one?" They said there would not be many new ones put in, but only one occasionally. They appoint a man from the civil service, in the first place, to only a subordinate position, and such men are subsequently made agents. They have often made agents of persons who at first had no experience. The present law is much more convenient. By keeping these officials in, there is no political struggle over each agent. I think it is a case where the whole thing is one of administration by paternal government, so far as the Indians are concerned, and I think that the Department can be trusted with the matter.

Mr. SPOONER. We are getting to be a paternal government, so far as too many offices are concerned; but I am not at all satisfied with the Senator's argument or explanation.

Mr. STEWART. It was not an argument; it was merely an explanation of facts.

Mr. SPOONER. However that may be, of course the trend of it is to enable the Civil Service Commission to practically confirm or permit the appointment of Indian agents. On small reservations, where there are very few Indians, where a superintendent of schools might possibly be better able to take care of matters pertaining to the agency and to also superintend the schools, there might be no particular objection to it; but as to the considerable agencies, the Senator knows very well that it requires unusual skill to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is difficult for the reporters to hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I was trying to present the case to the Senator from Nevada, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair noticed that.

Mr. SPOONER. I meant no disrespect to the Chair.

Mr. STEWART. I will state just what I do know. So far as I have been able to examine the cases, where they have converted an agent into a superintendent and where the superintendent has acted he has managed the affairs of the agency quite efficiently, and I think the service has been rather improved by that means. I think in most cases the superintendents will be able to discharge the duties heretofore discharged by the agents, and I think the service will thereby be improved.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I care as little about patronage as any one in the Senate——

Mr. STEWART. I know that.

Mr. SPOONER. But if the Senate desires to change and to reorganize this system entirely, to hereafter have no voice in the selection of Indian agents, and to turn it over to the Civil-Service Commission, that is for the Senate to say. In order to test that question, I move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the Senate for a great many years has been trying to do something of the kind. I presume that, broadly stated, the design is to remove the Indian agents as far as possible from political influence. When I was formerly in the Senate and sat on the other side of the Chamber, the Senate decided—and it became a law—that army officers should be appointed Indian agents. There was considerable opposition to that among the western Senators; but, notwithstanding that opposition, it became the law and army officers were appointed Indian agents.

We have been trying for many years to settle upon some plan which would be more satisfactory than the plan of appointing men from civil life, who do not know anything about the conditions in the western country, to take charge of Indian affairs. It is a question which is pretty close to us who live out in that section of the country; but, as I have said, this plan has been in vogue for several years.

Mr. SPOONER. In a small way.

Mr. DUBOIS. In a small way; and I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that wherever it has come under my personal observation, as it has in the agency in my State, of course—the Nez Percé—there they dropped the agency and put in a superintendent. That was done because one of the Senators from Idaho happened to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs and acquiesced in the arrangement. When it has been tried in other States, where the Senators were very much opposed to it, as the Senator from Wisconsin can readily understand, we yielded to the wishes of the Senators from those States; but where it has been tried—and it has been tried in almost all cases unless the Senators from the State opposed it—it has been found satisfactory.

There was one case in my State where the superintendent was not satisfactory to the people or to the Indians. It was not very difficult to remove him. It is much easier to remove an officer who is appointed in this way, and who is unsatisfactory, than it is to remove one who holds his position through political influence. It is much more easy when we get a civil-service superintendent to remove him than it is where we get a political appointee as an agent out there. I think every Senator will readily understand how that could be.

The proposition which appeals most favorably to me is to do away with this dual responsibility at the agency. There is more or less conflict where there is a superintendent of schools who has full charge of everything appertaining to the schools.

The agent is called upon to put the children into school; he must scour the reservation and insist that the parents shall put the children into school; he must make arrangements with the parents, must coax and plead and argue with them; but the moment the children get into school, he has nothing more to do with them; he can not rectify any complaint, even where the Indians may come to him and complain of the misconduct of the superintendent of the school. Their jurisdictions are entirely separate and distinct.

I believe that the Departments are trying to select, where they have a superintendent and an agent on a reservation, the most competent one of the two, whether he be a superintendent or an agent, and put him in full charge. The schools are not disturbed at all or the appropriations for the school, but one man has full charge of the agency.

The Indian Committee has discussed this matter pretty thoroughly, and I think I am safe in saying that the committee are unanimously in favor of this policy, which is strongly recommended by the Department. It is going on gradually and slowly, and I trust the Senate will not stop its progress, which I believe is for the benefit of the Indians and the agents.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, so far as the agencies in my State are concerned, I thoroughly approve of the superintendent system. We have heretofore had a good deal of trouble with them. The Department sent strangers there in every new Administration; sometimes a new one was sent every year. I did what I could to prevent it, and did from time to time get some of them rejected by the Senate. I got them rejected sometimes because they were nonresidents and unsatisfactory, and sometimes because there was a general fight and the agency was badly managed. Finally a man was appointed from New York some years ago, a Mr. Sprague. I was very much opposed to that, but he turned out to be a pretty fair man when he got well acquainted with affairs there so that he could properly discharge the duties. He was converted into a superintendent. Western Senators have had a great deal of trouble on account of the selections of agents being made from the East.

Mr. SPOONER. If they are selected through the Civil Service Commission, may they not be taken from any part of the United States?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; but if they get a man in under that system he stays long enough to get acquainted with local conditions.

Mr. SPOONER. Still, when they first go there they do not understand local conditions.

Mr. STEWART. That is true; but they become familiar with the conditions after a while.

Mr. SPOONER. But that would apply to a superintendent as well as to an agent.

Mr. STEWART. But, in the first instance, appointees through the Civil Service Commission are not made agents. As they become fit, they are gradually promoted to that position. Somebody from the East may be appointed. The trouble we had was in getting a bad man out; but finally we would get him out and a good man might be appointed. He would eventually be converted into a superintendent, and then we would not have any more trouble. I think the western Senators have had a good deal of trouble owing to the appointment of men unacquainted with the conditions who were sent from the East, the South, and elsewhere. Under this system pretty good men will be selected, and after they have been tried and have demonstrated that they can discharge their duties satisfactorily, there is no further trouble. I believe it is a good plan.

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw my motion for the time being. I may renew it later.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I should like to make a single observation on this subject.

When I first came into the Senate we were appropriating yearly for about seventy Indian agents. They have been gradually reduced year by year, with the approval of the Senate, and, I think, with the approval of the whole country—at least of so much of the country as understands the Indian situation—until in this bill, as I understand, we only appropriate for twenty-three.

I think there has been more complaint with regard to the Indian Service, growing out of the way the Indian agents have administered their agencies than from any other one cause. It has been very great; I think it has sometimes been unnecessary; but those who have studied the Indian question have, I believe, come to the conclusion that as to most of the agencies the affairs can be better administered by a superintendent than by an Indian agent.

I hope there will be no change in the policy which has prevailed for the last twenty years—to reduce the number of agencies and the number of Indian agents.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada in charge of this bill in regard to the proviso we have been considering. Is that the same proviso which has been in the Indian appropriation acts in time past?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; for about four or five different sessions. I do not exactly remember how long.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator, who has probably examined into the matter, how many agencies have heretofore been transferred to superintendents of schools? What has been the practice of the Department under that provision as it has existed?

Mr. STEWART. They have reduced the number. I have not got in mind the exact number, but they have reduced it about two-thirds. There is only about one-third left.

Mr. SPOONER. A good many of these reductions have been in cases where Indians have received allotments of land.

Mr. STEWART. Not many. There are only one or two cases where they have gone out by reason of such allotments.

Mr. SPOONER. But the Senator does not attribute this reduction of Indian agents from seventy-odd to twenty-three to such allotments?

Mr. STEWART. Some of them. The reduction has been made because they have consolidated the office of superintendent, and he has performed the functions of the agent. That has been more economical; it certainly works with less friction, and we are not bothered with persons who are sent there from States far away. The trouble with the Senators from the West has been that they have been very much annoyed by the Administration sending strangers out there. That has been a very great trouble to us.

Mr. GORMAN. I do not understand how it is possible to get rid of strangers who have been appointed under the Civil Service Commission, because under that system the door is open to persons from every portion of the United States. Appointments may be made in that way from any section of the country.

Mr. STEWART. But they do not make any appointments there except by promotion. They are all pretty much made in that way. We are not bothered by that at all. Generally when an agent has been in the service for some years he has been made a superintendent. If he dies they fill the vacancy by sending a man from another agency. They promote a man from some other agency who is capable. Sometimes the Civil Service Commission will be called upon, but I do not believe they have been called upon many times by the Indian Department. The Indian Service has a full corps of officers, who are promoted for merit, and the Civil Service Commission will only be called upon for persons to occupy subordinate positions. A man must be an agent long enough to become familiar with this situation, of course, to be promoted to a full superintendent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is it not true that all the changes that have been made have been made by making the agent the superintendent of schools and making the present principal the principal teacher? Four of those have been made in the last year, and that has been the method adopted. I do not know of any case where they have called upon the Civil Service Commission for names for these positions. Of course, after they are once placed, they are promoted under the civil service, as I understand.

Mr. STEWART. That is true.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 7, line 3, after the words "enable the," to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 5, after the word "stockmen," to insert "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe;" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, etc.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of this bill if the amendment in lines 5 and 6, inserting the words "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STEWART. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended that amendment. He was before the committee and gave reasons for it, which the committee thought were satisfactory.

There is a good deal of difficulty through the Civil Service Commission in selecting a farmer for irrigating purposes. They may put all the questions to him they please, but no matter how learned he may be—he may come from Harvard College, in Boston, and stand at the head of his class, and go out there to farm by irrigation—unless he has had experience, he will be just as much at a loss as one of the Indians would be if he was sent from the West to teach Hebrew in that college.

I have seen agents and farmers sent out there whom the Indians would laugh at. Men do not know how to farm irrigated land without experience. A man has got to be out there a year or two before he is a practical farmer, and a college education does not necessarily make a man a practical farmer in irrigation. I once went with a committee to examine this question of irrigation. We went to Montana and found the people there starving to death and they had to have assistance. They were people from the East. They did not know how to irrigate land, but when they had experience they made those valleys of Montana perfect gardens. If you are going to have a practical farmer to show the Indians how to farm, he must have the proper qualifications, particularly in regard to irrigation. I think that the examination of the Indian Department in that respect is a great deal better than a civil-service examination.

Mr. LODGE. Is that the reason the committee inserted the same amendment about "matrons?"

Mr. STEWART. Yes; practically the reason.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the provision seems to be changing existing law, and I make the point of order that it is general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts makes the point of order that it is general legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish the Senator from Massachusetts would withhold the point of order for a brief statement which I wish to make.

Not only can we not bring a practical farmer from one section of the United States to another, but we can not even bring him from one portion of a State to another. The method of farming in California differs entirely from the method in Wisconsin or Michigan or southern Minnesota. The method of farming in southern Minnesota differs from the method in the Red River Valley of the North. The method of farming in the Red River Valley differs entirely from methods adopted in the western part of my own State. It seems to me that this is most essential. No one can get a practical education in farming unless he has had experience in the climate in which the products are to be produced, and ordinarily it takes fifteen or twenty years before the settlers in any particular section of a new country will understand how to farm that country. It comes from experience, and therefore the men who are to teach the Indians should be drawn from that section of the country where, having lived in it, they are qualified to teach the farming as it should be taught in the particular section in which the Indians are situated.

It seems to me this is most essential. No character of education, as has been suggested by the Senator from Nevada, can supply that knowledge which comes from practical experience in the particular locality where the farming is to be conducted.

I sincerely hope the Senator from Massachusetts will look at it in that light, as I believe the provision is for the interest of the Indians themselves and for the improvement of the service, and that nothing will be obtained simply by striking out this whole matter on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the amendment may be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to say a word on the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to remark that it is not general legislation. It is simply——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut has been recognized.

Mr. STEWART. It is simply to carry into effect the text of the bill. It is not general legislation to recite the qualifications of the officers who are to carry the law into effect.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I believe I am a pretty good friend of the civil-service law, but I have never believed that you were sure of getting a good farmer by competitive examination. I think any Senator will see that in that matter, especially on the western agencies, the Commissioner ought to be authorized to select his farmers without reference to competitive examination. Competitive examination will not test the comparative fitness of men who are to be put on the farms to teach the Indians.

In regard to the matrons I do not want to say anything, but I think so far as the farmers are concerned there is great reason for saying that their selection should be left to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be temporarily passed over.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask that the amendment with respect to matrons, a similar one, may be passed over. Let them both be passed over.

Mr. FORAKER. Where is the amendment about matrons?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On what page and line is the second amendment?

Mr. LODGE. On the next page; at the bottom of page 8.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts whether or not he is familiar with the character of examination to which applicants for the classified service in the capacity of farmers are subjected?

Mr. LODGE. I have not examined it particularly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment having been passed over, the Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. Where is the provision about the matrons?

Mr. LODGE. At the bottom of the next page.

Mr. FORAKER. What are they employed for?

Mr. LODGE. To teach the Indian girls housekeeping.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say one word about the matrons, to explain why the provision is in the bill and in this form.

Most of the Indian girls on the reservations, or a great proportion of them, have been educated at industrial schools. They have learned housekeeping pretty well, and they themselves are qualified to teach the Indian girls. I doubt, however, if one out of twenty, well qualified in all the industries which are taught in those schools, could pass a civil-service examination. It is the desire of the Department to employ those Indian girls right from the reservation, without going elsewhere for such employees, most of whom, of course, are not full bloods, who have taken this course in the industries which are taught to the girls, such as sewing, housekeeping, cooking, etc. Therefore it was thought best to take them out of the civil-service rules.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say that I asked for information, in perfect good faith, because I was impressed by what the Senator from North Dakota had said in regard to the varying requirements for farmers throughout the western country, one kind of farming being necessary in one locality, and quite a different knowledge being necessary for successful farming in another, due, of course, to soil and climatic conditions, and all that kind of thing.

I am surprised to learn that the selection of farmers and stockmen has been made subject to the rules and regulations of the classified service. I ought to have known it, no doubt, but I did not. It seems to me it would give us an interesting bit of information, to say the least, if we could be advised as to the character of the examination to which they are subjected.

Mr. STEWART. The Department contends that they should not come under the civil service.

Mr. FORAKER. I quite agree with the Department.

Mr. STEWART. You want to make it clear and settle the controversy?

Mr. FORAKER. I want to know, as a matter of information, to what kind of examination the men who are to be employed as farmers and stockmen under the provisions of the law as it now stands are subjected.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow these two amendments to go over, I will get that information.

Mr. FORAKER. I will be obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose they are examined on constitutional and international law.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like to know what their other qualifications must be.

Mr. HOPKINS. I suppose the stockman will be compelled to ride a burro as an experiment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TELLER. We on this side of the Chamber are entitled to hear something of what is going on, and it is utterly impossible to do it. If the reporter can hear, we can not, on account of the noise and confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of this bill what necessity there is for either of these provisions? As I understand the law governing the civil service, the President, with the Commission, has the right to make any modification he sees proper in this matter. The examination of a farmer or a housekeeper for the Indians, as a matter of course, is ridiculous, but it is a rule which has been given the force of law, made practically and principally by the President of the United States, as I understand, when he was Civil Service Commissioner. Now, he has the unquestioned right and power, and I myself should regard it as a duty, to make the change, not only in the matter of the Indians, but in other cases. It does seem to me, as the discretion has been placed in the hands of the Executive for many years, and it has seemingly been so well administered and to the satisfaction of the country, the responsibility ought to be allowed to continue to rest with him.

We have an Administration that is especially devoted to the civil service and which has the confidence—the President at all events has—of all the civil-service reformers of the country, and properly so, for I think he is very sincere about it and is very anxious to have it enforced in all these cases; but just at this time, in this year, at just this particular juncture, we find everywhere, in all the legislation that comes along, some provision, or the omission of some provision in new cases, so as to relieve the employees from civil-service examination, to open the door for appointments without reference to anything, I take it, except possibly the fitness of the applicant and that sort of influence which is desirable at certain stages in our history.

I noticed one thing the other day. The distinguished gentleman whom the President has selected as chairman of the Isthmian Commission—and wisely selected, for I think Admiral Walker is one of the ablest men in the country—was discussing another case as to employees, and there will be thousands and thousands of them on the new canal. He was asked the question whether the civil service ought to apply to all of that immense patronage, and he remarked properly that he was in favor of and most anxious to have that law in force except in cases of appointments under his Commission. So we go.

I am content to leave the responsibility with the Executive under the present law, so long as it is on the statute books. I suggest that instead of this piecemeal legislation in the Indian bill and on the bill for the employment of people on the isthmian canal we had better permit the law to remain as it is and not attempt by law to exclude certain people from the civil service.

I have never been very much of a civil-service reformer in the sense in which that term is applied. I myself think it is ridiculous to examine a blacksmith or one of these farmers or a housekeeper, but the system has been applied, and applied every day, until now it is utterly impossible in this city, for instance, to get employment in the most subordinate places in the Government, as a mere laborer or folder, for some poor person who is out of work, with nothing to do, with no employment here in a commercial way. If the rule is to be observed, let it be universal. Let it apply to all these cases until the President himself and his Commission shall ascertain by the enforcement of it that it is impracticable, and then he can relieve it, and he can do it in five minutes without this legislation. I therefore trust that we will not attempt in this bill to change the law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has said is quite true. It is entirely in the power of the Executive to exempt farmers and stockmen from the classified service and from examination, and although it seems to me on the face of it as if those appointments had better not be in the classified service, I do think that before we legislate on it we ought to at least know what are the views of the Executive and the Secretary of the Interior. While I am not disposed to criticise, on the abstract merits, the question as to stockmen and farmers, I do think it would be a mistake to take out of the classified service the women who fill the position of matrons.

The main thing is that it is wholly in the control of the Executive. It is wholly in the control of the Secretary of the Interior, really. If he desires to have these classes exempted, they can be exempted by an Executive order, and it seems to me to legislate upon it at this time is unnecessary.

But I ask that the amendments may both be passed over, as I should like to inquire into the state of the case before we act.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, before the amendments are passed over, I should like to say a word or two.

It does not seem to me that there ought to be any objection to this provision. It is true the President of the United States may modify the rules, but he has not done so, and for the last six or eight years they certainly have been in force with reference to this class of employees of the Government. It is perfectly absurd to give a civil-service examination in the ordinary method to a man who is going to work on a farm in the arid region. I have known something of the operations of the present law and of the way in which it has been administered.

Not long ago there was a man sent out to one of the arid region agencies with a certificate that he had passed the Civil Service Commission examination. I suppose he had passed an examination in mathematics, history probably, grammar, etc., but he knew absolutely nothing about farming. He knew nothing about irrigation. I presume he knew that water would run down hill if it had an opportunity. Beyond that I think his ideas as to water were exceedingly limited.

Mr. President, that man was not worth one cent to the Government. He was a positive injury to the tribe where he was sent; and instead of teaching the Indians there were plenty of Indians on the reservation who could teach him, and what is true of the farmer is true of the women who are sent out to teach the Indians.

Senators say the President may do it. I know he will not do it. Whenever any attempt is made to correct what I believe are the absurd features of the civil-service regulations, the whole body of the people who think that the millennium will come by the enforcement of civil-service rules are up in arms. They are a good deal worse than what we call in politics, with reference to the tariff, the "stand-patters." They stand pat that nothing must be done with this regulation or the other regulation touching the employment of people, either as clerks or anything else under the Government.

Strike out this provision, and somebody will go to the Commissioner and will want Mr. Jones appointed a farmer. Mr. Jones will have a certificate that he has passed the civil-service examination, that he is way up in algebra and mathematics of all kinds, and that he is a scientific gentleman, perhaps a graduate of some college, but utterly unfit for the duties for which he is appointed. He gets a salary of $75 a month, which is quite an inducement, and you need a salary of that kind to get a good man who understands that class of farming in the western country.

Mr. President, the people who profess to be the friends of the Indians should not sacrifice the Indians to a theory, to a mere suggestion that there is something so sacred about the civil-service rules that they can not be modified by legislation. It is proposed to surrender the whole thing to the President of the United States, who, as we know, is a devotee of that idea. There is something more wanted in every branch of the Government than mere education. There are adaptability, fitness, and, among other things, there is the question of integrity. All of those things go to make up good employees, and nobody ought to be better qualified to determine properly who is the man he wants for a special service of this kind than the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

It is said it is not known that the Secretary of the Interior wants this, and I do not know as to that, but I do know that it has the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I know it has the approval of every man of common sense acquainted with the conditions intended to be met by the appointment of these farmers.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, just a word. I do not agree with the principle announced by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that because the President has the power to eliminate from the classified service employees of the Government like the Indian farmers and stockmen and declines to do it, and the Senate thinks it ought to be done in the public interest, we, in enacting upon these bills, should not do it. We made the law under which the civil-service system has grown to such tremendous proportions, and it occurs to me that a very manifest duty rests upon the Congress to exercise its power as to the manner in which the public moneys shall be expended so far as it relates to the purposes and so far as it relates to the instrumentalities.

I am in favor of the classified service within reasonable limits. I think it has been a great public good, so far as it relates to clerical positions in Washington, and generally in respect of different classes of officials. I believe if to-day it were to be destroyed or abrogated Representatives and Senators would find no time for the study and investigation and thought which are requisite to the intelligent discharge of public duties, and I am not at all in favor of abrogating it or modifying it so far as it seems to be a proper system. But the Civil Service Commission, like every other commission that I have ever known anything about, is reaching out continually for a wider field for its effort, and there is no department of this Government to-day, so far as I know, except, perhaps, the Executive, if the executive power were exerted to its utmost, which covers so wide a domain, and absolutely covers it, as the Civil Service Commission.

And to have them under the civil service, some positions, including, I think, these positions of Indian farmers and stockmen, taking that characterization in its popular sense, is utterly ridiculous. You might as well subject a detective to a civil-service examination. It is nonsense. Some of the best detectives that I have known were men who could not pass a civil-service examination. It would be almost impossible to frame a question a correct answer to which would afford any information whatever to the Civil Service Commission as to whether the man was or was not a fit man.

I know a stockman, one of the very best I think there is in the country, who can not spell and who can hardly write so that you can read it, but he is a splendid judge of stock of all sorts. This man has made himself a man of wealth, but that a man of his capacity and judgment and knowledge of stock, which can be acquired only in one way, should be excluded from the Government service because, forsooth, he has not been examined in geography, and reading, and writing, and spelling, even the rudimentary——

Mr. MCCUMBER. Composition.

Mr. SPOONER. Composition, even the rudimentary branches, is a detriment to the public service; it is against the public service, and it is way beyond what was ever intended by the old-time devotees of civil-service reform; and it has been and is a great reform.

What I rose to say was in reply to an observation made by the Senator from Maryland, which is not characteristic of him, that although we think that in the public interest the law ought to be changed in this respect, in making this appropriation we ought not to change it, because the President could change it if he would, but that it has not been called to his attention, or he has taken a different view of the subject. I do not think Congress ought to abdicate its legislative function in any particular.

It never occurred to me that these amendments would be imputed to any ulterior political purpose. I never saw that. It is so small that I think it could hardly properly be imputed to the committee or to the Indian Commissioner. I know it could not be so imputed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin misunderstood me if he supposes I intended to say that it was not wholly within our power and jurisdiction. It is very proper for us to consider all these things and to deal with them.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. One moment. But I do think, when we have put certain powers in the hands of the executive department, it is at least reasonable to know what is their view of a law like this, which involves a purely executive matter. What I am trying to find out is what is the view of the Interior Department in regard to it. Why have they never made the change? They may have some reason. I do not know. My own impression is, like the Senator's, that stockmen and farmers had better not be put under a system of examination. That is my own impression, but I should like to hear what the Department which is charged with the work has to say before we pass upon it. That is all I care about.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator to say, and the RECORD will either confirm him or me, that the power is in the President to change it——

Mr. LODGE. I did say that.

Mr. SPOONER. And he thought we had better not touch it.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think I went so far as that. I did say the power is in the President to change it, and I thought if the Executive thought it desirable to change it he would have changed it. Therefore, I think it would be well to have their view before we change it. We may overrule them and think their views are bad.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood it to be stated here that the Indian Commissioner has recommended this.

Mr. STEWART. He did, and he explained the reason why—the difficulty of getting anybody to do the service.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the amendments go over. I want to look into them.

Mr. STEWART. In the case of the matrons——

Mr. LODGE. In the case of the matrons I think it is a mistake.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It having been agreed that the amendments shall be temporarily passed over, the Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] I think rather misunderstood me. I meant to say that I am not in sympathy at all with the rule which places all employees of this class under the civil service. But the rule is universal. It applies to all Departments of the Government. It applies to the most subordinate positions in this city and elsewhere. It has been enforced by the President, or by the Commission with the approval of the President, under the act. I think it ought to be changed, but I believe we ought not to deal with that question piecemeal, as is proposed in these various cases.

I did remark that it is a little peculiar, no matter what the intention of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or others may be, to observe the activity just at this time to be relieved from the enforcement of civil-service rules, when all these subordinate appointments are to be made. It struck me as a little peculiar. I did not think it would have any very great political influence either one way or the other, but I remarked it only incidentally. It so happened that I was one of the Senators who voted for the civil-service law when it was originally enacted—the measure known as the "Pendleton bill." But it was not within the mind of anybody at that time that it would be carried to the extent it has been done in applying it to all these subordinates and minor places.

I am rather inclined to agree, and I do agree, with the Senator from Wisconsin that it has been demoralizing rather than otherwise in the class of places where mechanics are employed and all that. I should like to see relief come, and I should like to see it general, not only in the Indian Service, but in all other branches of the service.

As I mentioned a moment ago, Admiral Walker objects to its application to the construction of the canal on the Isthmus. I agree with Admiral Walker. I think he is quite right. I have no idea that the Civil Service Commission by the recommendation of the President would ever enforce it there. It would be destructive to the end sought to be gained. It would prevent him from employing the men he would want, for the character of engineers he will require would not appear before the Civil Service Commission and ask for appointment. So it is in the case of other employees.

I am very glad to see that there is a disposition all around—and I trust it will reach the Executive—to modify the orders which have created so much hardship and, I think, so much embarrassment in the administration of the Government.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that in the case of clerkships and permanent places here it has been beneficial. However, I am not inclined to believe that they have had very much more efficiency in the service than existed before; but it has been a great relief from the pressure that has been brought for appointments.

There are men in the Government service—indeed, I am told about one-half of them in the employment of the Departments in this city—who have never passed the civil-service examinations. I have in mind a few officers with the services of whom no party at any time would ever think of dispensing, because of their efficiency. I have in mind one man who keeps the accounts at the Treasury Department, Mr. MacLennan. He has been there from a date prior to 1860. No party would think of disturbing him or his corps of assistants. They are as permanent as though they were under the civil-service law. But in the ordinary run of cases, with the changes that occurred, it was embarrassing to men in public life, and so in that respect great good has come from it.

But it does seem to me that unless Congress intends by an act to restrict the power of this board and prevent them from dealing with subordinate cases such as we now have under consideration, we ought not to attempt to do it by piecemeal. It ought to be general. The enforcement of such a rule as has been made has brought us to a frame of mind we are now in in the discussion of the question. I think the rigid enforcement of it will compel a change in the rule by the President. I think he had views in regard to this matter which he honestly entertained before he had any practical experience in the administration of the Government. There is evidence all around us in various acts of that distinguished gentleman that he has modified his views in regard to many of these questions, the practical side of which he has been compelled to meet. He can do it, and do it readily. I hope to see him change the rule, not only for the Indian Service, but for all other Departments of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 7, line 8, after the word "month," to insert "and for furnishing necessary equipments and rental of quarters."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 8, to insert:

To pay such contingent expenses of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court and such of its officers as the Secretary of the Interior may deem proper, and for rental of quarters, $5,000, to be immediately available. And the unexpended balance of the appropriation for contingent expenses, as provided in the act of July 1, 1902, of $5,000 remaining on the books of the Interior Department December 31, 1903, amounting to $1,136.25, to the credit of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, is hereby reappropriated for the necessary expenses of the said court until December 31, 1904.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 13, to insert:

For one stenographer to each of the three judges of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, to be appointed by them, respectively, at $100 per month each, from March 3 to June 30, 1903, $1,180.65; for traveling expenses and subsistence of said stenographers, the reporter, and the bailiff of said court, not to exceed $3 per day each, $1,500; in all, $2,680.65, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 25, after the word "matrons," to insert "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe;" so as to make the clause read:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ suitable persons as matrons, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to teach Indian girls in housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not to exceed $70 per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments, $25,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be temporarily passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 4, after the word "equipments," to insert "and rental of quarters."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 18 on page 11, the end of the items under the heading "Choctaws."

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not know whether it is in order now to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order at this time. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the amendments of the committee will first receive consideration.

Mr. McLAURIN. I wish to state that I have an amendment which I desire to offer at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the amendments of the committee are disposed of the bill will then be open to amendment still further.

The reading was continued. The next amendment was, under the head of "Fulfilling treaty stipulations with and support of Indian tribes," on page 12, after line 17, to insert:

CHIPPEWAS OF NORTH DAKOTA.

To carry into effect the provisions of an agreement concluded between duly appointed commissioners on the part of the United States and the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians in the State of North Dakota on the 22d day of October, 1892, which said agreement shall be amended to read as follows:

"ARTICLE I. The friendly relations heretofore existing between the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians and the United States shall be forever maintained.

"ART. II. The Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in consideration of the covenants and stipulations hereinafter contained, do hereby cede, alienate, and convey to the United States all the claims, estate, right, title, and interest of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, or any of them, as members of said band of Indians, in and to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments situate, lying, and being in the State of North Dakota, excepting and reserving from this conveyance, for the purposes mentioned in Article III hereof, that tract of land particularly mentioned and set apart by an Executive order of the President of the United States bearing date the 3d day of June, A. D. 1884, to which reference is hereby had for more particular description, the said reserve being 12 miles in length and 6 miles in breadth and now occupied as a reservation by the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians.

"It being expressly stipulated that the land now occupied and used for school, church, and Government purposes shall be so held at the pleasure of the United States and may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, be patented, when the interest of the United States, the Indians thereon, or the efficient school conduct requires. The Secretary of the Interior may, as occasion requires, set apart other land in said reserve for school and other public uses.

"ART. III. The land, woods, and waters above reserved for the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, subject to the stipulations contained in Article II of this treaty and agreement, shall be held as the common property of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, and it is agreed that the United States shall, as soon as it can conveniently be done, cause the land hereby reserved and held for the use of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians to be surveyed, as public lands are surveyed, for the purpose of enabling such Indians as desire to take homesteads, and the selections shall be so made as to include in each case, as far as possible, the residence and improvements of the Indians making selection, giving to each an equitable proportion of natural advantages, and when it is not practicable to so apportion the entire homestead of land in one body it may be set apart in separate tracts, not less than 40 acres in any one tract unless the same shall abut upon a lake; but all assignments of land in severalty shall conform to the Government survey. And lands in said reservation which shall not be taken by said Indians within such time as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior after the ratification of this agreement may be opened for settlement as other public lands. The survey of this land shall be made as Government surveys and at no expense to the Indians.

"ART. IV. In consideration of the premises and the foregoing cession the United States agrees to pay to the said Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians the sum of $1,000,000, such amount to be paid either in cash or yearly installments, in such sums as the Secretary of the Interior may consider for the best interest of said tribe of Indians: Provided, That in case the Secretary of the Interior does not see fit to pay the sum hereinbefore mentioned in cash, but considers it for the best interests of the Indians of said tribe to pay the same in yearly installments, he is hereby authorized and directed to expend such portion of the pro rata share of each Indian on the reserve, as his needs may require, in building, improving, and repairing the houses of such Indians, except as hereinafter agreed.

"ART. V. The schools now located upon the above-named reserve are to be maintained in efficiency, as at present, so long as, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, conditions demand the maintenance of such schools, not to exceed, however, the term of twenty years.

"ART. VI. All members of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians who may be unable to secure land upon the reservation above ceded may take homesteads upon any vacant land belonging to the United States without charge, and shall continue to hold and be entitled to such share in all tribal funds, annuities, or other property, the same as if located on the reservation.

"ART. VII. So long as the United States retains and holds the title to any land in the use or occupation of any member of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians or the title to other property in the possession of any Indian of said band, which it may do for twenty years, there shall be no tax or other duty levied or assessed upon the property, the title to which is held or retained by the United States.

"ART. VIII. It is further covenanted and agreed that under no circumstances the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, nor any members of said band of Indians, shall take up arms against or resist the established authorities of the United States. Every person so violating this stipulation shall, in the discretion of the United States, be forever barred from the benefits of this agreement, and all rights of such person or persons hereunder shall be forfeited to the United States.

"ART. IX. This agreement to be of no binding force or effect until ratified by the Congress of the United States." And which said agreement, amended as above, is hereby accepted, ratified, and confirmed, $1,000,000.

That for the purpose of making the surveys and allotments contemplated in said agreement, $3,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the consent of the committee, I will offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. There was some little amendment made to the bill passed by the Senate yesterday, and I should like to have the Senator from North Dakota put in his amendment here.

Mr. McCUMBER. With that understanding, I will move, after the word "reservation," on line 3, page 16, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That such right of alternate selection of homesteads shall not be alienated or represented by power of attorney.

It is the same as the amendment which was adopted yesterday when the bill passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Kickapoos in Kansas," on page 18, line 18, after the word "and," to strike out "fifty-five" and insert "fifty-four;" so as to read:

Interest on $65,540.94, at 5 per cent per annum, for educational and other beneficial purposes, per treaty of May 18, 1854, $3,277.04.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask that that bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside in order that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the subhead "Winnebagoes," on page 29, after line 6, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay per capita to the following Indians, under such regulations as he may prescribe, the money now to their credit in the Treasury of the United States, namely: L'Anse and Vieux de Sert Chippewas, Michigan; Omahas, Nebraska; Otoe and Missouria, Oklahoma; Stockbridge and Munsee, Wisconsin; Tonkawas, Oklahoma; Umatillas, Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the Sioux Indians residing at Flandreau, in the State of South Dakota, the share of said Indians in the principal permanent fund appropriated and placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians by the seventeenth section of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889 (Stat. L., vol. 25, p. 895).

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 23, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to cause to be paid to the persons hereinafter named, formerly members of the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians, now citizens of the United States, that is to say, to William M. Hazlett, Nora G. Hazlett, Joe Weller, Charles S. Williams, Fred Exendine, Earl Purdy, Grimes Atkin, Clay J. Bronson, Bella K. Bronson, Francis E. Cross, James Deer, Jennie Deer, John D. Browning, Margaret L. Browning, Bela Ellis, Mary Perdier Gray, Charles Inkanish, James Inkanish, Henry Inkanish, Ellen E. King, Louisa P. Medrano, John Osborne, Alice Osborne, E. B. Parrish, Nancy Parrish, Mary N. Purdy, Vernon Purdy, H. P. Pruner, Lucy J. Pruner, Charles B. Pruner, Frank Purdy, Bill Perdier, Sallie Perdier, Jessee Strum, Mattie Strum, Oscar Tobanaka, Homer J. Seger, Katie Strum Thomas, Jessee Williams, Willie Weller, Cora C. West, Benjamin Montello, Alice Inkanish Cussen, their per capita share of the funds derived from the sale or disposition of lands made in pursuance of the decree of the Court of Claims in the case of The Choctaw Nation and The Chickasaw Nation v. The United States and The Wichita and Affiliated Bands of Indians, being No. 18932, which has accrued up to and including December 31, 1903, except the fund which has accrued from the disposition of land reserved for the use of schools, colleges, and public buildings, said payments to be made to the said persons through those authorized to aid in collecting the same upon the execution of proper receipts.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 2, to insert:

For the purpose of carrying into effect the agreement entered into on the 17th day of June, 1901, by and between James McLaughlin, United States Indian inspector, on the part of the United States, and the Klamath and Modoc tribes and the Yahooskin band of Snake Indians, belonging to the Klamath Agency in the State of Oregon, set forth in the report of the Secretary of the Interior reporting the same to Congress and printed in House of Representatives Document No. 79, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, the sum of $537,007.20 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the said agreement is hereby ratified and confirmed. Of the said sum so appropriated, $250,000 shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians and the remainder shall be expended as provided in the third article of said agreement.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has an amendment that was agreed to by the committee to the bill which he would like to have put on here.

Mr. MITCHELL. After line 20, on page 31, I move an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is offered, the Chair understands, with the consent of the committee.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; it is authorized by the committee.

The SECRETARY. Add, after the word "agreement," in line 20, page 31, the following proviso:

Provided, That all indemnity school-land selections made by the State of Oregon in lieu of sections 16 and 36, in place between the boundary of the Klamath Indian Reservation, as erroneously fixed in 1888, and the boundary agreed upon in the treaty with the Indians in 1864, as confirmed by the Klamath Boundary Commission under act of June 10, 1896, in their report to the Secretary of the Interior dated December 18, 1896, and by the survey made pursuant thereto and accepted by the General Land Office May 7, 1900, which are otherwise regular and free from any prior lawful claim, are hereby confirmed to the State of Oregon as school lands: Provided, That the State furnish evidence satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior that at the date of filing such list of selections it had not disposed of or encumbered its title to said base lands.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire what is the effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. The effect is simply this. As the Senator is aware, the State surrendered as a base sections 36 and 16 in this disputed district, and took in lieu thereof certain other sections. Now, the treaty confirms these selections, but the Department does not permit the matter to go to a finality until Congress has acted upon the treaty. The effect is simply to give to the State of Oregon as school lands lieu lands that they have selected in place of sections 16 and 36 of this disputed territory.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What becomes, then, of sections 16 and 36?

Mr. MITCHELL. They go to the United States, for which we are now paying these Indians nearly $600,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Not for them alone, but for all the lands.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; for all the lands, and part of the lands for which, under the treaty, this bill pays the Indians some $600,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The lands are settled upon, I suppose?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know about that. I presume some of them are. The whole district has been in dispute so long that I suppose there are very few settlers on those lands. The provision is guarded in every respect.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, under the head of "Miscellaneous supports and gratuities," on page 31, line 22, after the word "For," to strike out "subsistence" and insert "support;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and civilization of the Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, Wichitas, and affiliated bands who have been collected in the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, line 5, after the word "five," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the proviso in the appropriation of $225,000 for the support and civilization of Indians in Arizona and New Mexico in the Indian appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1904 is hereby corrected to read as follows: "Provided, That the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1903 is hereby appropriated and made available for 1904," and made applicable accordingly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," on page 38, line 12, before the word "consisting," to strike out "now unsettled;" and in line 14, after the word "tribe," to strike out:

And all the restrictions upon the sale or lease of lands of all allottees of either of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, who are not of the Indian blood, are hereby removed, except the restrictions upon the homestead which shall not be affected hereby.

And insert:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and when he shall become satisfied beyond question that the same is for the best interest of the allottee and upon full investigation of each individual case, remove the restriction upon the sale, or lease of allotted lands of either of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, except restrictions upon the homestead, which shall not be affected hereby.

So as to make the clause read:

For salaries of four Commissioners appointed under acts of Congress approved March 3, 1893, and March 2, 1895, to negotiate with the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, $20,000, and said Commission shall conclude its work and terminate on or before the 1st day of July, 1905, and said Commission shall cease to exist on July 1, 1905: Provided, That said Commission shall exercise all the powers heretofore conferred upon it by Congress: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby granted authority to sell at public sale in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one purchaser, under rules and regulations to be made by the Secretary of the Interior, the residue of land in the Creek Nation belonging to the Creek tribe of Indians, consisting of about 500,000 acres, and being the residue of lands left over after allotments of 160 acres to each of said tribe: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, and when he shall become satisfied beyond question that the same is for the best interest of the allottee and upon full investigation of each individual case, remove the restriction upon the sale or lease of allotted lands of either of the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, except restrictions upon the homestead which shall not be affected hereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 4, to increase the appropriation for expenses of Commissioners and necessary expenses of employees; for clerical help, including secretary of the Commission and interpreters to the Five Civilized Tribes in the Indian Territory, from $242,294 to $242,295.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 9, to insert:

That no proceedings heretofore had with respect to allotments in the Cherokee Nation shall be held invalid on the ground that they were had before there was authority to begin the work of allotment in said nation: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed as validating any filings heretofore made on lands segregated for the Delaware Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 16, to insert:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed to make rules and regulations governing the renting of the homesteads and surplus lands allotted to full-blood Indians belonging to the Creek, Cherokee, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Indians in the Indian Territory, and to the minor children of such Indians, and no rental contract of the lands allotted to such Indians or to their minor children shall be valid or binding until approved by him: Provided, That if any full-blood adult member of either of the said tribes believes himself or herself competent to make leases and transact his or her affairs such member may file a request with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for a permit to lease the lands which have been allotted to him or her and the minor children of such member, and if upon consideration and examination of the request the said Commissioner shall find said member to be fully competent and capable of managing and caring for his or her own individual affairs he may issue a certificate to such member authorizing him or her to make rental contracts for the lands allotted to such member and his or her minor children.

Mr. MONEY. I raise the point of order on that amendment of the committee. The point is that it is new and general legislation upon an appropriation bill. I will not want to argue it at all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the point of order?

Mr. MONEY. The point of order is that the amendment is new and general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. To what amendment does the point of order relate?

Mr. MONEY. To the amendment beginning at line 17, on page 39, which has just been stated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not this is new legislation.

Mr. MONEY. It certainly is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, whether it is general legislation. Our rules do not provide against new legislation.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, my point was that the amendment was new and general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, the legislation for the Indian Territory has heretofore been principally enacted on Indian appropriation bills. I do not claim that it has been strictly within the rule; but it has seemed impossible to legislate for the settling up of the affairs of the Indian Territory except upon appropriation bills.

The matter was commenced years ago, when we appointed the Dawes Commission and gave them authority to enter into such agreements with the Indians as it was supposed would eventually result in the segregating of the lands of the Indians and their becoming citizens. It has been a great work; it has applied to a territory as large as the State of Indiana. To take those lands from out of their condition as tribal and communal lands, and to see that they were allotted to individual Indians, and the terms upon which such Indians should hold their allotments, has been a very much greater and more important work than I suppose is realized by members of the Senate or Members of the other House.

This legislation is simply to change in some respects laws heretofore enacted on appropriation bills with reference to the leasing or renting, or, possibly, the sale, though I think it refers simply to the renting of lands.

Mr. MONEY. To the renting.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Of course, if the point of order prevails against the amendment the work will thereby be delayed and hindered, and an immense tract of territory, as I say, as large as the State of Indiana, will be tied up—not only the homesteads, but the surplus lands of the Indians in the hands of Indians, inalienable for twenty years, so that there can be no taxation for the support of any government which may be established there.

This is a very important matter, Mr. President; and if this provision is general legislation and objected to on that ground, there may be infinite damage done in that Territory. If the provision is going out of this bill, I do not suppose we shall ever have an opportunity to pass it in any other way.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not suppose it is necessary to argue the amendment of the committee upon its merits, simply upon the suggestion I have made that it is out of order; but I will say, if it is necessary to go into the merits, that the treaty with the several tribes arranges this matter satisfactorily. As to the rentals and the rights of minor children of the Indians and others, they can go to the courts to be satisfied, and if there is any lack of protection to such minors or to anybody else they can go to the courts. Everything, so far as I understand, has been arranged by treaties of different dates—1898, 1900, and 1902.

Of course I do not want to make any argument upon the merits, but simply as to whether the question of the point of order is good or not. It is either good or not good. It is so obvious to my mind that it is good that I do not think the President of the Senate needs to have anything said about it, and so I submit the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment proposes general legislation; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 40, after line 12, to insert:

No application for enrollment as a citizen or freedman, except as hereinafter provided, of either the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole tribes of Indians in Indian Territory shall be received by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes after the passage of this act: Provided, That the said Commission is hereby authorized for sixty days after the date of the approval of this act to receive and consider applications for the enrollment of children born since January 1, 1896, and prior to September 28, 1902, to recognized and enrolled citizens of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, or born since January 1, 1896, and prior to September 1, 1902, to recognized and enrolled citizens of the Cherokee Nation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 10, after the word "and" where it occurs the first time, to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to make the clause read:

To carry out the provisions of section 10 of the supplemental agreements with the Creek Nation, as ratified by the act of June 30, 1902, and section 37 of the Cherokee agreement, as ratified by the act of July 1, 1902, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, line 15, before the word "possession," to strike out "unrestricted" and insert "exclusive," and in line 21, after the words "Indian Territory," to insert:

And it shall be unlawful for any person who is now, or may have been, in the employ of the United States, directly or indirectly to purchase, lease, or have any interest in any Indian lands the distribution of which was in any manner whatsoever pending in or before the branch of the Government service in which such person was employed, until after the expiration of two years from the termination of such employment.

So as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of placing allottees in exclusive possession of their allotments, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $30,000: Provided, That no portion of the money herein appropriated for the Indian Territory shall be paid to any person in the service of the United States until such person shall make oath that he has no financial interest with any person or corporation dealing in Indian lands in the Indian Territory. And it shall be unlawful for any person who is now or may have been in the employ of the United States directly or indirectly to purchase, lease, or have any interest in any Indian lands the distribution of which was in any manner whatsoever pending in or before the branch of the Government service in which such person was employed until after the expiration of two years from the termination of such employment.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 5, to insert:

That the Delaware-Cherokee citizens who have made improvements, or are in rightful possession of such improvements, in the Cherokee Nation at the time of the passage of this act shall have the right to first select from said improved lands their allotments, and thereafter, for a period of six months, shall have the right to sell the improvements upon their surplus holdings of lands to other citizens of the Cherokee Nation entitled to select allotments at a valuation to be approved by an official to be designated by the President for that purpose; and the vendor shall have a lien upon the rents and profits of the land on which the improvements are located for the purchase money remaining unpaid; and the vendor shall have the right to enforce such lien in any court of competent jurisdiction. The vendor may, however, elect to take and retain the possession of the land at a fair cash rental, to be approved by the official so as aforesaid designated, until such rental shall be sufficient to satisfy the unpaid purchase price, and when the purchase price is fully paid he shall forthwith deliver possession of the land to the purchaser: Provided, however, That any crops then growing on the land shall be and remain the property of the vendor, and he may have access to the land so long as may be necessary to cultivate and gather such growing crops. Any such purchaser shall, without unreasonable delay, apply to select as an allotment the land upon which the improvements purchased by him are located, and shall submit with his application satisfactory proof that he has in good faith purchased such improvements.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 20, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use $5,000 of the $12,000 appropriated by the act of May 27, 1902, to enable him to remove certain Indians, known as Wenatchi, to the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, and to properly establish and temporarily maintain them, for the benefit of said Indians in their present homes, in the purchase of agricultural implements, wagons, teams, and in the erection of houses, as in his discretion he may deem proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 5, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the conditions of the landless nonreservation Indians of northern California and to report to Congress at the next session what assistance, if any, should be given by the Government for improving their condition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 12, after the word "directed," to strike out "with the consent of the nation, secured in the usual manner;" so as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the intruders in the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory, who have not heretofore for any reason been paid the amounts due them by appraisement heretofore made for improvements, such payment to be made out of funds now at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior for such purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the close of the following paragraphs on page 46, from line 4 to line 11:

To maintain at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $10,000.

To maintain at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $10,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to move to amend the bill by striking out the paragraph relating to the location of a warehouse at Omaha and the paragraph relating to a warehouse at St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will not the Senator withhold his amendment until the committee amendments are disposed of?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the amendment would not now be in order. It will be in order after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 46, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

To maintain at the city of San Francisco, Cal., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, $10,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 15, to insert:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause to be assembled, at the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, at such time and for such period as he may designate, and as a part of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, to be held at the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri, pursuant to an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mine, forest, and sea in the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri," approved March 3, 1901, such representatives of the different Indian tribes and such exhibits from Indian agencies, schools, and archives as he may deem advisable or necessary to illustrate the past and present conditions of the Indians and the Indian tribes of the United States, and progress made by such in education, art, and industry, and the methods of education and government, and such other matters and things as will fully illustrate Indian advancement in civilization, the details of which shall be in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. And for the purpose of carrying into effect this provision the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated; but the Secretary of the Interior is prohibited from making, or causing to be made, any expenditure or creating any liability on behalf of the United States in excess of the sum hereby appropriated.

The next amendment was, on page 47, after line 17, to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to aid in the enforcement of the act of Congress approved January 30, 1897, entitled "An act to prohibit the sale of intoxicating drinks to Indians, providing penalties therefor, and for other purposes," $10,000, to be immediately available, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in securing evidence against persons suspected of having violated said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 20, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $2,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $1,500, and for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of said attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $500; in all, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 21, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

That the time for opening the unallotted lands to public entry on the Uintah Reservation, in Utah, as provided by the acts of May 27, 1902, and March 3, 1903, be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1905. That the.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 3, before the word "Secretary," to insert "The;" and in line 9, after the word "judgment," to strike out "in all, $2,000;" so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withhold from the amount appropriated by act of February 9, 1900, to pay the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the New York Indians, an additional sum not exceeding $5,000, to be immediately available, and to apply it in the payment of expenses necessary in ascertaining the beneficiaries of said judgment.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 10, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon the sale of lands in Indian Territory covered by coal and asphalt leases, to sell such lands subject to the right of the lessee to use so much of the surface as may be needed for coke ovens, miners' houses, store and supply buildings, and such other structures as are generally used in the production and shipment of coal and coke. Lessees may use the tipples and underground workings located on any lease in the production of coal and coke from adjoining leases, and are hereby authorized to surrender leased premises to the owner thereof on giving sixty days' notice in writing to such owner and paying all charges and royalties due to the date of surrender: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall release the lessee from the payment of the stipulated royalty so long as such lessee remains in possession of any of the surface of the lands included in his lease for any purpose whatever.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 3, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed (the Osage Indians consenting thereto) to apply the funds derived from grazing now standing to the credit of the said Indians in the Treasury, together with such portion of the funds hereafter derived from such source as may be necessary, as a tribal or community fund, in the payment of the balance now remaining due on the claims of certain licensed Indian traders against individual members of the tribe.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 12, to insert:

That from and after the approval of this act exclusive jurisdiction is conferred upon the United States courts in the Indian Territory in the matter of appointing guardians and administrators, and chapters 1 and 73 of Mansfield's Digest of the Statutes of Arkansas of 1884, heretofore extended and put in force in the Indian Territory, are hereby made applicable to all estates, whether Indian, freedman, or otherwise, both as to appointment of administrators and guardians.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 21, to insert:

That the act entitled "An act to refer to the Court of Claims certain claims of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians and the freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to confer upon the Court of Claims the same jurisdiction to determine the claims and rights of those alleged citizens of the Cherokee Nation known as intermarried whites as is therein conferred upon said court relative to the rights and claims of the Shawnee and Delaware Indians and the freedmen of said Cherokee Nation, and said case shall be advanced on the calendar of said Court of Claims and the calendar of the Supreme Court, if the same is appealed. Said court in said judgment shall fix the amount due the attorney or attorneys of record for their legal services, not exceeding the amount stipulated by the contracts between said claimants and said attorneys, and shall in said judgment direct that the accounting officers of the United States shall deduct from the amount due each claimant the attorney fee allowed in said judgment and pay the same directly to said attorneys and shall pay the balance to the claimants.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 17, to insert:

Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to enter final judgment in the case referred to it by letter of the Secretary of the Interior dated February 24, 1903, and designated on the calendar of said court as "Departmental—No. 76," and either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from said judgment, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court to hear and determine said appeal. This case shall be advanced on the calendars of said courts.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 2, to insert:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $700,000, or so much thereof as may be needed for the purpose of satisfying the final decree of the Court of Claims in the certain suit in interpleader, wherein the United States was complainant and the Choctaw Nation, the Chickasaw Nation, and the Chickasaw Freedmen were defendants and respondents, No. 23115 upon the docket of said court, said decree having been affirmed, on appeal, by the Supreme Court of the United States, the same having been rendered against the United States and in favor of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations for the value of the lands of said nations allotted by the United States to the Chickasaw Freedmen, as ascertained by the appraisal thereof made by the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902 (32 Stat., 649), said payment to be in full satisfaction of all claims by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations against the United States or the said Freedmen on account of the taking of said lands for allotment to said Freedmen, as in said act provided. That out of the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to counsel for said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, employed under the provisions of said act of Congress, such sum for professional services as has been approved by the Secretary of the Interior under contract of employment entered into in accordance with law; that the balance of the amount herein appropriated shall be placed upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations.

The next amendment was, on page 53, after line 9, to insert:

For payment to J. Hale Sypher, to be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, $50,000, which said sum the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay immediately to J. Hale Sypher upon execution by him of a receipt in full of all claims against the Choctaw Nation for his services and expenses as the attorney of said nation under contract entered into on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1891, between said J. Hale Sypher and the said Choctaw Nation.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the amendment may be passed over for the present.

Mr. KEAN. I wish to make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be passed over.

Mr. FORAKER. What page is it on?

Mr. STEWART. Page 53.

Mr. KEAN. I think I may as well submit the point of order and let it go out now.

Mr. SPOONER. Against which amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment beginning in line 10. Will the Senator from New Jersey state his point of order?

Mr. KEAN. That it is a claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indians Affairs was, on page 53, after line 19, to insert:

All leases made by any allottee of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, Cherokee, Creek, or Seminole nations shall be absolutely null and void unless recorded in the manner provided for recording deeds and other conveyances and instruments of writing in Indian Territory, within thirty days after the execution thereof, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause any person holding or claiming possession of land under such void lease to be summarily removed from such land. The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed, upon complaint of any allottee that he is wrongfully deprived of possession of his allotted land, to cause an investigation to be made of such complaint by some officer of his Department, and if it be found that possession of land of such allottee is being withheld from him by one claiming under a lease executed in violation of law, or obtained through fraud or deception, or upon terms grossly inadequate, or under which the terms thereof are not being complied with, such lease may thereupon be by such officer declared terminated if the facts, in his opinion, justify such action, and any person holding under such lease may be summarily removed from the land by the United States Indian agent.

Mr. STEWART. On page 53, line 20, before the word "leases," I move to insert the word "hereafter."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I make the point of order on the provision beginning in line 20, page 53, and including the entire clause, that it is new and general legislation on an appropriation bill. So far as the merits of the proposition are concerned, they are not to be debated on a point of order. I think it is meritorious, but I make the point of order on the whole section. I leave it to the Chair.

Mr. STEWART. This was put in on the recommendation of the Department as necessary in order that there may be a record in regard to leases. There has been some confusion and some very outrageous things have been done.

Mr. SPOONER. Nothing so outrageous as this provision which the committee has brought in here.

Mr. STEWART. How worse?

Mr. SPOONER. It is worse in this respect, that it declares void leases which were not recorded within thirty days of their execution, even though there was no law requiring it. You give a man no opportunity at all. I will take the ruling of the Chair on the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It strikes the Chair that with the amendment just inserted the provision is clearly general legislation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Which amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Inserting in line 20, page 53, the word "hereafter;" so as to read "all leases hereafter made."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That was an amendment to the amendment to which the Senator from Mississippi raises the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes.

The Chair does not feel so certain about the ruling on the item beginning in line 10, and will ask that it may be withheld for the present, that he may consider it a little further.

Mr. CULLOM. On page 53?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point which occurs to the Chair on that item is that it is not a claim against the Government of the United States, but is a claim resulting from an agreement with the Indians, and is against the Indians, and is only paid by the United States.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Out of Indian funds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Out of Indian funds.

Mr. STEWART. Let it be passed over, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would prefer that it might be passed over for the present.

Mr. KEAN. Is this the Sypher case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; the Sypher case.

Mr. KEAN. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In ruling on it promptly, the Chair did not notice that it was under an agreement with the Indians, and a claim against the Indians and not against the Government of the United States.

Mr. KEAN. I think the balance of the rule will cover it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not prepared to say at this moment whether or not he will sustain the point of order.

Mr. KEAN. I noticed before I made the point that the money is to be paid out of Indian funds.

Mr. SPOONER. I hope the Chair will reserve his decision, because there is another item later on in the bill upon which the same point of order will be raised.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt about the other one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate will allow the Chair to reserve his ruling for the present, he will do so.

Mr. MONEY. For information, I should like to inquire whether the request of the Chair to withhold his ruling applies to the whole section?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, it does not; but only to a private claim.

Mr. MONEY. Only to what?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To the private claim of J. Hale Sypher. On the point raised by the Senator from Mississippi on the next item, the Chair sustained the point of order, that it is general legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. May I inquire what is precisely covered by the ruling of the Chair? It relates to the amendment beginning in what line?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Beginning in line 20.

Mr. SPOONER. And ending where?

All lands which are by section 59 of an act entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, directed to "be sold at public auction for cash," and all other lands and deposits of like character in said nations segregated under any act of Congress, shall, instead, be sold under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, after due advertisement, upon sealed proposals, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the President, with authority to reject any or all proposals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 2, to insert:

So much of said section as makes provision for the appointment and duties of "a commission composed of three persons" be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. QUAY. With respect to the pending amendment, I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee exactly what are its purport and intention? The Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians, as I understand, were induced to agree to the sale of their lands by the promise that each tribe should have a commissioner appointed to take part in the sale, and that they should have full voice in it, so that the commission would be composed of three persons—one appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, one by the chief of the Chickasaw Nation, and one by the Choctaws—and the rights of the Indians would be fully protected.

These are not blanket Indians. They are highly educated people. The leading men among them are generally college graduates and professional men. I should like to know what reason there can be for depriving these Indians now of that representation.

Mr. STEWART. It is intended to protect the Indians from misrepresentation. There is a letter from the Department——

Mr. QUAY. I do not understand it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think I can explain it.

Mr. STEWART. The land is to be sold on sealed bids instead of at auction. At auction the experience of the Government is that there is usually a combination. I do not think it ever occurred otherwise. The purchasers organize and the Indians get very little.

Mr. QUAY. I understand——

Mr. STEWART. Let me finish now. But under sealed bids the proposed purchasers all put in their bids, and the Department can reject them all until they get decent bids. It is to protect the Indians. They will certainly get twice as much and perhaps three times as much as under the former system. The Secretary has refrained from going ahead because he knew what would be the inevitable result and what has always been the result in all cases at auction.

Mr. QUAY. I do not object to the change in system. I think that is an improvement; but there must be some authority somewhere to decide as to the fairness of the price.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to the Indians being represented there when the bids are opened.

Mr. QUAY. But they should have commissioners.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Under the old provision where lands were to be sold at auction it was very important that there should be commissioners appointed, one of whom should be an Indian, a member of the tribe, but when that system is changed so that the lands are to be sold by sealed bids the reason for the appointment of the commissioner would seem to be gone.

Mr. QUAY. I think not, Mr. President. There should be some one at the Interior Department, if the present method is adopted, to decide on the value of the lands and whether the sealed bids are sufficient to warrant them in selling. I think the Indians ought to have a voice in that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no objection to that clause going out.

Mr. QUAY. Amended in that form, I have no objection to the provision.

Mr. STEWART. Let those lines go out. I have no objection to their going out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, after line 5 on page 55, to insert:

All expenses, inclusive of necessary clerical help in the Department of the Interior, connected with and incident to such sale shall be paid from the funds of the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes on deposit in the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 10, to insert:

To pay the heirs of Darius B. Randall, deceased, for certain improvement situated on the Nez Percé Indian Reservation relinquished by the said deceased to the United States for the use of the Nez Percé tribe of Indians, $2,400.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like a word of explanation of this item.

Mr. DUBOIS. This amendment was introduced by the Senator from Washington, but I am quite familiar with the facts. There were improvements on property in this reservation belonging to Mr. Randall, who has long since died, and whose folks are now living in the State of Washington. The Department has repeatedly stated to the Indian Committee that the Government owed this money. We have had it here time and time again. There is no question at all about the justice of this proposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 15, to insert:

For the construction and installation of a telephone system from Devils Lake, N. Dak., to the Devils Lake Indian Agency, and to pay for the maintenance of the same for one year from the time of completion, $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, after line 20, to insert:

For payment of the balance due various merchants of Cloquet and Fond du Lac, Minn., from certain Fond du Lac Indians for supplies furnished said Indians at the request of the Indian farmer, as ascertained by the Secretary of the Interior, under the provisions of the Indian appropriation act approved June 10, 1896, as follows: H. B. Allen, $24.14; Charles Gasper, $1,049.46; J. A. Rene, $44.91; James A. Wallace, $252.68; Kelly & Moses, $40.49; Mrs. James Peacha, $116.95; James Peacha, $186.12; Frank P. Thompson, $964.51; A. H. Simmons, $176.85; in all, $2,856.11.

The next amendment was, on page 56, after line 13, to insert:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the executor or administrator of the estate of Eli Ayres, late of Kaufman County, Tex., deceased, the sum of $58,158.46, the same to be in full for all claim or demand made by the said Eli Ayres in his lifetime by reason of the failure of the President of the United States to approve deeds of land purchased by said Ayres from certain Chickasaw Indians in the State of Mississippi, which purchases were made in conformity with the terms of a treaty between the United States and the Chickasaw Nation of Indians on May 24, 1834, and which said land so purchased was subsequently sold and otherwise disposed of by the United States: Provided, That such payment shall further operate to forever quiet the title to all such lands in said State of Mississippi.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of order on the amendment that it is a private claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it seems to me that if Senators are to insist that because an item embraces a private claim it must go out, they ought to make the point of order against all such amendments. Several private claims have gone through with the approval of the Senate, evidently. If we are not to put on any private claim, that is one thing. If we are to put on a few and strike out those as to which some Senator may take a notion that he does not want them passed, I think we ought to know it. If that is to be the rule, I think hereafter we will apply the rule to all claims.

We have passed half a dozen claims on this bill. Nobody saw fit then to object. Here is a case where the Government has had this money since 1834. This claim has passed the Senate at least twice, and has been reported from the Committee on Claims half a dozen times, and for much more money than this item carries.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 57, after line 6, to insert:

The Chippewa Indians of the State of Minnesota to whom allotments have been or shall hereafter be made, and trust or other patents, containing restrictions upon alienation issued or which shall hereafter be issued therefor, are, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, hereby authorized to dispose of the timber on their respective allotments. Timber on the allotments of minors may likewise be so sold by the father, mother, or Indian agent or other officer in charge, in the order named, and the Secretary of the Interior shall make such regulations for the disposition of the proceeds of said sales as may be necessary to protect the interest of said Indians, including such minors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 19, to insert:

To pay to the county of White Pine, State of Nevada, the sum of $769.67, to reimburse said county for money expended in caring for certain Indians who contracted smallpox during the smallpox epidemic from February 26 to July 1, 1901.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 58, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury belonging to the Creek Nation, to Ruter W. Springer, executor of the estate of William M. Springer, deceased, the sum of $3,687.48, in full for professional services to said nation, under an act of the national council of said nation approved May 25, 1901. The Secretary of the Interior is also authorized and directed to pay to said executor, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Cherokee Nation, two Cherokee warrants issued to William M. Springer for $1,500 each, dated, respectively, July 2, 1900, and January 28, 1901, and payable to him, or on his order, for professional services to said nation, under an act of the national council of said nation passed December 9, 1899, together with interest on said warrants to the time of payment according to the tenor and effect of said warrants.

The next amendment was, on page 58, after line 20, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized and directed to pay to said executor, out of any money in the Treasury belonging to the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, in Oklahoma, the sum of $5,000, in full for professional services rendered by the said William M. Springer to said Indians in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, in the case of Lone Wolf and others against the Secretary and others, and $2,000 for professional services in said case on appeal in the Supreme Court of the United States, and $484.10 for expenses incurred on behalf of said Indians in the prosecution of said suit; in all, $7,484.10, under a contract with said Indians executed on the 22d day of June, A. D. 1901.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 11, to insert:

To pay to the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan whose names are set forth in Schedule A, annexed to claimants' requests for findings of fact, as stated and found by the Court of Claims in finding 4, in the case of Phineas Pamtopee and others against the United States, reported in the thirty-sixth Court of Claims Reports, at page 430, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $78,329.25, the Secretary of the Interior to distribute and pay the same to the Indians, respectively, mentioned in said Schedule A, and if any of them have died, then the sum or share that would have been paid to such Indian or Indians, respectively, if living, the Secretary shall pay to the heirs or legal representatives of each of those dead; such payments, when made, to be in full for any and all claims which said Indians may have under or by virtue of the treaty and articles supplementary thereto, made with the Pottawatomie Indians September 26 and 27, 1833, and duly proclaimed February 21, 1835.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 7, to insert:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the survey and subdivision of a portion of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, and of lands to be allotted to the Indians thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 13, to insert:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the survey and subdivision of a portion of the Blackfeet Reservation, in Montana, including examination in the field and office work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 19, to insert:

To reimburse Charles M. Buchanan, superintendent of the Tulalip Indian school, Washington, for losses sustained by him in the fire at the Tulalip Indian school on January 21, 1902, $3,147.50.

Mr. ALLISON. I will ask the Senator from Nevada to explain this item. It looks very much like a claim.

Mr. STEWART. I call on the Senator from Connecticut. He is more familiar with the Buchanan case than I am.

Mr. ALLISON. It may not be a claim.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Doctor Buchanan was a physician here in Washington, and a very good physician. He became rather an enthusiast in Indian matters and was appointed in charge of the Tulalip Agency, in Washington. While there and occupying an agency building he tried to get his furniture and other things connected with the building insured, but the insurance companies would not insure them. Subsequently the building was destroyed, and all that he had in it was destroyed. A list has been furnished which, I think, is fair.

The only question which arises about it is whether you can differentiate this case from the case of any employee or officer of the Government who loses his property by fire, and I suppose about the only way it can be differentiated is from the fact that the insurance companies refused to insure his property on an agency. Therefore he could not get insurance, although he tried to do so, and that is in proof here. I do not know that there is anything more that I can say about it.

Mr. SPOONER. As I remember it, in the cases of relief of officers whose property has been destroyed by fire which have come before the Senate latterly there has been this distinction, that the officers devoted themselves to the saving of the property of the Government and neglected thereby all attempts to save their own property. And it has been only upon that principle of self-sacrifice to the Government interest that the Senate, as I understand, have passed those bills.

There is nothing of that kind in this case. In other words, the bald, naked case is this——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The only difference I know of in this case is that, being on an Indian agency, he could not get his property insured. Now, whether that differentiates the case so as to make the Government liable for it I can not say. I thought it might. At any rate, I know he is a very valuable, conscientious, and good man, and it was very hard on him to lose this property.

Mr. STEWART. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I consented to the amendment because I did not think it would lead to a precedent, inasmuch as very few men would apply for insurance on their personal effects upon a reservation. Doctor Buchanan made the application, and that is an element, and being a good man, as represented by the Senator from Connecticut, I consented.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course I recognize the fact that Doctor Buchanan is a good man, a kind-hearted man, a skillful man in his profession, and all that.

Mr. CULLOM. And an enthusiastic man with the Indians, too.

Mr. SPOONER. But that is hardly a basis on which to make an appropriation. It intensifies one's sympathy for him, but it certainly can go no further. Of course the real truth is that Doctor Buchanan took his chances. If he found he could not insure his property on an Indian reservation he could have left the reservation, taking his property with him. He chose to remain and take his chances.

The Senator from Nevada says it will not constitute a precedent. The Senator has been here a great many years, and he is a man of large experience and great ability. Did he ever know Congress to do anything in the way of paying a private claim which did not constitute a precedent? Why would not this be a precedent? Will there not be fires in the future?

Mr. STEWART. Will the man have made application to have his private property insured?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; from this time on, from the moment we pass the bill with this item in it, every man on an Indian reservation in the United States will make application to have his property insured in order to bring himself within the rule laid down by the Senator from Nevada; to make the Government, as the Senator from Colorado wisely says, his insurer, without paying any premium, and so on. There is absolutely nothing except the tender heart of my friend the Senator from Connecticut, it seems to me, to warrant the payment of this claim. I am sorry it is so, too.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Government refuses to insure its buildings (I do not care whether they are on an agency or anywhere else) and compels officials to go into them, and an official can not get any insurance on his property, I think there is some reason why the Government should become an insurer.

Mr. SPOONER. The Government can not compel its officials to go into the building. It can not compel a man to be one of its officials.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is probably so; but it wants officials.

Mr. SPOONER. Oh, yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And it wants good ones.

Mr. SPOONER. I expect the Government can get an abundance of officials. I have never seen any dearth of people in this country to take these positions, and I am hardly ready to believe that the refusal to pass this claim will make any diminution in the supply of men ready to take employment from the Government in such places. This gentleman is a very estimable man; but it is this very matter of precedents which ought to preclude the Senate, if nothing else, from passing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator to raise the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The next amendment was, on page 60, after line 24, to insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to purchase, in his discretion, at such price as he may deem reasonable and just, for the use and occupancy of the Indians of Verde River Valley and Camp McDowell, Ariz., and such other Indians as he may see fit to locate thereon, the claims of whatsoever nature to lands and permanent improvements placed upon said lands prior to November 9, 1903, within the former Camp McDowell abandoned military reservation, Arizona, now the Camp McDowell Indian Reservation, of such of the settlers thereon as may, upon proper investigation, be found to have valid rights thereto under any laws of the United States; and also in his discretion to purchase the improvements located on said reservation of any or all of such settlers as may be found by such investigation not to have valid rights attaching to the lands, the sum of not to exceed $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the same to be immediately available.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 16, to insert:

That any private land over which an Indian reservation has been or may be extended by Executive order may be exchanged, at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior and at the expense of the owner thereof and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, for vacant, nonmineral, nontimbered, surveyed public lands of like area and value and situated in the same State or Territory.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to extend Indian reservations over private lands, and then it authorizes the parties who own the private lands in such extended reservation to exchange them for other lands. That is precisely the difficulty under which we are now suffering under the so-called "forest reserve scrip." A lot of forest reserves have been established over worthless lands of no practical value, especially lands within railroad grants, and the parties have been allowed to relinquish them to the United States and select good timber land in place of it. This is applying the same principle to the matter of Indian reservations.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator allow me just one word?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will read the entire paragraph, he will notice that the exchange must be made for like lands, in the same State or Territory, and of the same value. So they could not go outside of the State, they could not go outside of land of the same general character, nor could they obtain land of any other value.

This was inserted, as I understand it, for the reason that in many instances we have created reservations and they have covered tracts of land owned by private individuals, to no great extent, but only a few tracts of land. We have had the same character of legislation in our prior bills. It seems to me that the provision is well protected. I wish the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG], who had it in charge, would explain it, because I believe he would make such a showing that the Senator would not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. NELSON. The paragraph relates not only to reservations that have been made heretofore by Executive order, but to any reservation that is hereafter made by Executive order. The executive department can by a mere order make what we call an "Executive Indian reservation" on vacant public land and set it aside. The object of this amendment is, when such a reservation is established, to allow land inside such reservation to be exchanged for other public lands.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I think, perhaps, in line 18 the words "or may be extended" are somewhat objectionable. Suppose we strike out that clause. If the Senator will move to strike out those words it will then apply only to reservations heretofore made. In some cases there are certain hardships which the settler suffered by the act of the Government for which he is not responsible.

Mr. NELSON. While the amendment is subject to the point of order, I shall not make the point of order if those words are stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. I move, then, in line 18, to strike out the words "or may be" before "extended."

Mr. NELSON. The words "or may be" should be stricken out.

Mr. LODGE. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated,

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 18, strike out the words "or may be."

Mr. SPOONER. I have some doubt whether that amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. TELLER. I will just say that I suggested it because I was afraid the paragraph would go out, and I know there are some cases which ought to be relieved.

Mr. SPOONER. Well, all cases ought to be relieved. If the Government extends, as it may, an Indian reservation to take in a large amount of Government land and also takes in the land of an individual owner, especially one who occupies it, or even if he does not occupy it, it is a practical taking of the land of a private owner.

Mr. TELLER. It is.

Mr. SPOONER. He can not sell it to anyone else, for who wants to take his family on an Indian reservation? It changes his entire status in relation to it. It is taking it without compensation, and it is not a fair thing for the Government of the United States, it seems to me, to do. If that is true as to cases of the kind which have occurred by extending Indian reservations in the past, it will be no less true of necessity to similar cases which may occur in the future. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted. If there is any danger of fraud being perpetrated, that might probably be covered.

Mr. NELSON. Of course, whatever the Secretary of the Interior recommends to the President will be done, and it means a general license to the Secretary of the Interior to extend Indian reservations, by Executive order, over lands that are oftentimes largely covered by private entry. If you leave this in the bill, it leaves that license open for the future.

Mr. SPOONER. That is another thing. Whether the power should be lodged with the Secretary of the Interior to extend these reservations is another thing. The power exists, as I understand it, to-day, and it has been repeatedly exercised.

Mr. NELSON. The power exists to extend a reservation over public lands, but the Secretary can never take lands that have been entered or purchased or acquired under any of the land laws of the United States and make them a part of an Indian reservation.

Mr. SPOONER. In a sense no, and in a sense yes. I know that one extension of a reservation which was made embraced a great deal of Government land, but a few tracts of land that had been acquired theretofore by private owners. I never had supposed the mere fact that there was some private ownership in a great mass of public land would operate to prevent the President from extending a reservation.

But the Senator may be right; the authority perhaps ought not to be given. However, if the authority is given, I think the owner of the property ought to be permitted to go out of the reservation and exchange his land for land elsewhere, if he desires it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are two reasons for it. The private owner ought to be permitted to avail himself of his property, and, on the other hand, the Government ought to have it for the reservation. It is for the mutual interest of the Government and the person around whose land the reservation has been extended.

Mr. SPOONER. If scrip is not issued.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say that there is no scrip issued. We call it "scrip," but in connection with the forest reserves they do not issue scrip. The man who has a tract on one of the forest reserves relinquishes a given tract to the Government, and then he gets the right to select another tract. He oftentimes assigns that right by a power of attorney, but there is no real scrip. It is called "scrip," but in the true sense it is not scrip on forest reserves. This is upon exactly the same footing, however, as what we commonly understand by forest-reserve scrip.

While the whole provision is general legislation and foreign to the bill, if it is restricted to the past orders, I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that the present Indian appropriation act now in force contains a provision similar to that to which the Senator makes the objection; that is, it does not limit it to reservation orders that have already been made.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it not cover the Senator's objection to limit the amendment to lands that have been occupied?

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I want it limited to reservations which are now established. Otherwise it will be construed into a general license.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is all right.

Mr. STEWART. Let that be done.

Mr. NELSON. The amendment moved by the Senator from Colorado I agree to, if there is no objection to it. I withdraw my point of order if that is agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senator from Minnesota withdraws his point of order.

Mr. NELSON. If the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is adopted, I will withdraw my point of order.

Mr. DUBOIS. I think we all know that there have been no Indian reservations established for a good many years. The whole tendency is to reduce Indian reservations and not to extend or enlarge them. It is a fair presumption that there is no danger of any Indian reservations being established in the future. I think it is all right to have the words "or may be" stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota temporarily withdraw his point of order?

Mr. NELSON. I temporarily withdraw the point of order for the purpose of having the amendment acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is that offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, line 18, before the word "extended," strike out the words "or may be."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. I now withdraw my point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the wording of this amendment and the effect of it can be improved to some extent by striking out the word "like," in line 23, and inserting the word "equal;" and inserting after the word "and," in the same line, the words "of like character and."

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On line 23, before the word "area," strike out the word "like" and insert "equal;" and after the word "and," in the same line where it first occurs, insert the words "of like character and;" so as to read:

Surveyed public lands of equal area and of like character and value and situated in the same State or Territory.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "Support of schools," on page 62, line 11, before the word "may," to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior may, when in his judgment the good of the service will be promoted thereby, suspend or discontinue any reservation Indian school, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 6, after the word "the," where it occurs the third time, to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at Albuquerque, N. Mex., $50,100; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,800; for water system, $500; general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for the purchase of additional land for agricultural and other purposes adjoining or adjacent to said school, not to exceed 200 acres, and for the construction of new buildings and the furnishing and equipping thereof, and for the repair and equipment of the present buildings and plant, and the improvement of the grounds of said school, to be expended subject to the discretion and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $50,000; in all, $107,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 1, after the word "improvements," to insert:

And for the educating of not exceeding 100 of the native youth of Alaska at this school when in excess of the Indian youth appropriated for on a basis of $167 per capita, and any expenses therefor, including transportation and including such expenses for the current fiscal year, are hereby approved;

So as to make the clause read:

For support of Indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., for transportation of pupils to and from said school, and for general repairs and improvements, and for the educating of not exceeding 100 of the native youth of Alaska at this school when in excess of the Indian youth appropriated for on a basis of $167 per capita, and any expenses therefor, including transportation and including such expenses for the current fiscal year, are hereby approved, $157,000; for additional salary for superintendent in charge, $1,000; in all, $158,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, line 25, to increase the appropriation for domestic building and dairy barn for the Indian pupils at the Indian school at Chilocco, Okla., from $25,000 to $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available; to construct employees' quarters, $2,000;" and in line 11, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-nine" and insert "seventy-one;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 375 Indian pupils at the Riggs Institute, Flandreau, S. Dak., $62,625; for general repairs and improvements, $3,500; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,800; addition to shop building, $1,900, to be immediately available; to construct employees' quarters, $2,000; in all, $71,525.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 11, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For increasing the amount of $10,000 appropriated in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1903, approved May 27, 1902, for boiler house and boilers, etc., $8,000, to be immediately available.

And in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "sixty-eight;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Genoa, Nebr., $50,100; for general repairs and improvements, including fire escapes, $5,500; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,700; for superintendent's residence, $3,000; for increasing the amount of $10,000 appropriated in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1903, approved May 27, 1902, for boiler house and boilers, etc., $8,000, to be immediately available; in all, $68,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 66, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For the construction of a mess hall, kitchen, and quarters for employees, $25,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may, in his judgment, if deemed necessary, have the same constructed, using pupil labor as far as possible.

And on page 67, line 4, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-four" and insert "sixty-nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., $33,400; pay of superintendent at said school, $1,600; general repairs and improvements, including fire escapes and fire protection, $5,500; laundry, $3,500; for the construction of a mess hall, kitchen, and quarters for employees, $25,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may, in his judgment, if deemed necessary, have the same constructed, using pupil labor as far as possible; in all, $69,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 19, after the word "dollars," to insert "for the construction and equipment of a laundry, $5,000, to be immediately available;" and in line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty-one" and insert "sixty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., $50,100; for pay of superintendent of said school, $1,700; for the construction and equipment of a laundry, $5,000, to be immediately available; for general repairs and improvements, including industrial buildings, $10,000; in all, $66,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 7, after the word "the," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 250 Indian pupils, Rapid City, S. Dak., $41,750; for pay of superintendent, $1,600; for general repairs and improvements, $2,500; for hospital and industrial buildings, $14,000; for the purchase of additional land not exceeding 50 acres, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, $3,000; in all $62,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 19, after the word "the," to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 450 pupils at the Indian school, Riverside, Cal., $75,150; for pay of superintendent, $2,000; for additional water irrigation and sewer systems, $6,000; for dairy sheds and other improvements on farm, $5,000; for general repairs and improvements, $10,000; in all, $98,150: Provided, That so much of said amounts as may be necessary in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may be used for the education and support of pupils and repairs to the plant at the Indian school, Perris, Cal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 23, before the word "pupils," to strike out "600" and insert "550;" so as to read:

For support and education of 550 pupils at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I hope this committee amendment will not be agreed to. I will state the reason why it should not be adopted. The House provision provides for 600 pupils. The amendment proposes to reduce the number to 550. There were enrolled at the school last year 748 pupils. The average attendance of the school last year was 595 pupils. For that reason it seems to me the amendment should not be agreed to. I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think the committee insists very strongly on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now I have an amendment which I wish to offer to that clause. I move to insert after the word "pupils," in line 23, page 70——

Mr. STEWART. I suggest to the Senator to wait until we get through with the committee amendments.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall then ask the privilege of coming back to this clause, after the committee amendments have been acted on.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 25, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "one hundred thousand two hundred" and insert "ninety-one thousand eight hundred and fifty;" and on page 71, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one hundred and thirty-three thousand two hundred" and insert "one hundred and twenty-four thousand eight hundred and fifty."

Mr. LODGE. The first amendment having been rejected, this amendment changing the totals ought to be withdrawn.

Mr. STEWART. I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The amendment will be disagreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 25, before the word "employees'," to strike out "four" and insert "for;" so as to make the clause read:

For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Santa Fe, N. Mex., $50,100; for pay of superintendent at said school, $1,800; for water supply, $1,500; for general repairs and improvements, $5,000; for the erection and equipment of a building for the accommodation of 150 girls, $25,000; sewer system, $500; for employees' cottages, $300; boys' bath house, $3,000; in all, $89,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 73, after line 19, to insert:

That for the purpose of establishing an Indian agricultural school at or near the city of Wahpeton, in the State of North Dakota, for the purchase of a suitable site and necessary farming land, to be selected by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, for the erection of buildings and other improvements to adapt said school to the purpose of an Indian agricultural farm and stock-raising school, the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated: Provided, That the course of instruction shall include principally practical instruction in farming, stock raising, and kindred pursuits.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 74, after line 6, to insert:

For an additional amount to establish an Indian school in the county of Elko, State of Nevada, and to provide a suitable site therefor, for the purchase of land, erection of buildings, and for other purposes, in addition to the $40,000 appropriated in the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1903, approved May 27, 1902, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 1, before the word "of," to strike out "and direction;" in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs" and insert "Secretary of the Interior;" and in line 5, after the word "him," to strike out "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

That all expenditure of money appropriated for school purposes in this act shall be at all times under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior and in all respects in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to the conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may be from time to time prescribed by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 22, after the word "thereof," to insert the following proviso:

Provided also, That in preparing implements and room for laundry work in all Indian schools arrangements shall be made for doing by hand such an amount of said work as may be sufficient to teach the female pupils the art of hand laundry work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 76, line 21, after the word "Interior," to strike out "under the direction of the President;" and on page 77, line 5, after the word "the," to strike out "Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may use any surplus that may remain in any of the said appropriations herein made for the purchase of subsistence for the several Indian tribes, to an amount not exceeding $25,000 in the aggregate, to supply any subsistence deficiency that may occur: Provided, That any diversions which shall be made under authority of this section shall be reported in detail, and the reason therefor, to Congress, at the session of Congress next succeeding such diversion: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may use any sums appropriated in this act for subsistence, and not absolutely necessary for that purpose, for the purchase of stock cattle for the benefit of the tribe for which such appropriation is made, and shall report to Congress, at its next session thereafter, an account of his action under this provision: Provided further, That funds appropriated to fulfill treaty obligations shall not be used.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill make some explanation of the provision found on page 76, section 3, where the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to expend $25,000. As the bill comes to us from the other House, he was required to do so "under the direction of the President." The Senate has agreed to an amendment striking those words out. I ask, where we are giving such authority to the Secretary of the Interior, if it should not be exercised under the direction of the President?

Mr. STEWART. All this is done under the direction of the President anyway, but I will not insist on the amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I know, but——

Mr. STEWART. It is under the direction of the President that the Secretary of the Interior does all this.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say, Mr. President, that if the Secretary of the Interior can not be intrusted to do that kind of work without going to the President he ought to be dismissed and a new man appointed. That is my judgment about it. The Secretary of the Interior is supposed to act under the direction of the President; but the President is not supposed to go into such details as these and to give the Secretary directions. I should not think any self-respecting Secretary of the Interior would retain the position a great while if the President should do so. I do not think we ought to require the President to do it.

Mr. GORMAN. But I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether it has not been customary—whether it has not been the rule—where a large amount of money is to be expended in the discretion of a Department, to direct that it shall be done under the direction of the President?

Mr. TELLER. There have been, perhaps, some cases of this kind. There is not a large amount involved here. This is an aggregate amount. The Secretary of the Interior expends a little on one tribe and a little on another; and the provision is that the expenditure shall not in the aggregate exceed $25,000. It does not say $25,000 for one tribe. The Senator from Maryland will see that the provision relates to several Indian tribes, and that the aggregate amount shall not exceed $25,000. The Secretary of the Interior may expend $100 or $500, and so on, for one tribe. It would be very unpleasant for the Secretary to have to go and ask the President if he should use $500 for one tribe, or $1,000 for another, or $1,500 for another.

Mr. GORMAN. I made the inquiry simply because the bill that comes to us from the other branch of the Government has that provision in it; and I was under the impression that that was the usual provision of law where these expenditures were authorized without advertising.

Mr. TELLER. This bill came to us with a two years' provision. On page 77, line 5, the Senator will see that the committee proposed an amendment striking out the words "Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the;" making the proviso read:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may use any sums appropriated in this act for subsistence, etc.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is supposed to act subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, but we did not think that was the proper way to make the appropriation. This matter is by law practically under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. The mode proposed in the bill as it came from the other House is not the usual way in which these appropriations are made.

Mr. GORMAN. It is not?

Mr. TELLER. No. There are some other places in the bill where it will be noticed that we have stricken out the provision that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may do certain things. The action of the committee is in accordance with the old custom and is the usual provision of law.

Mr. GORMAN. After that explanation I shall not object.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 4, from line 14 on page 77 to line 5 on page 78.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 4, on line 22, page 77, after the word "herein." I move to strike out "or heretofore."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 4, on page 77, line 22, after the word "herein," it is proposed to strike out "or heretofore;" so as to read:

That the several appropriations herein made for millers, blacksmiths, engineers, carpenters, physicians, and other persons, and for various articles provided for by treaty stipulation for the several Indian tribes, may be diverted to other uses for the benefit of said tribes, respectively, within the discretion of the President, and with the consent of said tribes, expressed in the usual manner; and that he cause report to be made to Congress, at its next session thereafter, of his action under this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of section 5, on page 78.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the general scheme of the Government, of course, is to purchase goods after advertisement. I presume there is some reason for the qualification here which permits the purchase of goods, under certain circumstances, in the open market. I should like to know what was in the contemplation of the committee in the use of the words in line 8 of section 5:

That whenever, after advertising for bids for supplies in accordance with sections 3 and 4 of this act, those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government, etc.

For information, I should like to know what conditions were contemplated by those words?

Mr. STEWART. That provision was in the law of last year, and it comes to us this year in the bill from the other House. The Senate committee have not especially considered it, but from my recollection of the former discussion of the subject it was inserted because there might be goods that were not in proper condition, or they might be offered under circumstances which were not advantageous; and so it was thought proper to give some discretion to the Department. I do not know all the reasons which were originally given for the passage of the law, which has been in existence for some time.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, no doubt that is a correct statement of fact, but still it does not explain the reason for the appearance of those words in the section.

It is perfectly apparent that the effect of that language is to utterly destroy the practice, so far as these particular expenditures are concerned, of requiring them to be made under competition by public advertisement and the reception of bids. The language used is of such a broad character that it would certainly be within the competency of the officer, at his will, to purchase such goods from anybody he might see proper to select, the only restriction upon him being that the lowest bid fixes the price; but the language employed enables the officer to reject the bid, because there is no such specification as would restrict him in any way as concerning the character of the conditions which would make the bid unacceptable.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada, the chairman of the committee, with the permission of my friend from Georgia——

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask whether the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has not now under the law, and whether he does not avail himself of that right, the privilege of rejecting any or all bids?

Mr. STEWART. He has that privilege.

Mr. QUARLES. Then why is this provision necessary?

Mr. BACON. Under the general law, I will say in connection with what the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] has said, as I understand it, in all the Departments where, for any reason, a bid is rejected, there is a new advertisement.

Mr. STEWART. The necessity for it is that after the rejection of an unreasonable bid the Commissioner of Indian Affairs might need the goods at once, and so he is authorized to buy for the time being until he can advertise. That is all this provision authorizes.

Mr. BACON. But that is not what it says at all. I insist—I say "I insist," but I will say I submit——

Mr. STEWART. Let me see what it does say:

SEC. 5. That whenever, after advertising for bids for supplies in accordance with sections 3 and 4 of this act, those received for any article contain conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government, etc.—

If the bids are too high or anything of that kind, they are rejected—

they may be rejected, and the articles specified in such bids purchased in open market, at prices not to exceed those of the lowest bidder, and not to exceed the market price of the same, until such time as satisfactory bids can be obtained, for which immediate advertisement shall be made.

Mr. BACON. I do not profess, of course, to be as familiar with these general matters of expenditure as Senators who are upon appropriation committees, but, if my understanding is correct, the general rule which controls the various Departments in the purchase of goods is not such as is provided here. If I am correct in my understanding, the general rule is that goods shall be purchased after advertisement and by bids submitted; and if for any reason the bids submitted are not satisfactory, the rule is that there shall be a readvertisement. I may be in error in that; but I am simply stating that that is my general understanding of the matter.

Mr. STEWART. But if some goods are necessary for immediate use, this provision enables them to be purchased in the meantime until there can be readvertisement, and it requires a readvertisement.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon me for just a moment, I will then yield to him with pleasure.

There might be, of course, circumstances under which there should be vested in the Commissioner some discretion; but I submit that if the conditions are so indefinitely specified as to put no restraint whatever upon the Commissioner it is practically useless to have anything like advertisement.

Now, just analyze this language for a moment. The Senator from Nevada says that the prices might be too high. That certainly is not in the contemplation of this language, because if the prices are too high that could be remedied by readvertisement; but this refers to the condition not of the article, but the conditions of the bid. What is meant by saying that the conditions of the bid are detrimental to the public interests or the interests of the Government?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Conditions for delivery, as to the amount of goods to be taken at a certain price, or any such conditions.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. I think this is the universal practice in all the Departments. They must have the authority. For instance, take the Navy Department. They have to advertise. They have the right to reject any and all bids.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. If the bids are not satisfactory for any reason and they are all rejected, an officer on a ship, for instance, on a foreign station has the right to buy in the open market until he can get satisfactory bids; otherwise he might find his ship without coal or without provisions. He must have the authority to buy in the open market until he can get satisfactory bids.

Mr. BACON. I think the statement of the Senator is eminently correct, but the criticism which I make is that there is not sufficiently definite language used here to hold the Commissioner within limitations where there may be necessity for such action.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. I would suggest to insert, after the word "same," in line 12, the words "and not to exceed in quantity what may be immediately required." That would provide the necessary limitation on the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. BACON. I think with that limitation there will be no trouble.

Mr. CLAPP. I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. TELLER. If Senators will turn back to section 2, on page 76, they will find what has been the statute for many years. This is rather an extension of that. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] gave some idea of what the conditions detrimental to the interests of the Government might be. The price might be too high; the time of delivery might not be acceptable; the quantity of goods that are to be taken might not be satisfactory.

In all these cases the bid may be rejected. Then there may be a necessity for buying goods at once. This provision simply says:

And the articles specified in such bids purchased in open market, at prices not to exceed those of the lowest bidder, and not to exceed the market price of the same.

Then it provides:

Until such time as satisfactory bids can be obtained, for which immediate advertisement shall be made.

If the advertisement is made immediately, then there will be three weeks in which the work will be done in this way. There is very little opportunity for any misconduct by anybody because the amount of goods to be bought will only have to be sufficient for three weeks in a year. This provision, I think, has been in appropriation bills before.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It has been for at least ten years in every Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a new provision. I have never heard any complaint of it, and I know that sometimes it is very necessary. If there is a combination of bidders—which is not infrequent in the application for supplies in the West between the agencies—then the Department must have the right to reject the bids; but if they did not have some authority to buy in the open market, in the meantime the Department might be compelled to accept them. I do not believet there is any danger in the provision as it stands.

Mr. BACON. Of course, I defer to the judgment of Senators of larger experience in that matter than myself; but I will simply call the attention of the Senate to the difference between the language in section 2 and that in section 5, each of which sections contemplates exactly the same condition of affairs. I think section 2 is right in its provisions, and meets all the objections which are in my mind; and I do not know why it is that there should be the difference made in the two sections. I will read section 2——

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that I think section 2 limits the amount to $3,000, and the other section undoubtedly would allow them to go beyond that amount. I think that is practically all the difference.

Mr. BACON. Section 2 limits them to $500. Section 2 is in these words:

That no purchase of supplies for which——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator reads it, he will know what it means.

Mr. BACON. Yes. In open market purchases may be made not exceeding $3,000.

Mr. TELLER. Not exceeding $3,000 at one purchase.

Mr. BACON. I was not having special reference to the amount. I will read the section.

SEC. 2. That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein made, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency, and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase.

It seems to me that that contemplates exactly the same exigency or emergency as that contemplated in section 5, and at the same time it is very much more specific in its provisions.

Mr. TELLER. Under section 5 the purchases would not be limited to $3,000.

Mr. BACON. They could go beyond that.

Mr. TELLER. They could go beyond that amount. I want to say a word about the right to purchase in open market. Some years ago I got an appropriation for a chapel at an Indian school in Colorado, with the understanding with the authorities, as I supposed, that the work should be done by the Indian boys in the school. When they got ready to commence the work and got estimates, it was said by the Department here that it could not be done, in the first place, for the amount appropriated, and then there was a refusal to allow the Indian boys to do the work. After a good deal of telegraphing and trouble, I finally secured authority for the superintendent to buy the material in the open market. He bought the material in the open market, and built one of the nicest little chapels that I have ever seen on an Indian reservation, and built it considerably within the appropriation. Afterwards an inspector declared that twice the money could not have built it under the contract system.

There is in this bill, Mr. President, a provision for a kitchen, mess hall, and employees' quarters at the same school, and there is a provision that the work may be done by the pupils. It will be done better by the Indian boys than it would be done by the contract system, and it will be done for at least 30 or 40 per cent less than it could be constructed for under the contract system. So these provisions, if they are honestly carried out, are very beneficial and almost necessary for the proper transaction of this business.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 80, line 12, after the word "reservations," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That the reservation lines of the said Ponca and Otoe and Missouria Indian reservations be, and the same are hereby, abolished; and the territory comprising said reservations shall be attached to and become part of the counties of Kay, Pawnee, and Noble, in Oklahoma Territory, as follows:

Township 25 north, of range 1 east of the Indian meridian, and fractional township 25 north, of range 2 east of the Indian meridian, now in the Ponca Indian Reservation, shall be attached to and become a part of Kay County.

Township 24 north, of range 1 east of the Indian meridian.

Fractional township 24 north, of range 2 east of the Indian meridian.

Fractional township 24 north, of range 3 east of the Indian meridian.

Fractional township 24 north, of range 4 east of the Indian meridian.

And that part of fractional township 25 north, of ranges 3 and 4 east, of the Indian meridian, lying south of the Arkansas River, all in the Ponca Indian Reservation.

Township 23 north, of ranges 1 and 2.

And township 22 north, of ranges 1 and 2 east of the Indian meridian, all in the Otoe and Missouria Indian Reservation, shall be attached to and become a part of Noble County.

Fractional township 23 north, of range 3 east of the Indian meridian.

And township 22 north, of range 3 of the Indian meridian, all in the Otoe and Missouria Reservation, shall be attached to and become a part of Pawnee County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 22, after the word "ninety-five," to insert:

Entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

And on page 82, line 3, after the word "repealed," to strike out:

Be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows: "That in all payments or disbursements of money to Indians, individually, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to detail an officer from his Department or appoint a special agent to make or to superintend and inspect such payment; and when made by special agent the Secretary shall fix a reasonable compensation for the services of such special agent and pay it out of the money to be disbursed. In all cases the agent making such payment shall give bond to the United States in the full amount to be disbursed, with good and sufficient security, to be approved by the Secretary, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties; all such payments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe."

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That section 11 of the act approved March 2, 1895, entitled "An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 17, to strike out sections 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, as follows:

SEC. 10. That Joseph M. Campbell, a Santee Indian, may purchase, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, a tract of not exceeding 5 acres from the lands reserved for the Santee Agency, Nebr., including the land upon which the improvements of said Campbell are located, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey said tract to the said Campbell by patent in fee. And Stephen Blacksmith, a Santee Indian, may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, purchase, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, a tract of not exceeding 5 acres from the lands reserved for the Santee Agency, Nebr., including the land upon which the improvements of said Stephen Blacksmith are located, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to convey said tract to said Blacksmith by patent in fee. That all restrictions upon the sale of land of the persons herein named, who are adult citizens of the Creek Nation, Ind. T., as now existing, are hereby removed in each of the following cases, and they shall have power and authority hereafter to sell the surplus land hereinafter described without restrictions: Tulsa Hargo, the south half of the southeast quarter of section 33, township 9, range 13 east, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter, section 32, township 9, range 13 east; Saline Emarthla, the northwest quarter of section 29, range 13 east, and the east half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 32, township 9, range 13 east; Susie Buckner, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 32, township 9, range 13 east, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 33, township 9, range 13 east; Okchum Emarthla, the east half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 32, township 9, range 13 east, and from and after the passage of this act said lands shall be subject to taxation. Nothing herein shall authorize either of said parties to sell any part of their homesteads.

SEC. 11. That Edgar Hendrix, Wichita allottee No. 349, to whom trust patent has been issued containing restrictions upon alienation, may sell and convey not exceeding one-half of his allotment, but such conveyance shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey a full title to the purchaser the same as if a final patent without restrictions had been issued to the allottee.

SEC. 12. That the Indians living along and near the Colville River in Stevens County, State of Washington, to whom trust patents have been issued containing restrictions upon alienation, may sell and convey, for drainage purposes, so much of such allotments as may be necessary for right of way for drainage canals, but such conveyances shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey, for said purposes, a full title to the purchasers the same as if final patent without restrictions had been issued to the allottees.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Zonee Adams, a member of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to her in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

SEC. 13. That James N. Jones, Kiowa allottee No. 23, to whom a trust patent has been issued containing restriction upon alienation, may sell and convey not exceeding one-half of his allotment, but that such conveyance shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey full title to the purchaser the same as if a final patent without restriction had been issued to the allottee.

SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee, severally, to Pasapa or Amanda C. Hines, John W. Hines, jr., Lydia A. Marshall, Ephraim D. Prescott, and Ida C. Peck, members of the Sisseton and Wahpeton tribe of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to them in Roberts County, in the State of South Dakota, and all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

SEC. 15. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to William A. Trousdale, a citizen Pottawatomie allottee, for the land heretofore allotted to him in Oklahoma, to wit: The northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 36, township 7 north, range 2 east of the Indian meridian, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land are hereby removed.

SEC. 16. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a fee simple patent to George J. Lemmon, a member of the Winnebago tribe of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to him in Nebraska, to wit: The northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 35, township 26 north, of range 6 east of the sixth principal meridian, in Thurston County, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of the same are hereby removed.

SEC. 17. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to Nellie H. Davis, a Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indian, for the lands heretofore allotted to her in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed, said lands being described as follows, to wit: The northeast quarter of section 29, township 14 north, of range 15 west of Indian meridian, in Oklahoma Territory.

Mr. STEWART. It is proposed to strike out the names. The House authorized the sale of patented lands in cases where it had been allotted and examined by the Secretary. There was quite a large number recommended by the Department also, which Senators have asked to have inserted. But it was thought possible that a general provision could be made covering them all. So we propose to strike out all that the House put in and to put in ours, so that the conference committee will have jurisdiction of the whole matter. I am inclined to think we will restore the House provision and put in ours without getting a general law, whereby some tribunal may say, when an Indian is sufficiently intelligent to control his own affairs, that he may have his land. If we could get some tribunal to make that investigation it would all be very well. I do not know that we shall succeed; but if the amendment is adopted we will be in a position where we can consult over it when we get together and also consult with the Interior Department. I do not think we shall succeed, but we will try. But it leaves it in that situation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 86, after line 21, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to withhold from sale or other disposition the irregular tract of land containing 78 $\frac{4}{100}$ acres, more or less, lying in the northwest quarter of section 2 and the northeast quarter of section 3, township 1 south, range 3 east, and being within the exterior boundaries of the proposed town site of Sulphur, in the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., and excluded from said town site by order of the Secretary of the Interior of October 20, 1903, and also to withdraw and withhold from disposition the tract of land within the exterior boundaries of said proposed town site, lying south of and adjacent to the tract above mentioned, containing in the aggregate 138 acres, more or less, and mentioned in the report of Gerard H. Matthes, of December 27, 1903, to F. H. Newell, Chief Engineer United States Geological Survey, and shown upon the map accompanying said report by a yellow line.

The land hereby reserved shall be paid for by the United States at the same rate and in the same manner as the land acquired in accordance with paragraph 64 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," and such money as may be necessary to carry out this provision is hereby appropriated, from any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and made immediately available.

All improvements, except temporary buildings and fences, upon said land, legally placed there, shall be appraised and paid for as provided in said paragraph 64 of the act of July 1, 1902.

The land hereby reserved shall, immediately upon payment therefor by the United States, be and become a part of the reservation heretofore established at the said village of Sulphur, and shall be subject to all the provisions of said section 64 of the act of July 1, 1902, respecting the care, control, direction, use, and occupancy thereof, as if they had been included in the original segregation: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in the absence of other provisions for the care and management thereof, to designate an officer or employee of his Department to take charge of the land, whether acquired under said section 64 of the act of July 1, 1902, or under this act, and to enforce rules and regulations for the control and use thereof, and of the waters of the springs and creeks within the reservation: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to sell or dispose of any buildings upon the land hereby reserved and upon the land originally reserved, and all money received from such sales, as well as all money heretofore received or that may hereafter be realized for the use of said waters or for the use and occupancy of the land or the buildings thereon, through leases, permits, or otherwise, may be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the care and management of said lands and the preservation of the improvements thereon: And provided further, That if any person, firm, or corporation shall willfully violate any of the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior relative to the use of the waters of said springs and creeks and the use and occupation of the lands in said reservation, such person, firm, corporation, or members or agents thereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than $5 and not more than $100, and may be imprisoned for a term of not more than six months for each offense.

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to appraise, at their actual value at the time of such appraisement, all town lots held by citizens of the United States within the limits of the tract of land ceded to the United States by the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, at or near Sulphur Springs, in the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., and pay for the same to such lot holders severally, or to their legal representatives, the appraised value of such lots by warrants drawn by the Secretary of the Interior upon the Treasurer of the United States; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The foregoing appraisal of lots shall be completed within three months from the passage of this act.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be glad to have the chairman of the committee tell us about how much money will be required to execute these provisions. It is proposed to be appropriated for without any statement of a definite amount.

Mr. STEWART. It will cost about $200,000, as has been estimated by the Secretary. It is quite important that it should pass to protect those springs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 5, to change the number of the section from 18 to 11.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 13, to change the number of the section from 19 to 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 21, to change the number of the section from 20 to 13.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 7, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to set aside in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, the sum of $100,373, the sum being the total amount arising from balances of appropriations under treaties with said Indians and covered into the Treasury between the years 1843 and 1878, inclusive, and the aggregate difference between the coin value of payments made in currency during the years 1863 and 1864, at the dates of Treasury warrants, and the amounts due in coin by treaty stipulations.

That the said amount of $100,373 shall be by the Secretary of the Interior paid to the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and of the Mississippi in the proportion, if any, due to each (in case it shall be found that a division of such fund is equitable), or invested or applied for their benefit by the said Secretary as may be deemed most advantageous for the interests of the said Indians: Provided, That of this sum $2,000 shall be reserved and paid to the attorneys in the case having contract with said Indians upon their filing with the Secretary of the Interior their written acceptance of said sum in full of all demands under and by virtue of said contracts.

That the sum of $100,373 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the first paragraph of the amendment, that it is general legislation.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. On what page?

Mr. KEAN. Page 91.

Mr. CLAPP. I did not hear the statement of the point of order.

Mr. LODGE. It is that it is general legislation.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand it is to carry out treaty stipulations, and that being the case it is proper that it should go on the appropriation bill.

Mr. LODGE. It is general legislation. I do not know about the treaty stipulations, though I do not think that voids the point.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes, it does.

Mr. LODGE. At all events, the provision for ascertaining the difference between gold coin and paper is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not the paragraph to which the point of order was directed.

Mr. LODGE. I understood it was the item on page 91.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. ALLISON. Lines 9 to 20.

Mr. KEAN. Lines 9 to 20.

Mr. LODGE. That is general legislation, and general legislation of the kind we have never had.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to suggest that this amendment does not provide for ascertaining the difference. It refers to a difference which has already been ascertained. It simply makes an appropriation to carry out a treaty stipulation, if the language of the amendment is truthful.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that the treaty stipulated that the difference between coin and paper in those years should be paid.

Mr. CLAPP. That is just what the treaty does stipulate.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I want to get at.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Can the treaty be produced?

Mr. CLAPP. The recital by the Department of the Interior as to the treaty can be produced.

Mr. ALLISON. Allow me a moment.

Mr. FORAKER. Is this the specific amount agreed upon in the treaty?

Mr. CLAPP. This report shows that it has been ascertained by the Department, and there is a report by the Department as to the specific amount of the difference, and the treaty provided that this should be paid in coin.

Mr. FORAKER. And the ascertainment by the Department is in accordance with the treaty?

Mr. CLAPP. It is in accordance with the treaty.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask now for information. As I understand this amendment it relates to certain funds or sums of money which were appropriated for this Indian tribe and not expended, but covered back into the Treasury and not used. Now, we are asked to reappropriate that money at this time, and we are also asked to have it appropriated upon the present value of the money appropriated at the time when the appropriation was made. I submit that if we allow that principle to prevail we will have a great many appropriations here——

Mr. CLAPP. That is not an exact statement of the case. There are two items. One is an item of $81,000. When Mr. Sherman was Secretary of the Treasury he had that charged off. It was then standing to the credit of these Indians. There is nothing to be ascertained about that. It has been reported by the Department time and time again, and I may in passing remark that a bill for this very purpose has passed the Senate, I think twice heretofore, during the brief time I have been here.

The other item is the difference between coin and currency under treaties which provided that the the annuities should be paid in coin. The report here shows that they were paid in currency. The Department has ascertained the difference and has reported that difference, and this is simply to make that appropriation.

Now, the provisions are to carry out treaty stipulations. It seems to me they are clearly within the rule as to what is germane on an Indian appropriation bill. This is the first time it has been objected to. It has been reported time and time again by the Department, and both of them are just debts. There is no reason on earth why the money that was arbitrarily charged off should be kept in the Treasury when it belongs to these Indians. Nor is there any reason why the Government should not stand by its contract to pay those Indians coin, as specified in the treaty.

Mr. ALLISON. My point of order applies only to a particular phase of the account. If we owe these Indians any money on account of appropriations covered into the Treasury and not hitherto paid to them, that amount should be placed to their credit as provided for in this amendment. But I understand the amendment to provide in addition that we shall also ascertain the differences between the coin value of the payments made in currency during those years and the coin. That is the particular part of the amendment against which I have interposed the point of order.

Mr. CLAPP. No; the Senator is partly correct and partly mistaken. As to his first proposition, he is correct. This money stood to the credit of the Indians, but was charged off. Now, as to the difference between coin and currency, we are not asking to have it referred for the purpose of having the difference ascertained. It has been ascertained. It has been fixed by the Department.

Mr. LODGE. But the bill says:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to forthwith ascertain the difference.

Mr. CLAPP. That is simply surplusage. The absolute amount is named here. You can strike out, if you want to, the language as to ascertaining the difference. It is mere surplusage. The amount is stated in both of these items.

Mr. LODGE. The bill goes on to say:

And, if found impracticable to ascertain the gold value of each payment, he shall ascertain the average yearly difference between gold coin and the currency paid to said Indians during the period, etc.

Mr. CLAPP. There is no objection to that being stricken out, for the Department has already furnished us with a report as to that difference. The object of this is the appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has read from another paragraph.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but it is a similar appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a similar appropriation, but there is no provision here——

Mr. CLAPP. From what page did the Senator read?

Mr. LODGE. I was reading from the following paragraph about the Delawares.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, well; I do not care to amend the Delaware paragraph. I have no authority to do that. But you will see that in the paragraph relating to the Chippewas the amount is specifically named—the difference between the coin and currency, and also the amount charged off. It is $81,000 in one case and $13,000, I think, in the other.

Mr. KEAN. Eighty-one thousand dollars and $18,000.

Mr. CLAPP. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota assert that the treaty itself provided for that?

Mr. CLAPP. I do, sir; and I have here the statement of the Department.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that the treaty provided that we should pay them the difference between coin and paper.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, if we agreed to pay them in coin——

Mr. TELLER. That was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. And we paid them in paper, we did not perform our obligation under the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. We did not perform our obligation. That is another proposition.

Mr. SPOONER. Therefore this would simply be carrying into effect, in an honest way, the treaty.

Mr. LODGE. That is right.

Mr. CULLOM. The amendment says:

That the said amount of $100,3.3—

Is that the amount due to the Chippewas, giving them the benefit of coin value? Is that right?

Mr. CLAPP. That includes the difference between coin and currency and also the $81,000 which Mr. Sherman, without authority, charged off. On page 27 of the report you will see, in the letter of the Commissioner, this statement:

This amount is justly and equitably due to the Chippewas, as their several treaties provided that treaty annuities should be paid in coin.

Mr. CULLOM. From what does the Senator read?

Mr. CLAPP. From the report of the committee. There is not any question about that. We have gone over it time and again, and the Senate has twice passed on the matter of these two items.

Mr. FORAKER. Can the Senator tell us the variance as to facts between the Chippewas and the Delawares? Has the difference never been ascertained with the Delawares as it was in the case of the Chippewas?

Mr. CLAPP. The Chippewas are in the State I am from, and I naturally have that matter in hand and am familiar with it, and I am not familiar with the Delaware matter.

Mr. QUAY. The amount due the Delawares has been practically ascertained to be $128,527, but for fear of some error in computation the Committee on Indian Affairs have inserted the round sum of $130,000. I have no objection to striking out all about computation. It has been ascertained.

Mr. FORAKER. I was asking merely for information.

Mr. QUAY. I tried this morning to get a statement of the amount from the Interior Department, but the Senator from Maine objected to the resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. If the obligation arises in the same way, there is no reason why the one should not be paid if the other is to be paid. I was merely making an inquiry for information.

Mr. STEWART. The obligation in both cases arises out of a treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 92, after line 13, to insert:

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to forthwith ascertain the difference between the currency value of each payment made to the Delaware Indians residing in the Cherokee Nation under the treaty of August 22, 1860, and the supplemental treaty of July 2, 1861, from 1862 to 1878, both inclusive, and the value of a like amount of coin with which the United States was chargeable under said treaty for said Delaware Indians; and, if found impracticable to ascertain the gold value of each payment, he shall ascertain the average yearly difference between gold coin and the currency paid to said Indians during the period in which payments were made to them from the said fund, and calculate the amount of money necessary to make such payment for each year equal to payments in gold coin; and he shall pay to said Delaware tribe of Indians residing in the said Cherokee Nation, in the Indian Territory, as said tribe in council shall direct, the amount so ascertained and found to be due, and the sum of $130,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order upon this amendment that it is general legislation; also that it is a claim not audited and adjusted, and also that there is no estimate for its payment, and therefore it has no place on this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair recognizes a very decided difference between the two items, and will sustain the point of order against this item.

Mr. QUAY. The Delaware contention here is that it is not a claim, but in fulfillment of a treaty obligation, just as in the case of the Chippewas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the other case the amount had been ascertained and fixed.

Mr. QUAY. This has been ascertained, too.

Mr. STEWART. I do not see much difference in principle. If it is a treaty obligation, and the amount can be stated by the Department, I do not see that the obligation to pay it is any less than it would be if it had been already stated. How are you ever going to carry out these treaty stipulations? The agreement was that amounts should be paid in gold. It has not been done.

Mr. QUAY. The Government took the gold and sold it for currency.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. In looking at this paragraph I see that a rule is laid down for the ascertainment of the difference between currency and gold, which, I think, will not be a just one to the Government.

Mr. QUAY. I have no objection to amending the paragraph in any way the Senator wants, in order that it may be just to the Government.

Mr. STEWART. Leave out the rule. Let him ascertain it in any way he pleases.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a claim.

Mr. STEWART. The treaty of 1860 is very plain. It says that the amount shall be paid in gold. The Government sold the gold, and it seems to me the difference ought to be paid.

Mr. QUAY. A bill for this purpose and in this form passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, I think unanimously, with very few words between the Senator from Iowa and myself concerning it. The Indians have not been contending at the present Congress for it. It then fell in committee of conference.

Mr. STEWART. The same provision; that is true.

Mr. QUAY. The same provision exactly.

Mr. STEWART. It was objected to and passed upon.

Mr. QUAY. A few weeks ago the Delawares, under a decision of the Supreme Court, based upon the fact that in their treaty with the Cherokees made forty years ago the words "for their occupancy" had been inserted instead of those that carried a title in fee, so far as they could convey it, lost 157,600 acres of land for which they had paid a dollar an acre forty years ago, and they would lose the improvements on a large portion of the land but for the legislation favorably acted upon here to-day.

I thought probably Congress would be in better temper and that I would ask them to insert it and pass it at this session of Congress. It is not at all one of the ordinary claims that come here. It came here originally on my own motion. I will amend it in any way to satisfy the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. TELLER. I am not certain that I know what is meant by the rule about carrying out a treaty, but it seems to me, if you look at it from an equitable standpoint, that this certainly is carrying out the provisions of a treaty. The Indians were entitled at that time to recover against the Government, if they had brought suit, a judgment payable in coin.

The amendment certainly is not general legislation if the term "general" is to be applied in the ordinary use of it among American people. It is possible that it is amenable to the second suggestion, that it is a claim; but any attempt, then, to carry out a treaty on an appropriation bill would be a claim, no matter what it is, if it is a feature of the treaty the failure of which to carry out could be compensated for by a payment of money.

So I do not myself believe that it falls within either rule, that it is either general legislation or a claim. It seems to me that it is a very small thing for the Government of the United States to say now that they will not carry out the provisions of the treaty after forty years' waiting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A claim would not be barred if it resulted from a treaty stipulation.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand the Chair to draw a distinction between the item for the Chippewas and the Delawares on the ground that in the case of the Chippewas there is an estimate. If the Chair will turn to page 27 of the report on the Chippewas, so far as it appears there. there has been no estimate from any Department of the Government, but it is said:

> Under a resolution of the House of Representatives by a subcommittee (a full report of which is to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 8, pt. 3, and appendix, 45th Cong., 3d sess., p. 134), which subcommittee found, upon data obtained from the records of the Treasury Department and the Office of Indian Affairs, that the amount of treaty funds covered back into the Treasury is $81,702.61, and that the difference in value of the annuities paid in currency instead of coin, as prescribed in the treaties, is $18,670.39, a total principal of $100,373.

That is simply a finding of a subcommittee of the House of Representatives under a resolution, and, as I understand it, though I make no contention, it is not a claim within the meaning of the rule.

I call the attention while I have the floor to what may not amount to anything, but there is a difference in the language at least. On page 91 of the bill, "That the Secretary of the Treasury," etc., "to the credit of the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi," whereas in the report, on page 27, it refers to the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and Minnesota. I do not know whether there is any difference or not, but there is a difference in language at least.

Mr. CLAPP. Pardon me, where does the Senator find the word "Minnesota?"

Mr. CULBERSON. It is in the report, on page 27.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, in the report. That does not make any difference. The bill is all right.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not know which is correct, if there is any difference between them.

Mr. CLAPP. They are usually designated as the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi. The word "Mississipp" is the correct word to use, and that appears in the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I know nothing about this matter except what has been disclosed by the report and what has been said here during the last few minutes; but by looking at the report of the committee on page 25 I find there the history of this obligation, and it seems to have arisen precisely as the obligation arose that is provided for by the amendment which has already been passed. I find also at the conclusion of that history the following statement:

> When this subject was under consideration by the Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, at which time this item, in the same amount, passed the Senate, the difference in value between gold and paper currency at the various times and for the amounts above set out was found to be $128,860.65, and the full committee recommended that, "in order to avoid any error in the computation," the sum of $130,000 should be appropriated.

If the obligation then arose in the same way, namely, by treaty, and therefore an absolute obligation, and if it has been at a previous Congress, as the report shows, considered by the committee and reported on favorably by the committee and then passed by the Senate, making precisely the same appropriation that is here provided for, it would seem that we ought not now to pass the one and not pass the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair finds that in the first amendment, where he overruled the point of order, the Treasury Department had already ascertained and reported the amount due to the Indians under the treaty stipulations. That made it practically a claim, and a claim which was not barred by reason of the fact that it was under treaty stipulation. But in the second one the provision is for a future ascertainment. If the ascertainment had been made as in the former case, the Chair would have had no question about overruling the point of order.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand that, and I quite agree with the Chair.

Mr. QUAY. Does the Chair consider the question of previous computation as vital? If so, and the amendment goes over until to-morrow, I can correct that contention.

Mr. STEWART. Let the Chair withdraw his ruling and let us pass over the amendment for the time being.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the amendment is agreed to when the bill is reported to the Senate the point of order can again be raised in the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I fail to catch what was said by the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I was just saying that I did not understand the President, and I ask him what he said. My attention was diverted at the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada wanted time to present some evidence, and the Chair said the amendment might be agreed to now, and then the point of order could be raised in the Senate precisely as it can be raised in the Committee of the Whole, if the Senator from Iowa desired to do it.

Mr. QUAY. That will be satisfactory, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to offer an amendment or two which I think will improve the situation, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me.

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. It is an amendment to the amendment.

In line 15, on page 92, after the word "ascertain," I move to insert "as nearly as practicable;" and then strike out after the word "Indians," in line 23, all the words down to and including "gold coin," in line 4, on page 93.

I move this amendment because if this provision should finally pass I do not wish that any rule should be established by legislation for the ascertainment of the difference between currency and coin. I do not know, of course, the details of these payments, but as they have been made under treaty stipulations they must have been made at some particular time, and the dates can be easily ascertained. So it will be easy to ascertain the value of gold coin at the date of these payments.

Mr. STEWART. We accept the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; but I want to explain why I offer it.

Mr. QUAY. I wish to hear those amendments again. What is the first one?

Mr. ALLISON. After the words "the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed forthwith to ascertain," I move to insert the words "as nearly as practicable."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And what further?

Mr. ALLISON. Then I propose to strike out from the word "Indians," in line 23, down to and including "gold coin," in line 4 on the next page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 92, line 15, after the word "ascertain," insert "as nearly as practicable;" and beginning in line 23, after the word "Indians," strike out all down to and including the words "gold coin," in line 4 on page 93.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I do this because I think it can be ascertained very nearly what was the difference in value between currency and coin at the time of these payments, as they must have been made at stated periods.

Mr. TELLER. There will be no trouble at all.

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator that I do not believe there is the slightest difficulty in determining the value of gold on the day the payments were made. The Treasury Department has the figures on that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I have stated, and the Department must know the dates. The real trouble is that at certain periods in the year 1864 the fluctuations in gold were very great, and to take an average of a year as the method of ascertaining the real value of gold would be unjust certainly to the Government, and it might be unjust to the Indians. The gold premium was at times as high as 260 or 270; but that existed for only a very few days, and therefore a yearly average is not a just one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa withdraw his point of order against the amendment as amended?

Mr. ALLISON. I will reserve it for the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as amended will be agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With regard to this amendment, there is a pretty serious question as to the obligation of the Government to pay the Indians in gold or silver coin. I do not know whether there was any difference between them at that time.

Mr. TELLER. Silver was rather the best.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It may have been; I do not know. But it is a question whether the Indians did not subsequently relinquish their claim upon the Government for the payment of any of this sum by accepting the bonds of a railroad company which had purchased the lands and was to pay the money into the Treasury, but was unable to do so. A serious question arises under the treaty of 1861 whether the Indians did not relinquish their right to the payment of this money in gold and silver coin.

Mr. STEWART. It was suggested——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Last year, if the Senator will permit me, when this amendment was put upon the bill, in conference the conferees claimed that the Indians had relinquished, by a subsequent treaty in 1861, any right to have the money paid to them in coin.

Mr. STEWART. I am aware that that suggestion was made——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not base my judgment——

Mr. STEWART. But it was a mistake; I think the suggestion was not well founded. However, by to-morrow the Senator can look at it and see if there is anything of that kind.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on November 29, 1864, these Indians were insisting that their treaties called for gold and silver, that they should be paid in coin, and complained of the payment in currency.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They had taken the bonds then.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. They say nothing about the bonds. This is what they say:

> You will not think us wrong when we expect all the money actually due us at this time from all sources of income to our nation. We feel that this has not been done, though we need it more than ever before, and did in time ask you to send it forward.
> It will also occur to you that we are losers by receiving paper money, which is greatly depreciated. Our treaties call expressly for "gold and silver."

They are not calling for anything on the bonds, but on their treaty.

> With this depreciated money, and little of it, we get very little help. Please look over our account and see if it is not possible to aid us yet more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 93, after line 11, to strike out section 21, in the following words:

> SEC. 21. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to Boone Chandler, Estella Chandler, and Joseph Chandler, members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, whose allotments are numbered respectively 207, 208, and 2461, for the lands heretofore allotted to them in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 93, after line 21, to insert the following:

> SEC. 14. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee to Nora G. Hazlett, a Caddo Indian, for not to exceed 40 acres of the remaining 80 acres of the 160 acres of land heretofore allotted to her in the Territory of Oklahoma, to wit, the northwest quarter of section 11, township 7 north, range 12 west, Indian meridian; and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land are hereby removed.
> That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to Frank A. A. Robertson, Edmond Cheney Robertson, Ella F. Robertson, Samuel J. Brown, Joseph R. Brown, Augusta Brown, Jennie Brown, Susan F. Brown, Thomas A. Robertson, Ida Robertson, Nancy Tawaqin, members of the Sisseton and Wahpeton band of Sioux Indians, for lands heretofore allotted to them in the State of South Dakota, and all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

Mr. DUBOIS. I should like to offer a committee amendment, which was approved by the Secretary of the Interior and sent down.

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be printed and go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. DUBOIS. It is a committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 15 insert:

> That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to permit an exchange of lands in Oklahoma Territory now included in Kiowa allotment No. 310 for certain other lands in the same Territory now included in Kiowa allotment No. 312, and to issue new allotment patents to the allottees interested carrying the exchanges into effect.

Mr. STEWART. Let it go over, and let us have an executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to ask the Senator from Nevada to let the amendment lie over and permit the reading of the bill to be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment would not properly come in now under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. STEWART. Then let us go into executive session.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before that motion is put, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw the motion?

Mr. SPOONER. I withdraw it for a moment.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow at 4 o'clock the Senate will proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension bills on the Calendar.

Mr. STEWART. I can not agree to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to the Senator if his bill is up at that time.

Mr. STEWART. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock to-morrow the Senate will proceed to the consideration of unobjected pension cases, not, however, to interfere with the appropriation bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senator can get consideration of his pension bills by moving them at any time when other business of the Senate is not imperative.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will just yield to me a moment I will state——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I can not give my consent to parceling out the time of the Senate for a particular bill or class of bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will yield just a moment to me.

We have allowed the pension bills to run for three weeks. Usually we have taken them up every two weeks. It has been the universal custom in the case of pension bills to fix a time for their consideration in the future. It has not been objected to since I have been in the Senate a single time to take them up some time ahead. The clerks, with the great number of bills before them, wish a little time in order to have the records and the bills here, so that they can be considered.

I want to call attention to another thing. Friday of this week is, I believe, the day to consider pension bills in the House, and I am very desirous of getting our bills through to-morrow, so that they can get to the House and be acted upon there this week without waiting another two weeks. This can not be done unless we get them through the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I have no doubt that the Senator to-morrow will find an opportunity to move to proceed to the consideration of the pension bills, and there will be no objection to them, but I regard it as a matter of principle that we should not parcel out in advance the time of the Senate for the consideration of particular bills or classes of bills. I have a very decided impression on that subject, and I can not waive it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives,

FUEL FOR SOUTH WING OF CAPITOL BUILDING.

The bill (H. R. 14256) making an appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building was read twice by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a bill relating wholly to an important matter of fuel for the House, and I ask that it may now be put upon its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to appropriate $7,000 for fuel and oil for the heating apparatus in the south wing of the Capitol building, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1904.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COINAGE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed in pamphlet form 10,000 copies of the coinage laws of the United States, 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint, 3,500 for the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SPOONER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

RELATIONS WITH CUBA.

The injunction of secrecy was removed March 22, 1904, from a treaty between the United States and Cuba, signed at Habana May 22, 1903, embodying the provisions defining the future relations of the United States with Cuba contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1901, making appropriations for the Army.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 22, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CEDED LANDS ON FORT HALL INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate, which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the President pro tempore of the Senate in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2223) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of the bill all after "namely," in line 13 of the enrolled bill, down to and including line 20 of said bill, be stricken out and the following inserted: "Lot 4, section 1, township 7 south, range 34 east, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, section 18, township 7 south, range 35 east, and the east half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 6 south, range 34 east, and which have heretofore been appraised, shall be paid for at the said appraised value at the time of and by the person making entry of the respective tracts upon which such improvements are situated," so as to correctly describe the range, inaccurately stated in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to hear some explanation why this bill should be amended after it has passed both Houses. For the present, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] how much of this matter he wants to have explained?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, this bill has passed both Houses.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And has not been signed by the President?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes, sir, has not been signed by the President.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And now it seems it is desired to place an amendment upon the bill. This is an unusual proceeding, and I should like to know the necessity for the amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. The proposed amendment is really a very simple matter; yet it is material to the bill. The bill simply provides for opening up about 60,000 acres of land within a radius of 5 miles around the city of Pocatello, in the Fort Hall Indian Reservation. Under this bill the land will be disposed of in the same way as the rest of the land within the reservation outside of this 5-mile limit. Within this limit there are a few tracts of land owned by certain Indians, and these particular tracts have been described in the bill. By some means the Land Department failed to give the author of the bill in the Senate the description of 120 acres—simply a brief description of that portion of the land—and consequently the description so far as that tract is concerned was omitted from the bill. It has been thought best to have the omitted words inserted in this manner.

The bill has received the unanimous report of the Committees on Public Lands in both Houses. It has passed the Senate twice, and has the unanimous and favorable report of the Committee on the Public Lands in this House. I think there is no objection anywhere to the bill. I believe this statement explains the point raised by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to inquire whether the resolution carrying this amendment has been considered by the minority members of the Public Lands Committee in the House and has met their approval?

Mr. FRENCH. On that particular point I will say that this concurrent resolution, I presume, has not been referred to that committee at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course I understand that; but has the gentleman himself called the attention of the minority members of the committee to this change, and has it met their approval?

Mr. FRENCH. I have not called the attention of anybody to this particular clause except the chairman of the committee. The simple fact is this: There are a number of Indians, perhaps a dozen, who have little allotments of land within this reservation. The present proposition is to place 120 acres of land, belonging to certain Indians there, in the same list with other lands described in the bill as already passed. This proposed amendment does not affect the bill in any material way. It touches simply this minor clause, which by some inadvertence was omitted in the Land Office when the description of these certain tracts was given to the Senator who introduced the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In view of the explanation given by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], I do not care myself to object; but I think it a bad practice to amend a bill materially in this way without the committee that has had the matter in charge being informed as to what the amendment is. But this matter has been called to the attention of the House; Members here have been informed in regard to it by the explanation of the gentleman from Idaho. So far as I am concerned, I will not object.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was concurred in.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Speaker will erase his name on the enrolled bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8335. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to determine the sessions of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin," approved March 31, 1892; and

H. R. 3761. An act ceding certain land appertaining to the custom-house at St. Joseph, Mo., for use as a street.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4640. An act to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," approved February 28, 1903;

S. 3678. An act to provide for the creation of an additional land district in the district of Alaska;

S. 4142. An act granting to the Davenport Water Power Company rights to construct and maintain a canal, power station, and appurtenant works in the Mississippi River, in Scott County, Iowa;

S. 4937. An act to promote the efficiency of the Revenue-Cutter Service;

S. 463. An act to pay Hewlette A. Hall balance due for services in connection with the Paris Exposition;

S. 2876. An act for the relief of Sarah E. Jenkins;

S. 4563. An act for the delivery on the Pacific coast of two light vessels now being built in New York and New Jersey; and

S. 4672. An act to authorize the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad Company to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Connecticut River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. CHARLES WINSTON THOMPSON, late a Representative of the Fifth district of the State of Alabama.

Resolved, That a committee of eight Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to join a committee on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Senate communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the Senate do now adjourn.

And stated that in compliance with the foregoing resolutions the President pro tempore had appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate, under the second resolution, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. PETTUS, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. MCLAURIN, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. DOLLIVER.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4640. An act to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," approved February 28, 1903—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ABRAM CLAYPOOL.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a concurrent resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 9791) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Abram Claypool" by striking out the word "Illinois," in line 5 of said enrolled bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Indiana."

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the resolution; which was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the enrolled bill will be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

There was no objection.

FUEL FOR THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk the following bill from the Committee on Appropriations, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana reports the following bill from the Committee on Appropriations and asks unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14256) making an appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,000 for fuel and oil for the heating apparatus in the south wing of the Capitol building, to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1904.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Mr. HOWELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be authorized to have printed and bound whatever papers and documents in connection with subjects under consideration by the committee may be necessary to the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a copy of the New York Press of the date of March 21. On the front page I find the following headlines:

BABCOCK sent ton of mail a day under frank to help campaign—Charge against Wisconsin man—Increased rate to railroads for carrying the mails in his home county from five hundred to one thousand dollars a month—He comes up for reelection to-day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this statement, or practically this statement, is copied from a campaign book that was issued in my district during the late campaign. It was a pamphlet of some forty-seven pages, filled with malicious statements of this character, and with misrepresentations and untruths. The whole matter was thoroughly thrashed out through the press in the State of Wisconsin, and especially in the Third district, which I have the honor to represent; and after a full discussion of these specific, unwarranted, and slanderous charges that were made in this pamphlet, the people of the Third district rose in their might and turned it down almost unanimously at the primaries which were held last month.

I desire to call the attention of the House to some of these specific charges which I believe it is due to my colleagues that they should understand.

In the first place, the statement in the paper I referred to is an absolute falsehood from beginning to end. There is not a word of truth in it. As a Representative of the Third district of Wisconsin, I have, to the best of my ability, supplied my constituents with public documents, with seeds, and with matters that were of interest to all. There was one publication in particular that was sent out last spring, or about a year ago, which I had been able to secure here from an honored member of the Senate, it being the complete reports of the Geological Survey from volume 1 to 19, inclusive, each set containing thirty-eight books. The district that I represent is particularly interested in matters of this kind, as we produce iron, zinc, and lead, and especially have the people been interested in minerals from the fact that during the past two years there have been opened in the district some of the greatest iron mines in the world, and this publication was in great demand. I secured a number of these sets, twenty-six, I think, and they were sent to different libraries in the Third district. Of course they weighed considerable, something like 5,000 pounds, but they were valuable and desirable publications, and I have no apology to make for sending them out through the district for the information and benefit of the people.

I wish to state further, in relation to this charge that Government publications and seeds were sent out at a special time for the benefit of railway interests, that I had no knowledge of the time that mails were being weighed, nor do I believe there are ten Members on the floor of the House who to-day can state the dates upon which the mails were weighed in 1903 or the States in which they were weighed. These documents were sent out in the usual and ordinary way and varied but little in amount and weight and number from those sent to my constituents in previous years. Possibly this one document that I refer to was an excess in weight of what had been sent in previous seasons.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BABCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there any Member of the House who knows when the weighing takes place? Is not that a matter entirely secret with the Department?

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can not answer that question, except to say that I knew nothing about it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Nobody knows.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; we are called upon to recommend the weighers.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I can not let that statement go unchallenged. It is no secret. It is public to everybody.

Mr. HULL. Members are called upon to recommend men.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. No; they are not.

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; they are. I have recommended four or five myself.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then you were specially favored. I have not been asked to recommend one in the last six years.

Mr. PAYNE. Why, Mr. Speaker, some ten or twelve years ago I was asked to recommend some men, but since that I have been informed that they were appointed from the eligible list, and I have never been asked to recommend one since.

Mr. HULL. That is true, where they have enough on the eligible list, but where the eligible list is not sufficient they call upon Members to recommend them.

Mr. BABCOCK. Now, Mr. Speaker, had I known the period in which the mails were being weighed I should not have attempted to suppress the ordinary shipment of documents for the purpose of defrauding the railroads any more than I would have attempted to defraud the United States Government by excessive shipments for the benefit of the roads. That is a queer proposition. A man stands charged with a fraud on the Government for the benefit of whom? For the benefit of certain third parties that do not know anything about the proposition. Mr. Speaker, it is ridiculous on its face.

I read from the New York Press:

The railroad officials, the men who so generously gave to Mr. BABCOCK the privilege of issuing passes over their lines.

Commenting on this statement, I wish to say emphatically, Mr. Speaker, that I never issued a pass in my life over any line of railroad in the United States.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, to draw the attention of the House to two or three statements made in this anonymous pamphlet. It is a pamphlet no one would acknowledge; no one would sign it. Its author to-day is unknown. All that we know is that they were mailed from Madison before the State capitol burned.

One statement in this pamphlet is "that Mr. BABCOCK was responsible for the Union Station swindle;" and says "that he led the fight to give $9,000,000 of money, cash, to the Pennsylvania Railroad to build the Union Station."

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is well known to every man on the floor of this House that there never has been or never was a proposition for either the United States or the District to contribute one dollar toward building the Union Depot. The contribution of $3,000,000 made by the Government and the District was for the elevation of tracks and doing away with grade crossings.

Another proposition contained in this wonderful and anonymous pamphlet was—

That Mr. BABCOCK voted to give away $125,000,000 of the Government's money to the Pacific railroads.

Most of the Members present are familiar with this legislation. I voted for the 3 per cent funding bill, as did every Member and Senator from our State, with possibly one exception. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I did right when I voted as I did. I voted for the later proposition which resulted in the settlement of the claims of the Government against those various roads; and, as I understand it to-day, the Government has received every dollar, principal and interest, of the indebtedness due from the Pacific railroads.

Further, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that there has ever been a proposition before Congress looking to the giving away of a dollar, principal or interest, of Government money to these roads.

Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take the time of the House to go further into the details, but I desired to show the character of this pamphlet, and will call your attention to but one other matter.

Occupying several pages of this pamphlet is a long list of bills, referred to as corporation bills, which were reported to the House by the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I have the honor to be chairman, and that I had from time to time called these bills up on the floor and supported them, the object being to show that I was closely identified with corporations, when the facts are that nine-tenths of these bills were Commissioners' or official bills, which were reported by the District Committee, passed by the House, and signed by the President, and which later met the approval of the press and the people of the District of Columbia generally.

But, as I stated before, Mr. Speaker, I will not take up the time of the House further. I thank you, gentlemen, for your kind attention, and I simply want to repeat, in reference to this statement in the New York Press, that it is an absolute, unqualified falsehood. There is no truth in it. The records of the Post-Office Department will prove this assertion. [Applause on the Republican side.]

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MINNESOTA.

Mr. BUCKMAN. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11449) to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, in the State of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11449) to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, of Minnesota, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will ask the gentleman if this bill as drawn up has received the approval of the War Department?

Mr. BUCKMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was reported at length.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

DELEGATE FROM ALASKA.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 13356) for the election of a Delegate from the Territory of Alaska, etc., shall be in order on the next regular pension day in the House, immediately after the conclusion of the consideration of said pension business; and thereafter, until said bill shall have been disposed of, the motion to go into said Committee of the Whole for its consideration shall be privileged. This order not to interfere with appropriation bills, conference reports, or prior orders of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to.

SPECIAL REPORTS ON DISEASES OF THE HORSE AND OF CATTLE.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following Senate resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there shall be printed 3,000 copies of the Special Report on Diseases of the Horse and 1,500 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, for sale by the superintendent of documents under the provisions of section 61 of an act providing for the public printing, binding, and the distribution of documents, approved January 12, 1895; and the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to order reprinted, from time to time, such public documents as may be required for sale: Provided, That the appropriation for printing and binding shall be reimbursed for the cost of such reprints from the moneys received by the superintendent of documents from the sale of public documents.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 12, between the words "sale" and "provided," insert the following: "Such orders for reprinting to be subject to the approval of the Secretary or head of the Department in which such public documents shall have originated."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING BULLETINS BUREAU AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY IN OCTAVO.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That hereafter the bulletins issued by the Bureau of American Ethnology shall be in octavo size instead of royal octavo.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF THE REPORT OF THE GOVERNOR OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 113.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) for the printing of 5,000 copies, with accompanying maps and illustrations, of the report of the governor of New Mexico to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, and the printing of 1,000 copies of the latest map of said Territory.

Resolved, etc., That there be printed 5,000 copies of the report of the governor of the Territory of New Mexico, with accompanying maps and illustrations, to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, 500 thereof for the use of the Delegate in Congress and 4,500 thereof for the use of the said governor, and also that there be printed 1,000 copies of the latest map of the Territory of New Mexico for the use of the Delegate in Congress from said Territory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Has the gentleman seen the illustrations, and does he know what they embrace?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will yield to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RODEY].

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the gentleman that the illustrations are the ordinary ones which are published in a governor's report.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. If they are ordinary ones published in a governor's report, I know of one where they had a basket-ball team of a college printed, and illustrations of that kind.

Mr. RODEY. I will state that the report this time strictly conforms to the rules of the Interior Department.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. With proper illustrations only?

Mr. RODEY. Only, absolutely.

Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts. Do you know the cost of it?

Mr. RODEY. I do not know the cost of it, but we want to get this done as quickly as possible, as the governor has absolutely none——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, the estimated cost is $2,488.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know the necessity for this.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say there is a great demand in New Mexico for these reports. New Mexico and Arizona recently have attracted a great deal of attention from people anxious to settle in those Territories and others interested in them.

Mr. FINLEY. Then this is in the interest of immigration, I understand?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING MAPS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 55.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1903, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose.

Resolved, That the unexpended balance of the appropriations made for the United States and other maps in the acts of April 17, 1900, and March 3, 1901, respectively, which were made available for expenditure during the fiscal year 1903, in the deficiency act of July 1, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, made available for expenditure during the fiscal years 1904 and 1905, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to use the same in the printing of a further edition of the map of the United States, 1903, for delivery to the Senate and House of Representatives. The appropriation of $4,320 made in the deficiency act approved February 18, 1904, for mounting with rollers the United States maps of the consolidated issue of 1901 and 1902, be, and the same is hereby, made available for the mounting with rollers of the maps of the United States of 1903 hereinbefore authorized.

The following committee amendments were read:

In line 3 of the title strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."
In line 2, page 2, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."
In line 11, page 2, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "four."

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say that we have not had an edition of the United States Land Office maps since 1900. The regular appropriation of $14,840, made each year, in 1901 was used by the Interior Department in part in the making of new plates. After they had expended about $8,000 there was not enough left to publish any sort of an edition, and that money was not used. Under the appropriation made for 1902 I think there were in the neighborhood of 200 maps delivered, the bill for which amounted to about $90, when the fire at Baltimore destroyed the establishment which was printing these maps.

There is an unexpended balance appropriated for 1901 and an unexpended balance appropriated for 1902 now available. The appropriation for the map of 1903 is not touched by this resolution and that map will be ready for distribution probably by June. The committee has recommended that the amount unexpended for the maps of 1901 and 1902, amounting to about $21,000, be applied on the maps for 1904.

Mr. HEMENWAY. That will give us an additional number of maps?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. An additional number of maps, and no money will be appropriated in addition to the regular annual appropriation that has been made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was read a third time, and passed.

REPORT OF BOARD OF MANAGEMENT OF NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 55, providing for the publication of the report of the Board of Managers and Inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Joint resolution providing for the publication of the reports of the Board of Managers and Inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903.

Resolved, etc., That there shall be printed of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, in addition to the usual number, for the use of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 500 copies of the report proper, bound in cloth; 200 copies of the report of the inspection of the State Homes, bound in paper, and 200 copies of the record of members, bound in cloth; and that hereafter the additional number of copies herein named of future annual reports of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, bound in the same manner as above described, shall be printed for the use of the National Homes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

APPORTIONMENT OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 10866) to amend section 68 of volume 28 of the United States Statutes at Large.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 68 of volume 28 of the United States Statutes at Large be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"Whenever in the division among Senators, Representatives, and Delegates of documents printed for the use of Congress there shall be an apportionment to each or either House in round numbers, the Public Printer shall not deliver the full number so accredited at the respective folding rooms, but only the largest multiple of the number constituting the full membership of each or either House, including the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper of the House, which shall be contained in the round numbers thus accredited to each or either House, so that the number delivered shall divide evenly and without remainder among the members of the House to which they are delivered; and the remainder of the documents thus resulting shall be turned over to the superintendent of documents, to be distributed by him, first, to public and school libraries for the purpose of completing broken sets; second, to public and school libraries that have not been supplied with any portions of such sets, and, lastly, by sale to other persons; said libraries to be named to him by Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress; and in this distribution the superintendent of documents shall see that as far as practicable an equal allowance is made to each Senator, Representative, and Delegate."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MADDOX. I object.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 33.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commission on International Exchange and the appendices thereto, being House Document No. 144, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, 2,000 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House of Representatives, and 4,000 for the use of the Commission on International Exchange.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

PRINTING UNITED STATES COINAGE LAWS.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House concurrent resolution No. 31.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed, in pamphlet form, 10,000 copies of the coinage laws of the United States, 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint, 3,500 for the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what we want of coinage laws now? I thought that question was settled.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman that the Treasury Department reports that there has been a great demand for the coinage laws, and a demand that the Treasury Department is unable to supply, and they ask that this edition be printed.

Mr. MADDOX. Can the gentleman inform me where that demand comes from? Are we to print books simply on the demand of everybody who comes along?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. The demand comes from all parts of the country and has been coming ever since Congress passed the law providing for the organization of national banks with a capital of $25,000. Since the change in the banking laws and the consequent increase in the number of banks the Treasury officials state that there has been an increased demand for the coinage laws. Their edition has been entirely exhausted, and they are unable to supply the demand.

Mr. MADDOX. Does the resolution include the last national-bank laws also?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. It does not.

Mr. MADDOX. What will it cost?

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Four hundred and thirty-eight dollars.

Mr. MADDOX. Four hundred and thirty-eight dollars; all right.

The resolution was considered and agreed to.

REFERENCE OF BILL PROVIDING FOR NATIONAL IRRIGATION.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote of yesterday by which the bill (H. R. 13867) to amend the act providing for national irrigation, approved June 17, 1902, and for other purposes, was changed from the Committee on Irrigation to the Committee on Public Lands. I do this for this reason: This is a matter that I have been especially interested in——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman that a motion to reconsider is not debatable except by unanimous consent.

Mr. REEDER. Then I would ask unanimous consent to be heard on this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection if the gentleman will limit his remarks to five minutes.

Mr. REEDER. Oh, I would like to have more than five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then, ten minutes.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I shall object unless an equal time is given to myself in which to answer the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that this bill, by unanimous consent, was referred to the Committee on Irrigation. It is a bill of the——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, why should we have a discussion on this matter?

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made. The motion has been entered, and possibly the matter might come up at some more convenient time. This is merely a suggestion on the part of the Chair.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would ask, the motion having been entered, what especial necessity there is to go on with it this morning?

Mr. REEDER. I do not know but we could wait with regard to it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REEDER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] each have five minutes within which to discuss the matter.

Mr. REEDER. Oh, I would rather put the matter off to some later time. This is too important to discuss in five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has made his motion to reconsider. Does he call for a vote now?

Mr. REEDER. No, Mr. Speaker; I shall wait until some later time, when this matter can be discussed at some length.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the question before the committee is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] in charge of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection; and the Clerk again reported the amendment, which will be found printed on page 3445 of the RECORD.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the city of New York contributes very largely to the postal revenues of the country, and I am in no way inclined to deny to that city all the privileges which it should have, but in dealing with that question I think it is bad policy for the Government of the United States to enter into a contract for so long a term of years as fifty. The usual term of Government contract is ten years. I appreciate the fact of the increase in value of property in New York City and the possible increasing rental value of property, but we ought not to determine for the people fifty years in advance what ought to be done in that city in reference to the facilities asked for there. It is a bad policy, I think, to adopt a lease for so long a time as fifty years. I therefore move, Mr. Chairman, that the word "fifty" be stricken out and that the amendment be amended by adding in place of the word stricken out the word "twenty-five" and adding after the word "years" the words "with the privilege or option on the part of the Government to re-lease for twenty-five years longer."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the House that I am willing to accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the amendment will be modified as suggested.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 3, after the words "not exceeding $90,000," insert:

"And for lease of post-office at New York City, $75,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for said purpose unless the Postmaster-General shall lease for post-office purposes, for a period not exceeding twenty-five years, a building to be erected over the tracks of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in the city of New York, State of New York, within the space bounded by Seventh and Ninth avenues, Thirty-first and Thirty-third streets, at an annual rental not exceeding $75,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to grant to the Postmaster-General the same authority with regard to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to lease a substation at their terminal in the city of New York as is granted the original bill covering a site at the New York Central Railroad Company's new station. It is absolutely essential that we should have a substation at the Pennsylvania depot as well as at the New York Central, as 40 per cent of the mails come in over the Pennsylvania road.

I may state that the Postmaster-General is in favor of the proposition of leasing from the Pennsylvania, if it is possible to so arrange. The committee are also in favor of it; and I further believe that the larger number of the New York delegation, if not all of them, are also in favor of renting instead of buying, if such a solution of this question can be reached——

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SULZER. I want to inquire whether the gentleman knows, or believes, the Pennsylvania Railroad is willing to lease to the Government this property?

Mr. DOUGLAS. In reply to the gentleman, I will say that I have no positive knowledge that they would do so. I was intending to allude to that point when the gentleman obtained my consent to interrupt me.

Up to the present time the only proposition we have from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is one of sale. They are desirous of selling a plot of ground to the Government and not leasing a site with building.

The Postmaster-General, however, says that if we will give him the authority to lease, which he will be glad to have, he will use his best endeavors to make proper and fair arrangements with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

I will add, in further reply to the gentleman, that no harm can come from such a provision in the bill. If the Postmaster-General should not succeed in securing a lease from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, it will cost nothing to have made the attempt; and, on the other hand, if he does arrange it, it may be a very easy solution of a most vexatious question. I therefore hope that the gentleman from New York will support this proposition.

Mr. SULZER. One other question, if the gentleman pleases.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Does this amendment provide for a renewal of the lease at the expiration of twenty-five years?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It does not; but I shall be very glad to modify my amendment in that respect, if wished. I simply followed the exact wording of the provision with reference to the New York Central as amended, and I changed the rental period in deference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], by substituting twenty-five years instead of fifty years.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Suppose that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] should be adopted and incorporated in the pending bill, and suppose the Pennsylvania Railroad Company should not accede to the terms proposed in that amendment (and, as I understand, the gentleman is not empowered to say that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will accede to the provision embodied in his amendment), then does not the gentleman believe that the incorporation of his amendment in the bill would go largely toward defeating the proposition now urged to acquire the site of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in which case a building or the provision for the occupation of a building for post-office purposes will be again delayed?

Mr. DOUGLAS. In reply, I will say that I talked this matter over personally with the gentleman from New York yesterday, and I thought he was fully in accord with me in reference to this proposition.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. But I have put the inquiry because I want the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGLAS. In connection with that point, I beg to state that if the Postmaster-General should fail under this amendment to make a lease with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company I do not think there will be any delay.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. One more question, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let me answer fully the question already put. The ground on which the substation at the Pennsylvania Railroad site would be built, whether the ground is purchased or building leased, will not be in a shape to put a building on it, either by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company or by the Government, inside of three to four years. Therefore there can be no delay in any case if this amendment is allowed to go into the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. One more question, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. DOUGLAS. With pleasure.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What assurance can the gentleman from New York give that the Pennsylvania Railroad will accede to the proposition to lease for twenty-five years, with the privilege of renewal for twenty-five years?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I have already answered that question, and I can give no assurance at all; but I have the assurance of the Postmaster-General that he is more in favor of a lease than a purchase, and he further states that if we give him the authority which he desires he will use his utmost endeavors to arrange a proper solution of the issue with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. That is sufficient, I think, for the time being, and as he asks for the authority, and as we are all of one mind, if we can accomplish our purpose in this way, and believe that it will be better than the purchase plan, I think we ought to incorporate the amendment in this bill.

I might say in addition that this is a very important point, because, in my judgment, it will probably save the United States Government at least five million to eight million dollars within the next twenty-five years. I know that if we should be forced to buy at the Pennsylvania site and erect a building there the annual expenditure by the Government would be extremely large, whereas if we succeed in renting at $75,000 a year or less we will save probably $200,000 a year, which, with the interest on the investment, will make a large total saving.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to his colleague?

Mr. DOUGLAS. With pleasure.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to ask the gentleman how much floor space he thinks the Government could get for $75,000 a year at this location?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would reply that the New York Central proposed to give us 100,000 square feet for a rental of seventy thousand to ninety thousand dollars as a maximum; therefore, as the ground at the Pennsylvania is less valuable, I think for $75,000 a year rental they could certainly afford to give us 100,000 square feet, the same as the New York Central; and as the Pennsylvania only carries 40 per cent in quantity of mail matter as against 60 per cent by the New York Central we certainly should have all the space we require.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the gentleman any precise figures on that point?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I only have the figures given at the different hearings, which state that the New York Central proposes to lease 100,000 square feet for a maximum rental of $90,000.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following substitute for the amendment offered by my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers the following substitute for the pending amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the acquisition of a site for a post-office building in the city of New York, State of New York, comprising a frontage of 400 feet on the west side of Eighth avenue and a depth of 640 feet on Thirty-first and Thirty-third streets, to a street to be hereafter made, such site to be subject to the right of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to use for platforms and trackage under a plane 20 feet below the curb line of the adjoining streets: Provided, however, That such use does not interfere with the erection of supports necessary in the construction of a suitable post-office building, $2,000,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Against that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill makes the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the gentleman will reserve the point of order for a few minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will not.

Mr. SULZER. Just a few minutes. I would like to be heard.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, no.

Mr. SULZER. I just want to be heard a few minutes. I trust the gentleman will withhold the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I insist on my point.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SULZER. I understand that I was recognized to offer this substitute, and I understand that while I have the floor I can not be taken off my feet by anyone, even to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Any gentleman may make the point of order, and the point of order was made at the proper time.

Mr. SULZER. Then, Mr. Chairman, in connection with this substitute, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes' time to address the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I must object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask the floor in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SULZER. I have the floor, I think, Mr. Chairman, in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is the ruling of the Chair on the substitute amendment. The Chair sustains the point of order. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and the gentleman from Indiana is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SULZER. I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered a substitute amendment, which was ruled out of order. The Chair recognizes the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. May I ask the Clerk to again report the amendment as amended, with the consent of the gentleman from New York?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I understood that the gentleman from New York acceded to a proposition to be embodied in his amendment, namely, that there should be the privilege given to the Government of renewing the lease in twenty-five years.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that a modification has been made in the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from New York stated he would embody such a provision in his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the committee will afford proper relief to the situation in New York, in spite of the attitude of some Members in the New York delegation. I believe if gentlemen will give attention to what is really being sought to be done in their behalf, if they will permit me to say it in all kindness and courtesy, that we will make progress for the benefit of New York and avoid contention within the New York delegation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a very simple business proposition. There is a great congestion in the mails of the great city of New York. The New York Central Railroad carries in and out of that great city 60 per cent of the 90 per cent of all the mails taken care of by the two companies. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the New York Central take care of 90 per cent of all the mails. The Pennsylvania cares for 40 per cent of the 90 per cent. The amendment which has prevailed here authorizes the lease of property for a period not exceeding twenty-five years from the New York Central, which has the larger amount of mail handled of these two railroads.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] seeks to apply the same condition for remedy with the mail handled by the Pennsylania terminal. I am not questioning the business judgment of the gentleman in making that overture. I am not going to vote against the amendment, but I wish to call the attention of the committee to this fact: The amendment offered by me relative to the New York Central proposition was accompanied by statistics and an offer from the president of that great railroad, which fixed definitely the terms upon which they were willing to enter into negotiations for a period of years.

A proposition from the Pennsylvania Railroad has not come before the committee. It has not been said just how much floor space they were willing to offer in their proposed terminal station, nor at what rate. Neither is it shown definitely just the amount of expense that is now incurred by the Government at the Pennsylvania terminal, while at the New York Central terminal it is clearly defined as an annual expenditure of over $70,000, while the proposition is to incur not in excess of $90,000 per year.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, in my desire to be entirely fair to that great city and its mail facilities I should have no objection to give such authority to the Post-Office Department, through the Postmaster-General, as would enable him to make a fair and businesslike proffer of negotiations with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

If these negotiations should not crystallize into a proposition similar to the one which we are offered by the New York Central road, then they would be dropped and no further considered; while, on the other hand, if, under the same authority we have already given by the passage of the former amendment, granting a lease with the New York Central for a number of years, we might accept the same proposal from the Pennsylvania terminal, so that it would be in keeping with affording that relief in these two great terminals which the committee thinks they are entitled to. I simply feel it is my duty to call attention to the lack of information that the committee has concerning the Pennsylvania proposition, and it is due that you should have as full information as the committee has relating to the New York Central proposition.

Nevertheless, I should have no objection to giving the Postmaster-General authority to negotiate, and if the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is unwilling to negotiate that would be an end of the matter; while, on the other hand, should negotiations disclose the fact that we could effect as reasonable an agreement with the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for the use of its terminal as proposed for the use of the terminal of the New York Central, then he would have authority to conclude an agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SULZER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the substitute I offered for the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS] was offered in good faith, and I regret the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] raised a point of order against it. That substitute is the only feasible, practicable, and advantageous method to secure adequate postal facilities at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad in the city of New York. The substitute is in the identical language of the recommendation of the commission heretofore appointed to select and locate a site for a new postal building in the city of New York.

It is the same which I offered heretofore to the deficiency bill and has been recommended, as I said, by a commission consisting of the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury. That commission went to New York and carefully investigated this matter and recommended unanimously to Congress the purchase of this site at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. If we purchase this site now we buy it at a great bargain. The assessed value of this property to-day by the city of New York is over $3,000,000. It is increasing in value every day, and it will soon be the most valuable property in the world. The Pennsylvania Railroad Company offers it to the Government now at $2,000,000, and real estate men tell me if we purchase it now it is a great bargain. It will pay for itself in twenty years. The Government wants to purchase and asked for the authority from Congress to do so. We should do so. If it were possible to get the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to enter into a long-term lease it might be well to lease, but in order to find out if a lease could be secured, I wrote a letter to the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, a copy of which letter is as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., March 17, 1904.

Hon. A. J. CASSATT,
President of Pennsylvania Railroad, Philadelphia, Pa.

MY DEAR MR. CASSATT: For several years I have been making a determined effort in Congress to secure better postal facilities for the city of New York. The post-office appropriation bill carries an item authorizing the Postmaster-General to enter into a lease for a substation at the new Grand Central Depot, and I am endeavoring to have an item inserted in the same bill, or the sundry civil bill, making an appropriation of $2,000,000 to purchase the site at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad in New York City. Mr. DOUGLAS and others in Congress object to appropriating this money on the ground that they think it would be more advantageous to the Government to lease a substation from the Pennsylvania Railroad at its depot in New York City, along similar lines to the New York Central proposition.

Will you advise me at your earliest convenience if the Pennsylvania Railroad Company is willing to lease a substation at its terminus in New York City, and will provide for it in its plans for the construction of its depot there? If the Pennsylvania Railroad will not favor a lease to the Government, then will you advise me if the proposition to sell the land, as specified in the report of the commission, for $2,000,000 still holds good, and how long an option you intend to give the Government to carry out this offer?

From the beginning of this Congress to the present time I have consistently been endeavoring to secure legislation appropriating the $2,000,000 necessary to purchase the Pennsylvania Railroad site in accordance with the report made to Congress by the Postmaster-General, the Attorney-General, and the Secretary of the Treasury.

Very respectfully, yours,
WM. SULZER.

In answer to that letter I received the following response from the acting president of the railroad, which I desire to have the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter in the time of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD COMPANY,
GENERAL OFFICE, BROAD STREET STATION,
Philadelphia, March 21, 1904.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 17th instant has, in the absence of Mr. Cassatt, who is on a vacation trip to the South, been handed to me for reply.

We feel grateful to you for the kind interest which you have taken in connection with the appropriation recommended by the Commission created by Congress for the purchase of the site offered by our company for the post-office building in the city of New York. Knowing the views entertained by Mr. Cassatt on this subject, I feel that I am fully warranted in stating, in reply to your inquiry, that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company would not be willing to lease to the Government the necessary property for the establishment of a subpost-office station at that point, and while no definite time was fixed for the acceptance of our company's offer, you can appreciate that in view of the improvements which we have under contemplation it would be necessary that some definite action be taken at the present session of Congress if the Government is desirous of availing itself of the offer, which we consider a most liberal one, in view of the value of the property in that section of the city.

Yours, very truly,
W. A. PATTON,
Assistant to President.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, it must be apparent to everyone here from that letter that the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will not lease its property for a subpost-office station to the Government at its terminus in New York City. It is also apparent, it seems to me, from the terms of that letter that unless the Government speedily accepts the Pennsylvania Railroad's proposition and appropriates this $2,000,000 to purchase this ground which has been recommended and approved by three of the highest officials of this Government the Pennsylvania Railroad will withdraw the offer, and in my opinion it will be impossible for the Government to ever make as good a bargain again, either there or anywhere else in that neighborhood. It will be wisdom, sagacity, and economy for the Government to make this appropriation now and close this advantageous bargain. This matter has been pending here ever since the Commission report came to Congress. We have tried to get this appropriation by a bill through the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The chairman of that committee has notified us that his committee will not report this bill or any other similar bill during this Congress.

We have tried to get this appropriation on the deficiency appropriation bill, and the chairman ruled it out of order. We have urged and pleaded as a body before the Committee on Appropriations and have asked that committee to give us this appropration, but for some reason or other it seems that it is absolutely impossible for the great city of New York, which contributes a net profit from its post-office of over $8,000,000 every year, to get proper, decent, necessary postal facilities for the proper distribution of the mail. It is a disgrace to the Government. It is a miserable shame. I believe, with the provision making a great substation at the terminus of the New York Central Railroad and another great substation at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad, it will give us relief that will be sufficient for at least a few years, and so, as the substitute I offered has been stricken out on a point of order, I shall rest content for the present and will endeavor to get the appropriation of $2,000,000 in the sundry civil bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to occupy time, but, in view of the remarks of the gentleman from New York, it seems to be desirable, in fact necessary, to give a little more information on this point. I would state that I have incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, March 17, a full explanation of the Pennsylvania Railroad's intention and show exactly what they propose to sell to the Government as a site. I wish to say that in the first place the site is not accessible or desirable for a general post-office. It will mean that the Government will have to expend $4,000,000 or more for a building in a position that is inconvenient and consequently not for the good of the postal requirements of New York City or for the public, except as a substation.

There will probably be spent a million of dollars more for equipment. This will mean a total expenditure of at least $7,000,000, which with other expenses would figure out equivalent to $300,000 a year rental. Every man who knows anything about this question and has studied it from a purely business point of view is thoroughly convinced that we should lease and not buy. All details are given fully in the RECORD, March 17. Another thing I wish to call the attention of the House to as most important is this: That the railroad authorities do not propose to sell a proper site. They are only selling an inside site. The map in the RECORD will show this. It means for $2,000,000 the Government would buy a site without having one foot of easement or one foot of front on any street.

I have asked for opinions as to the value of such a site, if it was purchased by the United States Government, and am told that if we to-day bought that ground for $2,000,000 and then put it up at auction to-morrow morning we could not probably get more than $250,000 to $500,000 for what we purchased at $2,000,000. I therefore do not hesitate to say that unless the Pennsylvania Railroad Company amend their proposition no man on the floor of this House from New York State, or any other State, should stand for such a proposition. It is directly wrong on the face of it.

I have called the attention of the committee to these points. The Appropriations Committee know it. This House well knows it, and our present Speaker [Mr. CANNON] last year investigated the purchase of said site and stated that he could not find out whether it was worth $500,000 or a million dollars or what it was worth, and the conference committee deliberately threw it out in the conference with the Senate and declined to allow it to go into the sundry civil bill. An effort is being made to force this proposition by interests I do not know anything about, but I will not stand for it as an honest man.

I disclaim any desire to enter into an argument of this kind to-day, and I regret that it has been brought up; but the issue having been raised, I propose to fight it out, and I say without hesitation if the present amendment is voted down I shall regret it sincerely, because it is an honest, upright business proposition to accomplish what New York City needs, in a proper manner, and the Pennsylvania Railway should meet us fairly. I shall fight to have a purchase stricken out, the same as Mr. CANNON and Mr. HEMENWAY and others did last year, because, after careful investigation, I find it is unjust to the Government and we should not put our hands in the Treasury and spend $2,000,000 for such a site. I have no hesitation in saying that any man who will read the full explanation which I have placed in the RECORD will be satisfied and convinced that my position on this subject is correct.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DOUGLAS. With pleasure.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The difficulty seems to be that we are reckoning without our host. The gentleman must remember that it takes two to make a bargain, two to enter into a contract. The gentleman from New York has been proceeding on the theory that we can obtain an appropriation for the site of the Pennsylvania Railroad on a lease for a period of twenty-five years, and still we have nothing before us that gives us any assurance whatever that the Pennsylvania Railroad will accede to such a proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have time enough to reply to my colleague.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana objects, and without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think we might as well be frank about this matter. Since I have been in this House the contention has been going on as to what the Government should do in the way of securing additional post-office room in New York City. I confess for one that I do not understand the proposition to-day further than this, that I shall not vote for the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

I do not think it is a practicable proposition. I do not believe it is one that should carry in this committee, and I hope that the committee will vote down that amendment. Why? We have here one proposition from the New York Central Railroad Company, where it is known that a contract can be made for leasing, and another proposition involved in the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS], leasing one which it is well known can not be made with the Pennsylvania road. So that, Mr. Chairman, there is to-day the same want of agreement, there is to-day the same contention and strife that has existed in reference to this proposition for the past five years to my knowledge. I acquit the delegation from New York City of all responsibility for this condition of affairs. They have ably and zealously worked to secure proper legislation for the New York City post-office.

When I say I shall not vote for the amendment to the amendment, I also did not vote for the original amendment. I believe that both should be voted down. I think when this matter is considered carefully the conclusion is inevitable that the influence of the New York Central Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company has up to this time prevented the people of the city of New York from obtaining proper postal facilities, and have been able to prevent legislation.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman allow me an interruption?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman know of any way in which New York City can, through this House, obtain the passage of a bill for the erection of a Government post-office building in New York City? Does he know of any way in which we can get that bill out of the committee or get it considered in this House?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman by saying that, judging by the experience of the past five years and the little opportunity I have had for observation, I will tell him one way, and that is to get the New York Central Railroad Company and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to caucus together, and if they can agree a bill will likely be reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Can you do that?

Mr. FINLEY. I confess I can not.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No, and no one else can. No one seems to be able to do it. Then why delay us?

Mr. FINLEY. I am not delaying anybody. I say that there should be a permanent arrangement. There is one proposition for rent and another for a building owned by the Government, and I do not believe that if you incorporate these two amendments into this bill it will be for the best interests of the Government.

Mr. SULZER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, it would not be cheaper and more economical for the Government to purchase this site at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at the price offered, $2,000,000, than to rent a substation there at $75,000 a year for a period of twenty-five years?

Mr. FINLEY. I will come to that proposition, Mr. Chairman. I will say that I am opposed on principle to the Government of the United States renting post-office sites in great cities like New York. I believe the Government should own its buildings.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Does the gentleman know any other way by which we can secure substations or branches in New York City, in a city that is growing every hour, in a city that has an enormous population, in a city which is the metropolis of the United States of America?

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that perfectly well, but it does not detract from the force of the argument that the Government should own its buildings. It should own a building at the New York Central station and also at the Pennsylvania Railroad station. In fact, I may add that I believe that in every city in the whole United States where there is a population of 5,000 people the Government should own the post-office building, so that I think the pending amendment will not end your troubles. I do not believe that you will obtain the relief you so much need and so much desire by the incorporation of these two amendments in the bill under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me singular that our New York friends can not arrive at some harmonious arrangement or agreement respecting the postal facilities in the city of New York.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SIBLEY. I do, for a question.

Mr. SULZER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the New York delegation unanimously, with the exception of two Members, went before the Committee on Appropriations in favor of the proposition to purchase the site at the terminus of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

Mr. SIBLEY. Oh, I think the House understood that very well before. It looks to me like this: Here are two great railroad companies that, combined, carry 90 per cent of all the mail that arrives in the city of New York.

Mr. SULZER. What companies?

Mr. SIBLEY. The New York Central and the Pennsylvania Railroad Company carry into the city of New York 90 per cent of all the mails that arrive in that city.

Mr. SULZER. That is quite true.

Mr. SIBLEY. Both of these railroad companies are erecting large terminals at the present time; have their plans in process of development and construction. Now, if we can rent or authorize by this amendment the Postmaster-General to enter into a contract, say, at the same rate that we authorize the Postmaster-General to contract with the New York Central, at 90 cents per square foot of floor space, I think that it would prove an economy amounting in the aggregate to millions of dollars. It would save something like two or three hundred thousand dollars annually to the Government. If we can get that space at all, we will get it before their plans are definitely finished, before their stations have been erected, and I can see no objection whatever to permitting the Postmaster-General to negotiate at a limited price per square foot for the accommodations necessary to meet the enormously expanding business of that great commercial metropolis.

There is no gentleman who is familiar with postal affairs on either side of this Chamber who is unaware that there must be some action taken. We can not localize it and say it is the city of Chicago or the city of New York. It is our city. We as members of the Federal Union are all of us more or less interested in business that must either go or come from that great metropolis.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, that is the right way to talk.

Mr. SIBLEY. Now, then, what is the practical solution of the problem? It would certainly seem to be this amendment which permits, if he sees fit and wise and expedient and economic to this Government, the Postmaster-General to enter into a contract for floor space when it would cost less than one-half of what the same floor space would cost to build. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withhold that motion for a moment. I have not spoken on this question in the two days it has been under discussion.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think that we have debated it long enough.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. We must proceed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think, in fairness, on account of the division on this side of the House, the gentleman ought to grant me some time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I call for the regular order. We better make progress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I ask for just three minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw my motion and ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] have three minutes. I give notice now that I will then take the floor and move that debate be closed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, some confusion has resulted from the different propositions for relief of the postal facilities in New York City. Everybody concedes that some relief must be afforded. Among the additional facilities that are required are those at the terminals of the two great railroads that enter the city of New York. Two propositions have been made to the Government—one to lease space at the New York Central and one to sell a site at the Pennsylvania terminus. I do not know whether the Pennsylvania Railroad Company will entertain a proposition to lease a portion of its terminal to the Government for postal facilities, but I do know this, Mr. Chairman, that some facilities will be required at that terminal.

It may be that it will be impossible to secure legislation that will enable the Government to purchase a site at that terminal and to erect a building there, and so, in my opinion, it is wise at this time to lodge with the Postmaster-General the discretionary power to secure the proper facilities there by means of a lease, as is proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS]. For this reason I trust that the committee will place this discretionary power in the hands of the Postmaster-General and permit him to ascertain whether the Government can obtain at the Pennsylvania terminal the same facilities that it is authorized in the bill to obtain at the terminal of the New York Central Railroad.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I now renew my motion that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOUGLAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with first and second class post-offices, including furniture, cleaning, and all other matters not specifically provided for in other appropriations, $225,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, may authorize any of the postmasters of said offices to expend the funds he may allow them for such purposes without the written consent of the Postmaster-General.

Mr. TAWNEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 12 on page 12 insert:

"Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for telephone service in any post-office where the postmaster is required, by order of the Postmaster-General, or otherwise, to use no other telephone service than that of the Bell Telephone Company or any of the telephone companies connected with or controlled, in whole or in part, by said Bell Telephone Company."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make a point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is clearly in order. It is a limitation upon the appropriation of $225,000 carried by the paragraph just read; that is, it specifies that no part of this appropriation shall be paid for the exclusive use of any particular telephone service. The merits of the amendment, if the Chair overrules the point of order, I am perfectly willing to discuss, but it seems to me clear that the amendment is a limitation upon the appropriation and is therefore in order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I beg to direct the attention of the Chair to section 321 of the postal laws, based upon Statutes at Large, section 1103:

The Postmaster-General, in his discretion, under such regulations as he shall prescribe, may authorize any of the postmasters at said offices to expend the funds he may allow them for such purposes [miscellaneous and incidental items, including furniture and cleaning] without the written consent of the Postmaster-General.

Upon that is based the discretion of the Postmaster-General relative to the expenditure of the miscellaneous items. The limitation to which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] refers is such a limitation as would preclude absolutely any discretion on the part of the Postmaster-General. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the limitations which are placed upon appropriations for expenditures may deprive an officer of the administrative branch of the Government of a discretionary authority which a statute has given him. To demonstrate by way of illustration the point I make, let me say this: The practice obtains to supply telephones from this item of appropriation for miscellaneous and incidental expenses. The practice of the Department has been and is now to authorize the use of telephones according to the circumstances in the respective offices.

I do not claim that he may exercise this power in favor of any one company as against another by way of arbitrary preference, but only by way of convenience. Where there are two companies, the discretion as to the price is left to him; where there are more than two, the same discretion is allowed, and where there is but one, of course, if the telephone service is essential to the proper discharge of the business of the office, he must then select that one. But in no case has this discretion been exercised by way of mere preference or favoritism in favor of any one company.

I give this as an illustration of the discretion to which this statute has reference. If an absolute limitation be insisted upon, the officer is deprived of this discretionary power.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, just one word in reference to the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] on the point of order. His proposition is that because the statute gives to the Postmaster-General certain discretionary power in the expenditure of money for miscellaneous purposes, therefore it is not competent for the Congress of the United States to modify that discretion by specifying a particular item which has heretofore been classed as incidental expenses and take away from him the discretion of expending any part of that money for that particular item except under certain circumstances.

It seems ridiculous to maintain what I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana to be—that is, because Congress in the past has given the Postmaster-General discretionary power in the disbursement of money appropriated for miscellaneous expenses, we can not limit the incidental purposes for which the appropriation is made and can not require that it shall be expended only for such incidental purposes as Congress may designate; that we can not make an exception of certain incidental purposes that have heretofore been appropriated for.

Now, just one word more. The gentleman from Indiana claims that the use of telephone service has been let by open bids——

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman is in error. I made no such claim.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, the gentleman stated that——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I stated that it could be and was in some instances.

Mr. TAWNEY. And was in some instances.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. But within the last six months, by order of the Postmaster-General, every independent telephone, at least in certain States, has been ordered out of Government post-offices. In the State of Minnesota——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I challenge that statement and ask for the proof.

Mr. TAWNEY. And in the State of Ohio, as I am informed by Members of Congress from that State. I know in my own State that in the city of St. Paul, where the postmaster had the Twin City telephone service installed in the post-office, and where it had been in use for some time, and where he installed it because of the superior service, because of the fact that it reached more of the patrons of that post-office than did the Bell telephone service, nevertheless, upon the mandatory order of the Postmaster-General, the Twin City Telephone Company was obliged to remove its entire service from that post-office building on the plea——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a moment. I wish to complete this statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TAWNEY. On the plea that it was necessary to have the Bell service. Why was this done? Because it is claimed that sometimes the Department in Washington wanted to talk to the postmaster in St. Paul by long distance-telephone, and there was no other telephone company that had the long-distance service between Washington and St. Paul. So that has been the excuse for this order in every instance, as I am informed, where the independent telephone has been ordered out.

I do not know of my own knowledge that it has been ordered out of the post-offices in other States, but I am informed by Members of this House that it has, in spite of the fact that the independent telephone companies in almost every city outside, perhaps, of Chicago and New York or the large cities of the country, serve more people in the community than does the Bell telephone. They all have their county and country lines running into the rural districts, affording the people an opportunity to communicate with the post-office in their community, which the Bell Telephone Company does not have; and I maintain that there is absolutely no justification for this discrimination against the independent telephone companies, that the order of the Postmaster-General is clearly a discrimination between these companies and the Bell Company or the companies under the control of the Bell Company, and it should cease. I certainly think that the amendment is in order, and, if held in order, I trust it will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in corroboration of what has just been said by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, that I was written to from the little town of Canton, in Mississippi, and I was told that this order had been issued there. The people down in the county protested against it——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish to inquire if the gentleman from Mississippi will not defer his remarks until the point of order has been ruled upon, and then, if it is held in order, the debate may proceed upon the merits of the proposed amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I want to furnish the House and the country, if I can, with this information while the gentleman reserves the point of order for a minute.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I made the point of order, and I assumed that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would address himself to the point of order, as I endeavored to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did, and the latter part of my argument was only an answer to that part of the gentleman's argument which did not relate to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he is prepared to rule on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I should like to have the gentleman from Indiana reserve the point of order for a minute, if he will.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think it is only fair to the Postmaster-General, who is lying in bed sick, that accompanying these statements, which I by no means challenge, a very brief statement of his explanation should be made. I should be glad to make it. I went to the Post-Office Department myself with a letter from the independent company in my own town, protesting——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I submit that I do not understand the parliamentary situation. If I am to be cut off from making some explanations by the point of order, and then the gentleman from Ohio is permitted to make his explanations notwithstanding that——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Ohio was propounding an interrogatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I think as between the gentleman from Ohio and myself I have the floor; as between the gentleman from Indiana and myself, perhaps not.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Postmaster-General has a perfectly proper and legitimate reason for his action in the matter.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not wish to be too insistent. There is abundant answer to meet the statement the gentleman from Minnesota has made. I reserve the point of order for five minutes, and if the gentleman will only occupy a short time, I will yield to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, this letter came to me. Here it is; I read it:

CITIZENS' LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
Canton, Miss., January 25, 1904.

Hon. JOHN S. WILLIAMS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Postmaster-General has issued an order to all postmasters as follows:

"But one telephone company's service at any one post-office shall be covered by official allowance, and the company which furnishes long-distance connection with Washington shall be patronized."

Inasmuch as the Bell monopoly controls the telephone business at Washington, this order can have but one effect, to wit, to give to the Bell monopoly exclusive right to furnish telephone service at all post-offices.

This order does not leave it in any wise to the discretion of the postmaster to retain the telephone which is of the most use to his business or to the community, but commands a preference to the Bell. If communication with Washington between the various clerks of the post-offices and the Department were the only use to which the telephone could be put, there might be some slight reason for the order, but the Postmaster has entirely forgotten that the business public and the community generally who do business with the various post-offices have some right to this public service.

We sincerely hope that you will use your good offices and influence, so that this anomalous position of the United States Post-Office Department, practically boycotting all telephone systems except the Bell, will be of short duration.

Yours, truly, B. L. ROBERTS, President.

In my county the Mutual Telephone Company has its telephones in every farmhouse and in nearly every house in the town, and, by the way, at a rate about one-third of what we pay in the city of Washington. When I got this letter, I sent it with one of my own to the office of the Postmaster-General to protest against an order which compelled the people in Mississippi, whether they would or would not, to use the Bell telephone, to give them their custom; because the practical effect of that order would be this, provided that anyone in that county were desirous of entering into communication with the post-office, the Department having ordered that they should use only one phone, and that should be the long-distance phone, or virtually to use the Bell monopoly phone, it necessarily results that the people of that county would have to take out their other phones and would have to give their custom to the Bell Telephone Company, as only the Bell Telephone Company would have the long-distance telephone service with Washington, and they would have to pay a higher rate to the Bell Telephone Company, as that company would not have the local competition, which would be by this order broken down.

I got no satisfaction from the Department, although I received a letter in reply. I shall take the liberty, if I can find them, of inserting in the RECORD my letter to the Post-Office Department and its reply to me:

JANUARY 26, 1904.

Hon. H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find a letter from Mr. B. L. Roberts, president of the Citizens' Telephone Company at Canton, Madison County, Miss. I sincerely join in the protest of Mr. Roberts and others against the order for postmasters referred to and quoted in his letter. Take my own county, for example. The postmaster at Yazoo City, its chief town, has ten times as much use for a telephone to communicate with the balance of the county and the State as he has for a telephone to communicate with Washington. When he communicates with Washington at all it is, I imagine, either by wire or letter.

The people of my county made up their minds long ago not to be robbed by the Bell Telephone Company. They therefore organized what is called the "Mutual Telephone Company," and nearly every house in Yazoo City, every plantation, and nearly every farm has one of these phones. The Cumberland Telephone Company, the long-distance company, put down prices to almost nothing at one time with the view of running out competition and afterwards of raising their prices to extortionate rates, as they had done at Columbia, Tenn., and elsewhere. The citizens of my town and county not only did not take the Cumberland phones at the price offered, which really would have been below the cost of operation, but, knowing the object of the gigantic concern, the Mutual Telephone Company passed a regulation, agreed to universally by the citizens, as far as I know, not to furnish a phone to anybody who would not obligate himself not to take the Cumberland phone. This rule continued until the Cumberland Telephone Company virtually gave up the fight so far as driving out went, and now some few people have both.

The order from the Post-Office Department of the character referred to virtually compels the people throughout our country to patronize the monopoly, and, as people want to communicate with the post-office, gives the Cumberland or Bell Company an advantage in the fight almost beyond calculation.

Your own knowledge of the facts will show you that, as the Bell Telephone Company is the only one operated in the city of Washington, it would be the only one that could be used under your order, and that this would virtually mean that every farmhouse should put in their telephone in order to be able to communicate with the post-office. Moreover, the thing would look like a Government indorsement of the Bell telephone monopoly. They would advertise everywhere that the only telephone allowed to be used by the post-offices of the United States, under an order from the United States Government, was theirs, and that therefore theirs is the best. Please return Mr. Roberts's letter with your reply, and oblige.

Yours, very truly, ——— ———.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 4, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. WILLIAMS: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 26th ultimo, forwarding a letter addressed to you by Mr. B. L. Roberts, president of the Citizens' Telephone Company, of Canton, Miss., regarding the rental of telephones in connection with the postal service.

In reply thereto I beg to state that where application is made for an allowance to pay for a telephone in connection with any post-office in the country the Department will take up such case on its merits. In determining each case the best interests of the postal service as a whole will be considered, and the question of cost will be a factor, as well as whether long-distance service is afforded.

The Department does not feel justified in paying for a double service, considering such an expenditure wasteful and unnecessary.

The communication from Mr. Roberts is returned herewith.

Very truly, yours,

H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

Hon. JOHN S. WILLIAMS,
House of Representatives.

If the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices can give an explanation, I know that my people would be glad to have it. The explanation given by the Post-Office Department amounts absolutely to nothing. They seem to go upon the idea that the post-offices of the country must communicate by phone with Washington more than with other places, whereas, as a matter of fact, I do not suppose they communicate with Washington by phone once a month, while they communicate with the people throughout the county all the time. When they do communicate with Washington, as a rule it is by letter or by telegraph and not by the long-distance phone, and yet the explanation, as the Department gives it, was that country offices must have the long-distance phone communicating with Washington, and as the Cumberland use those phones, they must use that, being forbidden by executive legislation to use two. Now, that seems to me "a lame and impotent conclusion" from very unfounded premises.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not need that long a time. I went to the Post-Office Department to find out the facts in this case. I had received a letter which purported to make this very same charge, which also was accompanied by the resolution of a convention of independent telephone owners. I laid the subject before the Postmaster-General himself. There was a personal matter in it that I shall not refer to here. He told me there was no truth in it, and I do not care to repeat that here. He then told me that the only use that the Government had for a telephone in the post-office was to communicate in case of accident or some special matter with the great post-offices in the particular districts in the country where any matter of importance should occur.

For myself I accepted that statement, for I do not know any use that the post-office people throughout the country have for communicating with the people in the community in which the post-office is located. I do not know how it could be used by them. I do not understand that they could use phones to hurry up the mail that was to be distributed by the rural free delivery. The Postmaster-General told me it was important for the Department to hold communication between Washington and the cities of Chicago, Cincinnati, Louisville, New York, and the great cities where the inspectors are located; and for that reason, and for that reason alone, the long-distance telephones—not Bell telephones, but any long-distance telephone located in that particular place—were authorized to be employed.

That is his statement, and I have no reason to doubt its accuracy, and I know of no reason to discredit his statement. He made it very frankly and fully, and there was no thought of the Post-Office Department to favor monopoly or discrimination against anybody. They were using a phone that was of value and not a phone that was of no value. I give this statement as that of the Postmaster-General and not as affirming or denying the same.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just for the purpose of completing the record, as it has been started, I wish to state to the Chair and to the committee that the practice which I referred to a moment ago has obtained and has been universally followed, as shown by the letters which I shall ask the Clerk to read. There has been no ironclad rule of contracts with any particular company. Conditions of a local character, with the factor of the long-distance connection with Washington as one element to be considered, have always been taken into account in determining the result as to what telephone should be installed in any office. Each case is decided upon its merits.

The amendment offered to which I directed the point of order permits and directs an absolute monopoly in favor of the independent telephone company. It forbids the expenditure of a single dollar of this appropriation for the Bell Telephone Company or any telephone company connected with it or——

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it does not——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, the gentleman seeks to leave the impression it is in the interest of competition, and then so frames the language of the resolution as to put in the hands of the only competitor of this great long-distance telephone company the absolute power to control the situation. Now, the practice is, as shown by these letters, which I will ask the Clerk to read, that the local conditions control, as the gentleman from Ohio suggests, with the element of long-distance connections taken into account as one factor, where they can reach the inspectors at certain points over the country. I now ask the Clerk to read the correspondence which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. OVERSTREET: I inclose herewith for your information copies of two letters I have written concerning the rental of telephones in connection with the postal service, which, I think, express the attitude of the Department toward the matter.

I might add, however, that the total number of telephones belonging to what is known as the opposition companies that have been displaced are very few, while the number of Bell telephone instruments supplanted by telephones of the opposition companies is very large. Some of the opposition instruments have been removed because the Department has not been willing to pay for a double service.

In each and every instance the Department will give consideration to the merits of the case, as stated in the letters, copies of which are inclosed herewith.

Very truly, yours,

H. C. PAYNE,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 15, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. WADHAMS: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 13th instant. I think perhaps the best way to answer your letter is to inclose herewith a carbon copy of a letter sent to Senator BEVERIDGE, bearing upon the same subject-matter.

The facts are that there have been large numbers of Bell telephone instruments displaced, but very few of the Independent Company's instruments displaced. Within a few days a Bell instrument was ordered taken from the Memphis, Tenn., office and the Independent Telephone Company's instruments put in.

Each case is taken up on its merits as presented. You can readily see that long-distance service is somewhat of a factor, and I think I am justified in assuming that double service paid for by the Government is unnecessary and the expenditure not justified. Double service in all the post-offices in the United States would cost the Government an enormous amount of money, which I think would not be good business administration.

Very truly, yours,

H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

Mr. E. A. WADHAMS,
The Hotel Pfister, Milwaukee, Wis.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1904.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 6th instant, with which you transmit a communication from the Home Telephone and Telegraph Company, of Fort Wayne, Ind., regarding the rental of telephones in connection with the postal service.

In reply I beg to state that where application is made for an allowance to pay for a telephone in connection with any post-office in the country the Department will take up such case on its merits.

In determining each case the best interests of the postal service as a whole will be considered, and the question of cost will be a factor as well as whether long-distance service is afforded.

The Department does not feel justified in paying for a double service, considering such an expenditure wasteful and unnecessary.

The letter from the Home Telephone and Telegraph Company addressed to you is returned herewith.

Very truly, yours,

———— ————,
Postmaster-General.

Hon. ALBERT J. BEVERIDGE,
United States Senate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The paragraph under consideration contains an appropriation of $225,000 "for necessary miscellaneous and incidental items directly connected with first and second class post-offices." The Chair understands that under the statutes a part of this money may be expended for telephone service. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota provides that no part of the appropriation shall be expended for telephone service in any post-office where the postmaster is required, by order of the Postmaster-General or otherwise, to use only one kind of telephone.

Now, the Chair would call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Post-Office and Post-Roads Committee, to the fact that this amendment is not put in as a limitation upon the use of the entire sum appropriated in this paragraph of $225,000. This limitation is merely a limitation upon the amount which the Postmaster-General may use for telephone services authorized by law, and this amendment simply says in effect, in order that this amount may be available, the Postmaster-General must refrain from saying to the postmaster that he must use one single telephone. The Chair, therefore, is of opinion that this amendment comes within the rule, and it is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of a part authorized by this paragraph for telephone services, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The question, therefore, is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard briefly in opposition to the amendment. I think the committee is fairly well familiar with the situation from the debate which immediately preceded the ruling of the Chair just made. There is no effort whatever made by the Post-Office Department to limit the use of any one particular telephone. It is true there are a number of telephone companies throughout the country and occasionally there are offices where these two companies compete with each other. The Department does insist that there should not be double service; that is to say, all telephone companies operating through any one office should not have the privilege of installing service, that one only should be sufficient. Now, I think a reading of the amendment by the Chair clearly shows (and I would like to have the resolution here if some one will hand it to me) that if we adopt this amendment it would mean a preference directly to the independent company.

I do not know how deeply interested the gentleman from Minnesota is. He seems to be very closely related to some information connected with the Minnesota company, but I do know in my own home city, where we have practically all of these companies represented, the independent company and the Bell Telephone Company both competing for the privilege of the installation of service, that the Bell Telephone Company had the service for a while. Subsequently it was changed, and to-day the independent company has the service. One of the letters I had read at the Clerk's desk shows that the contrary was the result recently in some of the cities, and in the city of St. Paul it is possible that somebody's toes have been tread upon in the change of service in that city. But it all illustrates this point, that in each instance the merits of the case are considered and taken into account. From the opportunities for lessening the price of the service, the extent of it in the local community, and as one factor, and one only, the long-distance connection, the Department determines which company shall have the service.

Now, let us read this amendment which the gentleman offered—and I call his special and careful attention to it as the champion of the people of Minnesota, whose telephones are in jeopardy by reason of this appropriation—to see whether or not out of the depths of his heart he can have any compassion for a competing company which perchance may invade that field and make overtures to the Department for installation of similar service:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for telephone service in any post-office where the postmaster is required or ordered by the Postmaster-General or otherwise to use another telephone service than that of the Bell Telephone Company, or any of the telephone companies connected with or controlled in whole or in part by said Bell Telephone Company.

Suppose, for illustration, that in the city of St. Paul the Bell Telephone Company for various reasons—contract price, facility, general terms of contract—which enter into such negotiation was regarded as a better service, taking all in all, than the independent company of the twin cities of Minnesota.

Then, the Postmaster-General having contracted for that, this resolution absolutely denies to the Department the right or authority to even consider the Bell Telephone Company as a competitor, and when it has once been removed it leaves the city company of Minneapolis and St. Paul in absolute control of that situation. Now, if the gentleman had made an overture for competition, he might have been justified in the remarks he has made. If he had said that no double service should be inaugurated, it not only would have been just, but would have been in the spirit of the present practice of the Department.

If he had said that the question of price and of local facilities should be considered, without regard to the factor of the long-distance connection, he would then have been within the bounds of propriety and common sense in this appropriation, but when the language which he has so craftily drawn here gives to the independent company of any city greater power than the Bell Telephone Company to-day has under the exercise of this authority he is disclosing the situation for which he stands sponsor, and I want to know if this committee is going to sit idly by and see that kind of an amendment upon the books in the interest of one class or company, in violation of the practice of the Department and the justice of the situation with reference to the expenditure, that the Postmaster-General may have authority to permit competition between any and all companies which exercise that line of service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] is in the right direction. Its purpose is to meet a condition—to meet post-office regulations. Under the present policy it is made possible in a city like Fort Wayne, Ind., where the Home phone people have thousands of subscribers to hundreds for the Bell phone, to exclude the Home people with their phones, a network in the community, and retain the Bell phone. The same occurs in the Indiana city of the gentleman [Mr. OVERSTREET], where the Bell phone, with hundreds of subscribers only, is preferred, though the Home Telephone Company has thousands of subscribers in that community.

It is no wonder that the Bell phone, with its years of high rates and poor service, should be driven from the field by the phone company of the community.

But the Department excludes the phones that give full and complete service to the communities in the vicinity of the post-office upon the bare pretext that long-distance service is monopolized by that service.

It is the purpose of Congress to serve the people, but how can this be done by cutting out that service that so largely serves the affected communities?

Long-distance service in the usual city is but seldom availed of, and the postmaster of the city can step over to the public station, and thus we yield to the people the service we appropriate for and that they pay for.

I do not understand that the amendment proposed does more than place the best service at the disposal of the postmaster and people concerned.

It relieves the post-office from the restrictions under which it seems to be laboring and opens up a system to secure justice and fair dealing. The amendment should carry.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the telephone service at the post-office in my city of St. Paul has been mentioned by the chairman of the Post-Office Committee as well as by my colleague, and it might be instructive to this committee to know just what was done and how the Post-Office Department has treated telephone matters there. I will preface my remarks by saying that I, in my own house and office, use the Bell telephone because I prefer it, so that I have no connection with and do not use the independent phone.

A year or more ago the Post-Office Department asked for bids for telephone service in the public building at St. Paul, a large Government building, having many offices in it. The Post-Office Department asked for bids for furnishing the telephones for that building and the postal stations.

The Bell telephone people were repeatedly asked to bid, but they refused to make any bids or proposals at that time, and the result was that the independent company was the only one which offered bids. Their bids were necessarily accepted, and they were fair, reasonable, and acceptable, and they installed the service. They spent about $1,500 or $2,000 in making a switch board and connections that were required, and they installed a first-class service for the post-office and for the public, but with which I had no connection, either with my office or house, so it was of no advantage to me. That continued until last October, when the postmaster at St. Paul received a peremptory order from the Postmaster-General that the service of the Twin City telephones be discontinued with notice of about a month, although this company had expended its money and had installed a service perfectly satisfactory to all concerned.

The postmaster at St. Paul notified the Post-Office Department that the service was satisfactory to that office and to the patrons of the office, and the patrons of the office thereupon petitioned the postmaster at St. Paul requesting that the independent service be retained. These letters all came before the Postmaster-General and the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and some time ago I performed the enormity of going myself and asking that these matters be investigated carefully by the Post-Office Department. I suppose I rendered myself open to all sorts of charges, but I did it. [Laughter.] The matter was then taken up and the independent telephone company was ordered out on the same theory as was stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that the Department was desirous of having a long-distance telephone connection with the post-office at St. Paul. Now, from my experience, and I have had considerable experience with post-office matters at St. Paul and with the Post-Office Department here, I doubt if there is any necessity of more than one communication a month between the general Department here and the local post-office at St. Paul.

I have no doubt that the patrons at St. Paul use that office five hundred times a day, and the patrons there seem to desire the local phone. For that reason I have strongly urged that the independent phones be retained, and the Postmaster-General has refused that request. Now, I shall not attempt to construe the amendment of my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], but I do say that this committee ought to limit the authority of the Postmaster-General so that he shall not have the arbitrary power to order systems in and systems out as he pleases without public advertisements or bids or giving the local postal authorities some voice in determining facilities given to the people. He ought to be compelled to give the people some right to reach their local post-office by the best possible facilities, and he has not done it in the case of the city of St. Paul.

Mr. BAKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I insist that debate is closed, and so move.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that debate be closed on this paragraph.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I understood that I was recognized before the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana had the floor to move that all debate be closed on this paragraph.

Mr. BAKER. I merely ask for two minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I insist on my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. OVERSTREET) there were—ayes 64, noes 25.

So the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HEPBURN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 196. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution No. 50.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses be authorized to correct the enrolled bill of the House (H. R. 9771) entitled "An act granting an increase of pension to Abram Claypool" by striking out the word "Illinois," in line 5 of said enrolled bill, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Indiana."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 36) to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mail.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 60.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print from the stereotype plates 2,000 copies each of the reports of the governors of Alaska, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma for 1903, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising and purchase of newspapers containing official advertisements contracted for under this appropriation at first and second class post-offices, $25,000.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as new paragraphs after line 16, page 12, after the word "dollars," the following:

"For compensation to seven assistant superintendents, salary and allowance division, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, $14,000.

"For per diem allowance for seven assistant superintendents, salary and allowance division, when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, and for other necessary expenses, $10,220."

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I will say that my purpose in offering this amendment is to incorporate in the bill a provision which has existed there since 1896. As long ago as the second Cleveland Administration the Postmaster-General strongly recommended the creation of the office of assistant superintendent——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Has not the gentleman got this speech of his mixed up with another one? Was it not 1901?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Oh, no; the recommendation in favor of the incorporation of this office was made many years ago. It was in the year 1900 that the recommendation was made, which was acted favorably upon by the House of Representatives, and I call the attention of the committee to the language used in the report of the First Assistant Postmaster-General in 1900, when he urged the enactment of the law creating these offices. He used this language:

I beg to renew urgently my former recommendation that five special agents be employed by the division of salaries and allowances—men of experience in the postal service—who are familiar with the inside workings of a post-office, who are capable of instructing postmasters as to proper methods to pursue in order to secure the best possible results from the clerical force employed, and who are also sufficiently familiar with real-estate values to enable them to investigate lease cases, change of sites, intelligently, etc.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The language that the gentleman just read asks for five, and his amendment calls for seven. I understood the gentleman to state to the committee that he followed the language.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. In the following year, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], it was found that five were not sufficient, and the number was increased to seven, and the language of the amendment which I have proposed is the exact language contained in the bill which was passed last year. Now, if I correctly understand the situation, it is this: I do not understand that the Post-Office Department has recommended this change. On the other hand, I understand that these assistant superintendents have been entirely satisfactory to the Post-Office Department, and I find in the hearings before the committee this year that the First Assistant Postmaster-General strongly urged the continuation of this recommendation.

I do find, however, that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, when he appeared before the committee, intimated that his Department could do this work.

Now, what is the situation? If you strike out the provision for these seven assistants, you practically place the entire inspection force under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. You place under him some 356 inspectors, who are not only to inspect his department, but are to inspect the departments of the First Assistant, the Second Assistant, and the Third Assistant, also. It strikes me that it is not good civil service to have every inspector employed in the Post-Office Department under one Assistant Postmaster-General, I care not whether he be the Fourth or the First or the Second or the Third. Here is an attempt to affect very seriously the status of these seven men charged with the expenditure or the supervision of the expenditure of something like $26,000,000, a sum larger than that expended for free delivery or free rural delivery. Yet we are called on to do this, not upon the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, not upon the recommendation of any Assistant Postmaster-General, unless it be the Fourth.

To my mind, Mr. Chairman, it is certainly a dangerous situation when you place every inspector under the control of a single department or a head of a single department. I should like to ask my friend the chairman of this committee why should not all the inspectors of the Post-Office Department be under the Postmaster-General, so that he may inspect each one of the four departments under his immediate supervision? Why should all the inspectors be placed under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General? I am not aware that there is anything in the functions of that particular bureau that entitles the head of it to the entire supervision of the inspection force. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment may be considered favorably and that it may be accepted by the committee in charge of this bill. I feel that it would be an error of judgment to strike out this important division, which has for the last four years been under the control of the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman's amendment, as I understand, does not change the salaries fixed by current law?

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. No, sir; there is no change as to salaries and no change as to expenses. The language is exactly the same as the language contained in the bill of last year.

Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SIBLEY. In all the other provisions for expenses of traveling agents or inspectors of the Post-Office Department we have used these terms:

Engaged in traveling on official business away from their homes or their official domicile or headquarters.

The amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts uses the language, "when actually engaged in traveling on official business." The amendment does not say "when they are away from their homes." The incorporation of the language I have read would make the proposition conform to the rest of the bill with reference to traveling expenses. I am heartily in favor of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I certainly do not object to the gentleman's suggestion. I sought to use the language used in the appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that I am heartily opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS], and I hope it may be considered by this committee on its merits and not as if it had connection with any proposition to do something that may reflect upon somebody in the Post-Office Department. I hope the House by this time fully understands that the report which was so much discussed here a few days since was not made by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, and I trust that this bill may not be considered in its items with reference to that opinion which once prevailed here.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I should like to ask the gentleman whether, in striking out the provision for the seven assistants and making no other provision for them, the effect was not to make an increase of eight inspectors coming directly under the Fourth Assistant?

Mr. COWHERD. I do not remember just what the increase was in the regular inspectors' force, but I know it was less than the amount asked for in that force for the regular inspection work.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And not on account of this action at all.

Mr. COWHERD. No; not on account of this action at all, the force authorized being less even than was asked for.

Now, if the House will bear with me a moment, I would like to state the facts in regard to the legislation that took out of the bill the inspectors of the First Assistant's division. That was comparatively new legislation. It had been in the bill for only a few years. The change, as has been suggested, was not recommended by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. PARKER. Does not the gentleman mean the assistant superintendents?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; the assistant superintendents who acted as inspectors. They were not called inspectors, but their business was inspection.

But, Mr. Chairman, when the First Assistant himself appeared at the hearings of the committee, before the Fourth Assistant had ever been there, we came to the conclusion, upon the testimony that was given by him, that there was absolutely no reason for the maintenance of those men on the pay rolls, and concluded then, before we had ever heard from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, that we were simply duplicating the work here and doubling the expense.

These are the facts: The business of these men is to inspect the offices on the question of increase of rent or location of post-offices. We found that not only could the general inspection force do that work, but that very frequently one of the regular inspectors would be in a city inspecting the post-office as to its expenses, etc., while one of these assistant superintendents would be traveling there from Washington at the expense of per diem, salary, etc., from the Government, to inspect the office with reference to the raising of rent or changing the location, and we discovered from the examination of both these gentlemen, the First Assistant and the Fourth Assistant, that we were simply duplicating work here; and the only contention anywhere made that had any effect was that in some cases they needed a man to go right away, and that they would have to apply to the general inspector's force for a man.

Upon investigation of that we found out that these questions of raising of rent or renewal of leases or removal of offices were practically invariably considered for months before they were disposed of, so that there was no necessity to have a special force of men to be called upon to attend to that particular business, and simply in the interest of good administration, in the interest of economy, and because he did not want two inspectors inspecting the same office at the same time at double cost we struck out this work and put it back where it had always been heretofore, with the regular inspectors' force, under whatever officer that inspectors' force might be, which is now the Fourth Assistant. I think, Mr. Chairman, the amendment should not prevail.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I heartily support the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS], and also, as stated by the last gentleman, on principle. Inspectors are not assistant superintendents and can not be.

Mr. COWHERD. But if the gentleman will permit, these assistant superintendents were inspectors.

Mr. PARKER. Not entirely. The assistant superintendent is a man who goes around, who belongs to the bureau of salary, allowance, and supplies. He goes to an office in an executive duty, just like a member of a general staff or a division officer; he goes there to find out what ought to be done. He is an adviser for executive management; he advises that a man may be added or ought to be added here. He advises that a man ought to be lopped off there; he advises that a rent should be taken in a certain way; that so much should be paid for the rent of a post-office. He advises about the supplies of that post-office. He is executive. That is his occupation.

Now, the inspector is an entirely different man. He does not belong to the bureau of allowance and supplies; he belongs to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's inspecting force. He belongs to the inspector-general's department and not to the executive department. He goes from post-office to post-office, not to recommend what shall be done rightly, but to point out what has been done wrongly. He goes in without notice; he takes up the accounts of the postmaster, he finds out whether anything has gone wrong and reports, so that it shall be remedied with a strong hand, just as the inspector does in the Army.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. Am I right?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to ask you a question.

Mr. PARKER. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Do you believe there ought to be any more of these inspectors appointed under this bill than are now in the service?

Mr. PARKER. I say that the assistant superintendent has duties which are not essentially inspector's duties.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask the gentleman if he insists upon authorizing two additional assistants?

Mr. PARKER. I do not know anything about how many inspectors you have.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well——

Mr. PARKER. The amendment I support is an amendment which is taken from the estimates, and I know no more about it than the estimates state.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Only five of these assistants are now in the service.

Mr. PARKER. Then what in that regard——

Mr. OVERSTREET. But does not the gentleman think that in all fairness to his argument he ought to suggest such an amendment?

Mr. PARKER. I think that the gentleman in fairness to my argument can only go by what is in the estimates. I do not know what number are in office now; I supposed the estimates represented what men were there.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Are you in favor of all the estimates?

Mr. PARKER. I was in favor of that particular estimate.

Mr. OVERSTREET. For any special reason except that given in the estimates?

Mr. PARKER. Yes; I had a special reason for this. I wish the gentleman would let me finish one sentence. I was just coming to the argument. I say it is a different thing to superintend than to inspect. If you make the inspector an executive officer, who is going to inspect him?

The inspector is intended to find out what is wrong. He should be in a different department from the man who is to decide what is right and is to administer the office. I know of some of these assistant superintendents, not personally, but I have heard of their work. I know they live in different parts of the country, and that they exercise a supervising and advising power over the offices in the different parts of the country. They are under the management of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and they assist and advise as an ordinary member of the staff will do. But I say that the inspector, who is under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, whose duty is to find out what is wrong, can not safely be put in charge of doing that work, because then he would be inspecting himself, and the Government would have lost the benefit of the sensible executive on the one side and the vigilant detective on the other. The two departments must be separate, and the inspector can not do the work now done by these assistant superintendents.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "of the Post-Office Department" and insert after the word "business" the word "official;" so that the amendment will read: "When actually traveling on official business;" and insert after the word "business" the words "away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters."

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I will accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be incorporated in the pending amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "five." There are now but five such assistants in the service. The law of last year authorizes seven, but two of the seven are not now in the service, as I am informed. I think the committee would not care to enlarge that service.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I understand there are but five of them. I had assumed, when I offered the amendment, there were seven. I accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be incorporated in the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that the amount appropriated may be reduced to conform with the number.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that that amendment may be incorporated in the pending amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendment to the pending amendment will——

Mr. OVERSTREET. By unanimous consent I desire that the amount shall be made $5,000 for per diem and $10,000 for salaries.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. These figures are to be changed according to the reduction made in the number?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, of course, the figure as to salary would be known, being five times $2,000; but as to the per diem, I ask to limit the per diem to $5,000 a year. You do not want to make it $4 a day for every day of the year.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. They would be traveling away on business.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is the usual amount. That is practically the usual amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he favors this amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not yet favored it. I wanted the committee to understand it.

Mr. COWHERD. I understood the gentleman spoke of cutting it down.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I must concede there is doubt as to the wisdom of giving them all these assistants. I believe that they could be dispensed with, but because of the doubt I have not strenuously resisted the amendment. I wish, however, to amend the amendment. And in fairness to the service I feel that the committee ought not to be misled by the present law providing for seven where there are only five in the service. It is my intention, however, to vote against the amendment.

Mr. SIBLEY. I want to say that if I understood the gentleman from New Jersey properly, he holds that the 5 assistant superintendents are really inspectors to inspect the other 356 inspectors. I caught that to be his language, practically or substantially. If that is the case I am sure I shall vote for the amendment, and hope it will prevail.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to ask my friend from Pennsylvania, as he is on the Post-Office Committee, if he holds that these assistant superintendents are inspectors to inspect the inspectors?

Mr. SIBLEY. In view of the statute creating this office, which was read from by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would not undertake clearly to state what are their duties.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my friend if it is not a fact the only thing they have ever done has been to go around the towns and investigate the question of the location of post-offices and rent; that that is practically all?

Mr. SIBLEY. Well, I am not familiar with all that they have done.

Mr. COWHERD. Which has been done by the regular inspector's force always before they were put on, and can be done now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If it is in order, I would like to ask to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first state that the point of order was raised against the amendment, but the committee having by unanimous consent twice amended the amendment, the Chair holds that the point of order has been withdrawn and the question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the point of order was actually withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was withdrawn by the gentleman from South Carolina. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment, and the Chair would like to ask that gentlemen who incorporated amendments into the amendment would follow the Clerk with care, so as to see that the amendment when put to the committee conforms to the alterations which have been actually made.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to five assistant superintendents, salary and allowance division, at the rate of $2,000 per annum, $10,000.

For per diem allowance for five assistant superintendents, salary and allowance division, when actually traveling on official business away from their home, their official domicile, and their headquarters at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, and for other necessary expenses, $5,000.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. Division.

The committee accordingly divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 65.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts calls for tellers. The gentleman from Indiana and——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the Chair has not yet determined whether tellers should be ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state the Chair has the right to order tellers without putting the motion. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Massachusetts will take their places as tellers.

The question was again taken; and the tellers announced that there were—ayes 25, noes 67.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I would like to know the proper place in this bill at which I can offer an amendment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would announce the pending vote first. On this question the ayes are 25 and the noes 67, and the amendment is not agreed to. The gentleman from Pennsylvania rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. At the proper time, if the Chair will indicate the proper time to me, I desire to make a motion to insert in this bill at the proper place the paragraphs of the bill providing for the free-delivery service and the rural free-delivery service. I understand we have read the bill down to and including line 16, on page 12. I am not quite certain whether by examination of the bill of last year those two services were not provided for in the bill at this particular place; it may be the section below. I will state more plainly: They may have followed the next section; and I ask the Chair for advice, if it is a proper question to ask.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hardly thinks that this is a proper parliamentary inquiry, but it would be ruled upon by the Chair whenever the amendment should be offered if any point is made against it.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well, of course, I do not want to compromise the Chair; I only want to be well advised; and as the word of the Chair is the law of the committee, I asked his advice in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state the bill is now being read and is open to any amendment——

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I can not hear the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill is now being read for all amendments which Members desire to submit, and as the Chair understands his functions they are purely official, and the Chair does not desire to take any more difficulties than the rules impose upon him.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I have no desire to add to the many duties of the Chair, and that I may not lose the opportunity I will offer it right along until we do hit the proper place. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to this bill to insert at this place all the provisions in this bill found on pages 23, 24, 25, and 26, down to section 2, providing for what is known as the "free-delivery service" and the "rural free-delivery service."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that according to the rules of the House the amendment which the gentleman refers to should be sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he has his motion in writing?

The CHAIRMAN. That was the suggestion which the Chair just made. The Chair will state the motion as the Chair understands it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to insert in the bill, after paragraph following line 16, page 12, is completed, that which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. May I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that when we finish reading the bill——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to lose the privilege of making a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order to the amendment.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. After the bill is read through, the amendment which the gentleman offers to this portion of the bill, it seems to me will be the proper time to move for the transposition.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I would adopt the gentleman's suggestion if it should be the wish of the committee that we pass through the bill until we come regularly to these two sections, but I did not want to miss the opportunity——

Mr. MANN. You will get left if you do. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes; and therefore I will hold on to the string unless it is the unanimous wish of the House that I let go at this time.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me say that I am in favor of the gentleman's proposition, but I want it distinctly stated that it goes back to the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is the very purpose for which I offer this amendment now.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. But do you say so in the amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Before the point of order is taken, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to hear the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was what I was about to say, that this is not the point for a colloquy between two gentlemen on the committee. Let the amendment be read, and then we can consider it intelligently.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Free-delivery service: For pay of letter carriers in offices already established, and for substitute letter carriers, and for temporary carriers at summer resorts, holiday, election, and emergency service, $20,250,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading may be dispensed with, with the understanding that it is the identical language in the bill at a subsequent point relating to rural free delivery and the free-delivery service.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. BAKER. I object; I want to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York objects, and the Clerk will proceed.

The Clerk continued the reading, as follows:

For pay of letter carriers in new offices entitled to free-delivery service under existing law, $110,000.

For horse-hire allowance, $700,000.

For car fare and bicycle allowance, $300,000.

For compensation to twenty-two mechanics, at not exceeding $900 each, $19,800.

For marine postal service, Detroit, Mich., $4,500: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, enter into contract for such marine postal service for a period not exceeding five years at an annual rate not to exceed $4,500.

For all other incidental expenses, including letter boxes, package boxes, posts, furniture, satchels, and straps, $300,000.

For car fare for special-delivery messengers in emergent cases, $10,000.

For fees to special-delivery messengers, $900,000.

Rural free-delivery service: For compensation to six division superintendents of rural free-delivery service at $2,400 each, $14,400.

For compensation to twenty-five rural agents at $1,600 each; fifteen rural agents at $1,500 each; fifteen rural agents at $1,400 each; nineteen rural agents at $1,300 each; sixty-five rural agents at $1,200 each, and ten rural agents at $1,000 each, $196,200.

On and after July 1, 1904, special agents in charge of divisions of the rural free-delivery service shall be known and designated as division superintendents of rural free-delivery service; and special agents and route inspectors of such service shall be known and designated as rural agents.

For per diem allowance for seventy-four rural agents in the field when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $4 per day, and for other necessary official expenses, $88,800.

For per diem allowance for seventy-five rural agents in the field when actually traveling on business of the Post-Office Department, at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster-General, not to exceed $3 per day, and for other necessary official expenses, $67,500.

For incidental and other necessary official expenses of division superintendents and rural agents, livery hire, $30,000.

For compensation to clerks at division headquarters: Twelve clerks, at $1,200 each; ten clerks, at $1,100 each; ten clerks, at $1,000 each; eight clerks, at $900 each, and six clerks, at $700 each, $46,800.

For pay of letter carriers and clerks in charge of substations of rural free-delivery service, $20,180,000: Provided, That not exceeding $12,500 of the amount hereby appropriated may be used for compensation of clerks in charge of substations. On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers; and on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind for any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes, whenever the same shall not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

For incidental expenses, including letter boxes, furniture, satchels, straps, badges, and the making of maps for use in the rural free-delivery service, etc., $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have already made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has completed reading the amendment and the gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order, and the Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The first point I make, Mr. Chairman, is that it is not germane, because that part of the bill which is sought to be transferred from one section to the other has not been reached.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that this amendment is not germane. Will the discussion of that proposition, if the Chair shall decide that it is germane, prevent me from making a point of order for other reasons?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have said that that was the first point. I do not pretend to limit it to that. I quite agree with the gentleman that there are other reasons.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he considers the better practice for all points of order to be made at one time. The Chair thinks that if one makes the point of order against an amendment which should be overruled that other gentlemen have the right to raise points of order against the pending amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I did not intend, Mr. Chairman, to waive other points by saying that my first point was that it was not germane. I insist, for various reasons, that the point is well taken. We are now proceeding under the five-minute rule, under the rules of debate of the House, and reading the bill at page 12; and the motion is made to transfer provisions from page 20 or 26 to page 12. It is a general rule, I understand, which requires a motion to be directed to the part of the bill under consideration. Otherwise confusion would obtain, misunderstandings would arise as to what should probably come next if the motion could be made to transfer the last pages of the bill to the third page, when some member might be interested in the last page and not in the third. That would work injustice to Members.

Another reason for the point of order is that it is contrary to existing law, and therefore new legislation. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that the House or the Committee of the Whole has full power to arrange a bill in any way that it sees fit. It could take alternate sections and rearrange the bill in its entirety. Under that possibility this amendment might now be in order if there were no other points of order to which it would be obnoxious. But, Mr. Chairman, in the regular orderly business of the House the practice has always obtained to consider the bills in a systematic way. The first effort at system is to be found in the estimates of the Department where the bill is an appropriation bill. These estimates come to this body in the order in which they have been arranged in the bill now before the committee.

To change that may not be directly in opposition to existing law, because there may be no direct statute fixing the order of estimates, but it is an indirect violation of it. In the third place, Mr. Chairman, there is no law anywhere which defines the duties of the various Assistant Postmasters-General. The only law under which their duties are prescribed is the law relative to the duties of the Postmaster-General himself, who is authorized by the law to regulate his entire Department. I call the attention of the Chair to the first law relative to the duties of the chiefs of Departments, which was passed July 27, 1789, being Revised Statutes, 161, reading as follows:

SEC. 161. The head of each Department is authorized to prescribe regulations, not inconsistent with law, for the government of his Department, the conduct of its officers and clerks, the distribution and performance of its business, and the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it.

That is the only law upon the statute books of this country relative to the management of any of the great Departments by their heads, except such as is found in the statutes relative to the duties of the various Cabinet officers.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield for a question.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I understand there is a point of order pending, and I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is speaking to the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly, I am speaking to the point of order. The point of order is that this amendment is contrary to existing law, and I am reading existing law. On May 8, 1794, five years later (Rev. Stat., 388), an article was passed which reads as follows:

SEC. 388. There shall be at the seat of government an Executive Department to be known as the Post-Office Department, and a Postmaster-General, who shall be the head thereof, and who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who may be removed in the same manner; and the term of the Postmaster-General shall be for and during the term of the President by whom he is appointed, and for one month thereafter, unless sooner removed.

The first statute relative to the appointment of any assistant to the Postmaster-General was in 1789, when the Postmaster-General himself was authorized by law to appoint a First Assistant Postmaster-General at a salary of $1,000. There were no duties of the assistant then prescribed in that statute. Later statutes increased the salary, but did not incorporate into law any instructions as to the duties of that assistant.

No statute or appropriation bill which through the years has carried authorizations for the Second, Third, and Fourth Assistant Postmasters-General has contained any provisions of law giving instructions as to their duties or taking away from the Postmaster-General the authority contained in the Revised Statutes, 161, passed July 27, 1789. Now, this amendment is out of order because it is absolutely futile. It accomplishes nothing. I submit that any amendment which does not accomplish any purpose is not worthy of the time of the committee to consider it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether the law is the same now as it was a year ago, when the appropriation bill passed the House?

Mr. OVERSTREET. What law?

Mr. MANN. Existing law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. In reference to what I have just been speaking?

Mr. MANN. Yes; if it was in order a year ago to put this appropriation item under the First Assistant Postmaster-General, what change has there been in the law to now make it out of order? I ask merely for information.

Mr. OVERSTREET. In the first place, the bills have always been arranged in the order of the estimates which have come to the Congress.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, of course, would not say that that was law at all?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, no; not at all. There is no law upon which the arrangement of the bill is based.

Mr. MANN. Then is it not in order for the House or the committee, if it can make an appropriation at all, to put it in at any place it pleases?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I say that, under the general authority of a Committee of the Whole to arrange or rearrange its bill in any form it pleases, it probably could do it. I stated a while ago, if the gentleman will recall, that under that authority in all probability the committee could rearrange all of the sections alternately and still it would not make any difference in the expenditure.

Mr. MANN. If this item should be inserted in the bill under the head of the First Assistant Postmaster-General instead of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, would the Postmaster-General himself have authority under the existing law to make an order on the 1st day of July transferring this service over to the First Assistant?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Absolutely, and there would be no law which would be violated by him if he paid no attention to it.

Mr. MANN. He would have the same authority this year as he had last year.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly; he could transfer it just as he chose. The transfer in an appropriation bill from one page to another of an item simply by the transfer carries with it no additional duties to the Postmaster-General with reference to the methods of the expenditure of that item.

Mr. MANN. Last year we made an appropriation for rural free delivery under the head of "The First Assistant Postmaster-General." I suppose by authority of law, or at least by authority of something, that service was transferred about the time the appropriation law went into effect, at the beginning of the fiscal year, from the First Assistant to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. And the transfer will be made temporarily.

Mr. MANN. I do not know anything about the appointment being temporary, but some authority——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Unquestionably, so far as the law is concerned, the gentleman is quite right; it is the same to-day that it was a year ago.

Mr. MANN. But has not the House the same authority that it had a year ago?

Mr. OVERSTREET. What I stated was that the mere transfer of this particular language from page 26 or 27 to page 12, 13, or 14 does not affect the method of the expenditure of the appropriation. The appropriation will be expended in the same way under existing law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Would the transposition of the language abrogate or in any respect affect the existing order of the Postmaster-General transferring this business to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Absolutely not, in my judgment. Last year the item of appropriation for free delivery and for rural delivery came as a part of the bill known as that part relating to the First Assistant Postmaster-General. Since that date, under the authority of law, the Postmaster-General by an official order has transferred those two particular branches of the service to another department under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. He clearly had that authority of law, and he has now the authority of law to transfer those same divisions back where they were a year ago, or he can give them still another position in the Department. That authority is under the law that I have read, which gives him clearly the authority to manage that Department in an administrative way according to the law of 1789, which has neither been repealed nor modified.

If, therefore, Mr. Chairman, there had been no further shifting of these two positions to another Assistant Postmaster-General, the estimates sent to the House through the Secretary of the Treasury would have been in the same order that they were a year ago, and in all probability, I presume, as a matter of fact they would have appeared in the appropriation bill in the same systematic arrangement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the headings in the appropriation bill, fixing the relative divisions of the Department—First Assistant, Second Assistant, etc.—are merely for the purpose of convenience, like the headings of chapters. They are not legislation, they are purely in the nature of a systematic and orderly method of calling to the attention of the committee the arrangement of the appropriations which are to be expended for the administration of the service, the arrangemant obtaining in the Department at the time the bill was under consideration.

Therefore I stated that it would be futile to make the change, because, I take it, the gentleman from Pennsylvania and those who may favor his amendment have no thought of merely confusing the bill. They have no disposition to mix up or confuse the bill simply for that purpose. Their purpose evidently is to transfer to the First Assistant Postmaster-General certain divisions of the Department not now under his specific control.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. That is the object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just one more point and I shall conclude. This amendment, in my judgment, is subject to a point of order because it interferes with the proper consideration of the bill itself.

This is an amendment seeking to transpose certain matter from one section of the bill to another, and if carried it would clearly interfere with the offering of other amendments to those parts of the bill which have been transferred. It would take away from the committee the opportunity to consider the bill in that orderly way which would obtain under the arrangement which has come to the House from the Secretary of the Treasury in his estimates. Suppose this amendment should prevail. We would thereby cut off all but one other amendment of the pages sought to be transferred.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Did not the last appropriation bill carry this appropriation just where the amendment now proposes to place it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I presume it did.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then how can it be against the law to do the same thing now? A part of the point of order, as I understood, is that this transposition is against the law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then what other ground is there for the point of order? Has not the House the right to transpose these sections as they see fit?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Possibly; but I say that if in making this transposition the orderly proceeding upon the bill is interfered with and confusion introduced, then it would not be a proper method of procedure.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One other question: Was not this transfer made by the Postmaster-General, and distinctly stated to be temporary?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not sure about that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I am.

Mr. OVERSTREET. He has, in my judgment, clear authority, whether he said this transfer should be temporary or not, to make the transfer every week in the year.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Not if we put the matter by law under the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. SNOOK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. I desire to make a further point of order, one which possibly may not have been covered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will suspend until the Chair answers the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK].

Mr. SNOOK. If the Chair should hold that the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana was not well taken as against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, would it then be in order to raise the point of order against any particular part of the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the gentleman making the point of order should, according to the best usage, include all the reasons for making his point of order, but that other gentlemen could make other points of order if the Chair overruled the point first made.

Mr. SNOOK. Other gentlemen could make them.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, although the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] has not yet been disposed of, I desire to make a point of order on a portion of the amendment which is printed in the original bill, on page 26, beginning in line 4 with the word "and." I make the point of order on that part of the amendment which reads:

And on and after said date said carriers shall not solicit business or receive orders of any kind for any person, firm, or corporation, and shall not, during their hours of employment, carry any merchandise for hire: Provided, That said carriers may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons residing upon their respective routes, whenever the same shall not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duties, and under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

I make the point that it is contrary to existing law and is new legislation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield for a moment, to enable me to make another point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MANN. I have made my point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish to make an additional point of order, and I will not discuss it. I make the point of order against the part on page 25, line 25, beginning with the words "on and after July 1," down to the place where the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes his point of order. My point of order is against the words:

On and after July 1, 1904, letter carriers of the rural free-delivery service shall receive a salary not exceeding $720 per annum, and no other or further allowance or salary shall be made to said carriers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I do not, provided the Chair is with me. If not, I should like to have a chance to discuss the points of order as I understand them.

I am pleased with the "futility" part of the argument made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], that exhibited in his effort of twenty minutes to show the futility of the motion. I believe it to be the privilege of any Member, if he sees fit, to rise in his place and offer an amendment. Whether or not it is futile is a matter to be considered by the committee and not for the Chair to decide.

I do not know who transferred these two departments to the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, and, furthermore, I do not care. I do know that heretofore they have been a part of this bill. I further know, and it does not require us to have minds as long as a railroad or as wide as a barn door to understand, that this has been for years a part of this appropriation bill and that there is some place in this bill where these two provisions belong.

If they do not belong here they belong somewhere, and it was for the purpose of finding that somewhere that I first made my inquiry of the Chair, and the Chair would not answer. It may be that they belong in the next section; but lest I might lose my place, as I have already said, I have offered them here.

They are germane, because they do pertain to the business of the Post-Office Department. They are germane, because they not only belong to the Post-Office Department, but they do provide in an orderly way for the transaction of the business of that Department. Furthermore, they belong properly to the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, which is now being considered.

Again, I may not have offered these two sections at the proper place, and the Chair may so decide, and to that I shall take no exception, because I warn the Chair that I will offer them again at the proper place, and shall continue to offer them until I find the particular hole in which I can put this peg.

Mr. Chairman, if there is anything well understood in this House it is this, that the Post-Office Department does not make law for the country, yet the chairman of this committee makes the startling proposition to us that the Post-Office Department can make this bill or arrange it as it pleases, and furthermore that the committee can not make it or arrange it as it pleases. The situation has gone as far as it dare go in this country. This is not the business of the executive, but it is of the legislative branch of the Government. I submit that the arrangement of this bill belongs to this House. It may have been that the Postmaster-General saw fit, under the estimates of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's office, to submit these two provisions for the place seen in the bill. Does the gentleman from Indiana, who argued this point of order, pretend for one minute that that commits this House upon the arrangement of this bill? Furthermore, does he pretend to say that because the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads saw fit to adopt the recommendation of the Post-Office Department this amendment can not be made?

Mr. Chairman, if you have any doubt in your mind, let me say that in pursuance of a regulation made by the Postmaster-General, and for some purpose that is not here disclosed, we are asked, like vassals with chains around our necks, to submit to the present arrangement of the bill. I have done that for the last time. It has pleased somebody on some occasion to make provision in these laws of the Post-Office Department distinctly placing this in the service under the First Assistant Postmaster-General. That action is to be found in what is known as the "Postal Laws and Regulations," on page 22, section 17.

Mr. Chairman, conceding that it belongs to the Postmaster-General to assign the business of his Department to suit himself; conceding that the act of Congress to which the gentleman has referred authorizes him to make that assignment, this House has, from time to time, provided for such assignment, which has passed into a regulation. I do not concede, but I do not propose to argue it to you, and I desire the gentleman from Indiana shall understand, that the Postmaster-General has any authority to make this transfer under the law. His authority has not been shown. Its purpose is not manifest here, and I submit to the Chair it should be known. I asked for the hearing, and it was said that none were printed. All we know is that last year in this particular place we appropriated for these two departments under one bureau, and now they are transferred to another bureau.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. THAYER. I do not know but what I am in favor of the gentleman's motion; but I want to ask this: What advantage is it going to be to put this under the First rather than under the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I would like to be as respectful to the gentleman from Massachusetts as possible, but I am, in the best way I am able, giving my reasons for my judgment.

Mr. THAYER. Why not now?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I am attempting to confine my remarks to the point of order. Mr. Chairman, do you for one moment think this changes existing law? Because if it does, I give the gentleman warning, when we reach these two paragraphs elsewhere, that they will go out of the bill if I am able to get on my feet and make the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a word on the point of order. I have little doubt that there are certain paragraphs and provisos in the amendment that are new legislation. Now, I understand that if an amendment is offered containing provisions which are obnoxious to the rules of the House a point of order will be sustained against the entire amendment. So it seems to me that this amendment will have to go out on the point of order upon that principle. But in relation to the question of the rearrangement of the paragraphs I want to submit this thought: There is no doubt that the Committee of the Whole House has power to rearrange the paragraphs and sections of a bill upon a proper motion.

But this is not a motion to rearrange the paragraphs and sections of the bill. This proposition comes in the way of an amendment. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the matter read as an amendment to the bill at this particular point, and if it shall be adopted the bill will still contain the identical matter at another place. So, if the Chair pleases, this is not a proper motion to rearrange the paragraphs of the bill. But since the gentleman has offered matter that is regularly in the bill and part of its text it is a meaningless amendment, void because it accomplishes no purpose, and is therefore open to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment which has been reported by the Clerk, following line 16, page 12, of the bill. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to amend by adding what is conceded is the language now in the draft of the bill before the House contained on page 23, from line 5 down to and including line 16 on page 26 of the bill. To this amendment the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] makes the point of order, first, that the amendment is not germane; second, that it contains new legislation, and, third, that in parts it is contrary to existing law. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has also made the point of order against a certain paragraph in the amendment.

Now, the Chair wishes to have it clearly understood in the first place that this amendment, left as it is before the committee, is an entirety, and any point of order sustained against any part of the amendment would of course throw out the entire amendment.

First, as to the question as to its being germane. The Chair understands that it is in the power of the House to make the artificial arrangement of a bill, and the Chair does not think that the transfer of what happens to be in a part of the bill which has not been yet read to a part of the bill which is now under consideration necessarily raises the question of its germaneness. The question of the amendment being germane is raised as a new and independent question when the amendment is offered. Now, as to this amendment being germane at this time, the Chair would be constrained to hold that it is germane to this part of the bill, unless it can be conclusively shown to the Chair that there is some other part of the bill to which the amendment preeminently belongs.

Now, the Chair is not convinced that there is any other part of the bill to which this amendment applies in preference to this part of the bill. The Chair therefore holds that the amendment at this point is germane. In making this ruling, however, the Chair wishes to be distinctly understood as not considering that this amendment changes the discretion in any way of the Postmaster-General in reference to the expenditure of funds appropriated for his Department. The law prescribes that the funds appropriated for the Post-Office Department shall be expended and accounted for by the Postmaster-General, and the Chair is of opinion that it is a matter of indifference in what part of this appropriation bill an item of appropriation occurs so far as the discretion rested in the Postmaster-General is concerned. It is very clear from the points of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Illinois that this amendment, regarded as an entirety, changes the existing law and contains new legislation.

The Chair has looked through the amendment hurriedly, but in line 22, on page 23 of the bill, the words "five years" seems to be changed from "ten years." The first two words in line 1 of page 25, together with the last words of page 24, reading "in the field" seem by reference to the present law to be new legislation, and the parts of the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Indiana, beginning at the bottom of page 25, and the parts referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, at the top of page 26, are new legislation or change of existing law, and without going into any further detail as to the number of instances in which the pending amendment changes existing law, it is very clear to the Chair that the amendment does contain new legislation, does change existing law, and the Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend this bill by adding at the point to which the bill has now been read, at the end of line 16, on page 12, the following paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 16, page 12, insert the following:

"Free-delivery service: For pay of letter carriers in offices already established, and for substitute letter carriers, and for temporary carriers at summer resorts, holiday, election, and emergency service, $20,250,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate under the ruling of the Chair that——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. He has just stated it was germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that debate had begun on the amendment, and the point comes a little late.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I thought the gentleman from Indiana rose to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Under those circumstances, the Chair will understand the point of order has been reserved.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman reserves the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes, sir.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would rather the point of order be first disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. STAFFORD. That it is not germane, as the carrier force provided for by the amendment is at present under the direction of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, of which fact the Chair will take cognizance.

The CHAIRMAN. In answer to that the Chair will state in accordance with the law as read by the gentleman from Indiana the Postmaster-General, even while we are discussing this paragraph, might by departmental order make the change. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I thought I had the floor pending the decision of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana was recognized prior to the gentleman from California, who will be recognized later when the gentleman from Indiana has completed his statement.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, now let us get the concrete facts that are before us. We are endeavoring to provide in an appropriation bill for the administration of the Post-Office Department. It embodies a great many different and varied items.

The Department itself, being one of the great divisions of the Government service, must necessarily systematize its own work. Under authority of law the Postmaster-General arranges that system under which he can make a proper administration of the service. If you should transfer this particular item or any other item from one portion of the bill now under consideration to another portion of the bill, it would not interfere with nor take away from the Postmaster-General any authority of law which he now enjoys in the administration of that service. The mere fact that in the arrangement of this bill it is begun with the heading "Office of First Assistant Postmaster-General," and there follow those divisions of the service which are now under that Assistant, would not interfere with the Postmaster-General continuing the administration of that service by limiting the expenditure of the money for the items in the bill following the title of First Assistant through any other Assistant's office.

Now, what has it accomplished when it has done that? You are starting in here, gentlemen, and in a manner transferring a number of items covering several pages—from page 23 and following over to page 12 and following—and what good does it do, gentlemen? I think I have the right to assume that gentlemen on this floor are swayed by motives of business in following legislation in an orderly way. It may be possible that some have antagonisms toward one or another of these officials in the Department; it may be that disappointments have interfered with the interchange of friendly feeling; but when you come to legislating here, are you to be controlled and swayed by those conditions?

Suppose we assume that the Postmaster-General to-day is authorized to transfer any part of his service to another branch or division of his Department, and expend the money appropriated by Congress under these divisions as you think may be arranged under his Office, what good will it do, gentlemen, to seek to show temper or choler or spite work, if you please, by such a change in arrangement in the appropriation bill, which would be nothing more nor less than the mere change of language from one page to another, without in any way, manner, or form interfering with the change of administration of that service?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I just make a suggestion to the gentleman?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am in sympathy with the gentleman from Indiana and with his suggestion. We are now, as I understand it, under the rule in the five-minute debate for the purpose of amendment. Now, then, an amendment is something which either adds to a bill or takes something from it. This proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in any proper sense of the word an amendment to the bill. Therefore it is not in order under the rule by which the gentleman from Pennsylvania asked for five minutes on an amendment.

Mr. THAYER. Is not a change in the arrangement of the bill as much an amendment as anything?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not at all. The language of the proposed amendment is already in the bill, and it does not amend the bill in any particular. It does not change the substance, it does not change the purport, it does not change its phraseology, and it does not change its effect.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin, but I felt that the Chair did not agree with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that his time may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. BAKER. I object.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Suppose that instead of a motion to transfer a paragraph the gentleman had made a motion to change the paging, and instead of numbering the pages from 1 to 28 he had numbered them 1, 3, 5, 7, and used only the odd numbers. That would not have interferred with the administration of the service, nor would it have changed in any particular the purpose of the House in making its several appropriations. I think gentlemen are going to decide this on its merits, and I want to call attention to the fact that if this motion is carried then, I assume, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will move to transpose the next item.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I certainly will.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There are twenty or more paragraphs incorporated in the amendment which the gentleman had read at the Clerk's desk. Is that the way gentlemen of this House seek to legislate? Is that such an orderly method of procedure as they believe to be proper, to make a motion to transfer from page 23 over to another page one item, and then debate that and then follow it with nineteen other motions, when you have not changed a syllable of the language or put a limitation on appropriation or reduced a single item?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have such confidence in the committee failing to approve this amendment that I shall not intrench upon the patience of the House with an extended discussion. I want to say, however, that with these two divisions, free delivery and rural delivery, taken from the First Assistant and given to the Fourth Assistant, it still leaves the department of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, the greatest department in the service in point of authority and importance, in the control of expenditures of appropriations.

There may be criticism of one department or division as against another, but when you come to analyze the several four divisions into which the Post-Office Department is now divided under the present arrangement of that service the First Assistant Postmaster-General controls absolutely all of the postmasters of the country. The Fourth Assistant's office is purely and simply a bookkeeping office, so far as it has to do with postmasters. The expenditures for salaries for clerks, for furniture, for rent of all of the post-offices, of whatever grade, are still under the First Assistant's office, notwithstanding this transfer.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks there is any question, if this amendment should prevail, that the Postmaster-General, having heard this discussion, would put the rural delivery under the First Assistant rather than under the Fourth? The gentleman said it was futile to enact this legislation. Does the gentleman not believe that if this amendment prevails that the department will come under the First Assistant as much as if it was written in it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know. I assume and believe that any Postmaster-General would undertake to administer the Department for the best interests of the service, and whatever the arrangement would be as to that he would endeavor to follow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be reported. I was promised recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out of lines 8 and 9, page 23, the words "twenty million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and substitute the following:

"Twenty-three million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for said purpose unless in the use thereof the carriers hereinafter mentioned shall be paid salaries as follows during the year beginning July 1, 1904, viz: In all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more, carriers who have served more than three years, $1,200 per annum; in all cities containing a population of less than 75,000, carriers who have served more than two years, $1,000 per annum."

Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. COWHERD rose.

Mr. COWHERD. Do I understand the gentleman from Indiana is going to make the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was about to make the point of order. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order as to that amendment.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California will proceed.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the amendment I have offered is not subject to a point of order. It has been so carefully framed as to bring it easily within the ruling made by the Chairman of this commitee concerning the New York postal-station matter.

The amendment does not alter existing law, since it is purely a direction as to what shall be done with an appropriation no existing law obliges the Congress to make, an appropriation the Congress can make or can decline to make, and which it can make unconditionally or bound by any condition within its will to impose.

The amendment comes as an example of the familiar practice of placing a limitation on an appropriation, and the precedents supporting it are so numerous and well settled as to make extended argument needless. I content myself with citing the latest ruling, the one just mentioned, and the clear-cut declarations made in support of that ruling, to the effect that the practice of the House of Representatives as to proposals like the one now under consideration is so well established as to be beyond the domain of discussion.

I hope, however, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] will not insist on the point of order. I say to him that the amendment embodies a reasonable request from the letter carriers of the cities affected by the appropriation—a request for a moderate increase of their compensation—and I should be glad to feel that he had refrained from opposing the granting of their proper proposal for an increase of salary.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I merely call the attention of the Chair to this difference between the ruling to which the gentleman from California has referred and the amendment offered by him. In the case of the amendment offered by me relative to the rental of certain property in New York for post-office purposes there was no law limiting the question of the method of such appropriation excepting what is known as "appropriation-bill law." There is a statute to-day fixing the salaries of letter carriers and this cleary changes that law. Therefore, it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] should be in order and should prevail, I would like to ask the Chair if it would not result in this being the condition: That the Postmaster-General could not pay any salary to a letter carrier unless he violated the law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, just for the purpose of finding out the parliamentary status, I would like to direct the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to his own amendment on the post-office appropriation, which itself provided that no portion of the rent money should be expended unless the Postmaster-General should do an illegal act, because under the law as it now stands, if this appropriation becomes a law, the Postmaster-General can not rent a building for fifty years absolutely without authority, and yet that item in the bill is made dependent upon his doing that illegal act.

Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] proposes to make this appropriation dependent on the Postmaster-General doing an illegal act. I think myself it is time for the Chair to call a halt upon limitations which provide that appropriations which are made shall not be expended unless the officer to expend them violates the existing law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is true that the salaries of letter carriers are fixed by existing statute, but there is no requirement that Congress shall appropriate salaries for letter carriers. Under the well-established practice of this House it has frequently been held that in making appropriations for any purpose the House has the right to fix the conditions upon which the money shall be expended, and if those conditions are not complied with the money shall not be expended.

As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has well pointed out, in the amendment authorizing a lease in the city of New York for postal facilities at the New York Central terminal, it provided that the money should not be expended unless the lease were made for fifty years. The law now says that the Postmaster-General shall not make a lease for more than ten years, and the ruling in that instance was clearly within the decisions frequently made in the House; and this amendment in the form it now is appropriated the money, but provides that it shall not be expended unless the conditions mentioned shall be complied with. It is true that indirectly it accomplishes perhaps a repeal of the existing statutes, but that, under the rules of the House, is perfectly proper.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRUMPACKER). The amendment offered by the gentleman from California is to strike out the phrase "twenty-two million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars," contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and substitute therefor the words "$23,250,000: Provided, That no part of the appropriation shall be used for said purpose unless in the use thereof the carriers hereinafter mentioned shall be paid salaries as follows, during the year beginning July 1, 1904, viz: In all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more, carriers who have served more than three years, $1,200 per annum," etc.

The Chair reads only enough of the amendment to illustrate its character. The business of the House is conducted under rules adopted by the House; and it is within the power of the House to withhold an appropriation altogether or to make it and connect with it limitations even to the extent of rendering the appropriation absolutely nugatory. The House has that power and the Chair has no right to say the House can not exercise it. If the proposed amendment shall prevail, it will render the appropriation nugatory; the Postmaster-General will not be able to expend a dollar of it.

The amendment is a limitation upon the disbursement of the appropriation, and it can not operate to increase the salaries of letter carriers. If it had that effect it would be a change of existing law, and therefore subject to a point of order on that ground. It prevents the expenditure of the appropriation unless the salaries of letter carriers shall be raised. The Postmaster-General has no power to increase the salaries, and he can not disburse the appropriation unless that be done. Therefore, in the absence of further action by Congress along that line, under the proposed amendment the appropriation could not be expended at all.

The House has the undoubted right to impose limitations upon appropriations, and impose conditions by way of limitation that are impossible of performance and defeat the appropriation itself. The power to withhold appropriations altogether carries with it the power to make appropriations with all kinds of limitations. It is not for the Chair to criticise the action of the House, but simply to decide whether, under the rules, it has the right to adopt the proposed amendment. The Chair is of the opinion it has that right, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HEMENWAY. I should like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] whether he desires to leave this appropriation in such a condition that the mail carriers can not get their pay next year?

Mr. LIVERNASH. I should be glad to be able to feel that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] had asked that question in good faith.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I do ask it in good faith, because the Chair has just ruled that that would be the effect of the amendment. No man carrying the mails can receive one dollar of pay during the next fiscal year if this amendment should prevail.

Mr. LIVERNASH. It may be my misfortune, but I am unable to accept the opinion of the Chairman of this committee or the opinion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] as conclusive in this regard. Were they the judicial arm of this country their announcements might oblige me to an acceptance of their views; but after all the Chairman of the committee is without authority to bind by his announcement, and as against the announcement of the gentleman from Indiana I have a strong conviction, the outcome of study, that he is in error. Under my amendment the appropriation would be available for all carriers of the classes affected by it; but in using it the post-office authorities would have to see that the increases of salaries provided for were given effect. There is no danger that any interruption of salary payments would occur if the amendment were law; and I think that no Member of this body for a moment fancies that any interruption would occur.

Now, sir, in support of the amendment I wish to say——

A MEMBER on the Republican side. Regular order!

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I have been recognized, I believe, for the purpose of——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has been recognized to speak to his amendment for five minutes.

Mr. LIVERNASH. It is not surprising, though certainly regrettable, that discussion of the just proposals of the letter carriers of the cities of America is so unwelcome to some of the Members of this assembly as that a voice should be raised here to prevent such discussion. I am glad that the protesting voice was not raised on this side of the Chamber; but it is not creditable to the committee that it has been raised at all.

Mr. Chairman, I was about to say, when interrupted, that my amendment is based on the thought that the American Government should be an ideal employer, setting an example of generosity and kindliness and enlightenment worthy to be followed in private life and tending to enforce itself on private employers. Thoughtful men must lament every condition making or tending to make the Federal Government appear to be disposed to grind the poor and to drive hard bargains with the needy.

The letter carriers of the cities of this country are a body of faithful public servants deserving of liberal treatment and benevolent consideration. They are not so well paid for their services as they ought to be—neither those who are at the bottom nor those who have been long in the employ of the State. They have for years been seeking to have their condition bettered, and in this they have been strictly right. Their proposals have at all times been conservative. There has never been a sound reason for denying the relief they have sought.

The pending amendment proposes to do for the free-delivery city carriers for the coming year what should be done for them every year—give the graduate carriers an annual income in some measure commensurate with the duties and importance of their station. It is as to one year what the carriers have been asking the Congress to do for them in permanency. The amendment is restricted to one year because of the rules of the House. If made to cover all the future it would be subject to a point of order and could not be brought to a vote in the present temper of this assembly. But provisions similar to those of the amendment should be made statutory in permanent form, and corresponding increase of pay should be given all carriers in the public service. The United States should not be a niggard in its treatment of its postal force. It should be reasonably liberal to all persons who serve it.

The carriers have been mercilessly and unlawfully embarrassed in presenting to the House of Representatives their dissatisfaction with present salaries and their wishes as to alteration of existing law. They have been, by an Executive order, obliged under penalty of dismissal to refrain from exercising their constitutional right to petition the Congress for the redress of grievances, and to refrain from exercising their constitutional right to freedom of speech. Nay, more. When they have found a Member of this House willing to arise in his place and plead their cause, there has not been wanting a sympathizer with Administration methods to raise his voice in an attempt to gag their champion. So far have we drifted from the right practices that such things as these have no longer the quality of inflaming public opinion; for such things as these, unhappily, have come to be common.

The Executive order just mentioned was issued by President Roosevelt on the 31st of January, 1902, and runs as follows:

> All officers and employees of the United States, of every description, serving in or under any of the Executive Departments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the Departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

This order, as Members of this body well understand, was especially aimed at the letter carriers individually and in their national association. It has been given such severe enforcement as should arouse deep indignation, and as would arouse such indignation were all the facts given publicity, as some day they will be if I can bring the House of Representatives to perform its full duty in the matter. And it has been given enforcement though a plain violation of the Constitution of the United States, which lays down, in its first amendment, this great rule:

> Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech * * * or the right of the people * * * to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

It is not within the constitutional power of the Congress, and certainly not within the constitutional power of the President—indeed, it is not within the constitutional power of all branches of the Republic acting together—to abridge in any degree whatever the freedom of speech or the right of petition on the part of any American citizen, whether in the employ of the State or not in the employ of the State. The Executive order of January 31, 1902, was and is a clear usurpation of authority outside the Constitution and in plain violation of the oath of office taken by the President.

But though beyond the lawful scope of Executive authority, that order has been used to drive the letter carriers into silence as to their needs, except within the narrow means provided them in the matter of petition to the head of the Post-Office Department. And their use of even that poor and inadequate means has been made as ineffective as politicians dare make it, for while the carriers have petitioned the Postmaster-General for aid in gaining an increase of salary, their petition has been all but suppressed. I take pleasure in embracing this opportunity to give it such publicity as the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD affords. The text of the petition is as follows:

MEMORIAL TO THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

To the Hon. Henry C. Payne, Postmaster-General of the United States:

With a firm belief in the reason and justice of the Post-Office Department and its desire to place the moral, mental, and physical personnel of that branch of its service, which is so important a factor in our present advanced state of commercial and political activity—the letter carriers—on the highest possible plane of efficiency; believing that it is your desire to assist us in every possible way to meet the demands that are made upon us in the pursuance of our duties, thereby reflecting credit upon our superiors, the service, and ourselves, and, above all, meeting in the fullest possible manner the requirements of our advanced civilization, we beg to call to your honorable attention the following resolution, adopted at the annual convention of the National Association of Letter Carriers, held in Chattanooga in 1901, and also unanimously adopted at our recent convention held in Denver in September of last year:

Resolved, That the National Association of Letter Carriers, in convention assembled, hereby approve and indorse the bill to increase the pay of letter carriers, now pending in Congress, known as H. R. 6279, which reads as follows:

"That after June 30, 1902, the pay of letter carriers in cities of more than 75,000 population, for the first year of service, shall be $600; for the second year of service shall be $800; for the third year of service shall be $1,000; for the fourth year of service and thereafter shall be $1,200. And after June 30, 1902, the pay of letter carriers in cities of a population of under 75,000 for the first year of service shall be $600; for the second year of service, $800; for the third year of service and thereafter, $1,000."

We, the executive committee of the National Association of Letter Carriers, in pursuance of the above, and believing the same will meet with your honorable and just consideration when properly set forth, do hereby submit a statement of our case.

In submitting our argument showing cause why the letter carriers' petition for an increase is based upon sound and sufficient reasons, we will substantiate our case by attempting to prove the following points:

1. That the position of letter carrier requires an employee possessed of a high standard of physical and mental ability.
2. That the letter carrier must be a man of good moral character.
3. That the letter carrier's employment is arduous, laborious, and exacting.
4. That the wages paid an employee in civil life in which similar qualifications are necessary are greater than that which the letter carrier receives.
5. That for the past sixteen years the wages and hours of labor of the letter carrier have remained unchanged, and only his duties have become complex and responsible, while in the same period of time the conditions that govern employment in civil life have immeasurably improved and there has been a phenomenal advance in the average rate of wages.
6. That all conditions point to a continuation of this upward trend of wages, the decrease in the hours of toil, and a generally improved condition of labor.
7. That the cost of living has greatly increased in the past five years, virtually having the same effect as a reduction in the letter carriers' wages.
8. That general conditions not previously specified having a bearing on his case should operate in the letter carrier's favor.

To be eligible for a position as letter carrier the Civil Service Commission demands that the applicant shall be possessed of the following requisites: He must not be afflicted with any physical or mental infirmity. He shall be between the ages of 18 and 45, weigh at least 125 pounds, and be free from any vicious or immoral habits. In connection with this he must undergo a rigid examination to determine his fitness for the position to which he aspires. The educational test is considered one of the least difficult of the various examinations in the classified service, but, notwithstanding this imputed simplicity, reference to the most recent report of the Civil Service Commission disclosed the following figures:

Table showing the number of persons examined, the number that passed and that failed, the per cent that passed, and the number appointed in the classified service during the year ending June 30, 1903.

Kind of examination.	Examined.	Passed.	Failed.	Per cent passed.	Appointed.
Departmental service	21,601	16,110	5,491	75	5,212
Government printing service	1,709	1,554	155	91	172
Custom-house service	3,433	2,856	577	83	527
Internal-revenue service	449	252	197	56	87
Post-office service	20,901	12,749	8,152	61	4,293
Clerks	9,605	6,679	2,926	70	2,166
Carriers	11,207	6,017	5,190	54	2,113

A review of the above table will show that in the examinations incident to entrance into the different Departments the per cent that failed to pass the letter-carrier's examination is greater than the totals for any other Department. This fact is at least proof that aside from the original requisite, physical qualifications, the letter carrier must possess a degree of mentality not common among men. The statistics relative to the post-office clerk's examination is given separately in this table for the reason that the post-office clerk's and the letter-carrier's examinations are identical. It will be observed that the per cent of applicants who pass the clerk's examination is considerably greater than that of the carriers. Explanation of this difference is found in the laborious and exposed character of the carrier's occupation. Unless the applicant has had previous experience in manual labor he is deterred from taking the carrier's examination owing to the well-known hardships he must encounter in that position, and if he has had this experience it operates against his ability to attain a passing grade.

By again referring to the foregoing statistics we note that of the 11,207 applicants who originally stood the carrier's examination, only 19 per cent received appointments. Remembering that appointments naturally go to the applicant who has demonstrated his superior fitness for the desired position, these figures are an unfailing index of the high standard of ability possessed by the appointee. Nor is this all. The educational test and the implied physical test a carrier undergoes is such that he would appear to be fitted for any ordinary trade or vocation. This is not entirely true of other examinations. Employees might fill with credit other positions in the classified service who would be physically unable to perform the laborious duties assigned to the carrier. Evidence of this is found in the fact that women make acceptable employees in the clerical departments.

The rate of wages to be paid an employee is largely determined by the dependence that must be placed in his honesty and trustworthiness. A momentary review of such employment in civil life will confirm this statement. This feature of employment is a natural part of the letter carrier's duties. Daily matter of the highest value is placed in his charge. How well this trust is guarded is best testified to by the general superintendent of the free-delivery system in his recent annual report, in which he says: "It will be observed that there were 21 less removals from the service during the year ending June 30, 1901, although there was an increase of about 1,400 in the total number of carriers. The fact that less than nine-tenths of 1 per cent were removed from the service speaks well for the personnel of the carrier force throughout the country."

In connection with these indispensable qualifications previously noted, the carrier is regularly assigned tasks that call for a large measure of endurance and fortitude. This is indicated by the following statistics, gathered by the Department recently in the cities of Chicago, Ill., and Chattanooga, Tenn:

Table showing average number of pieces delivered per carrier per day, the average weight of mail delivered, and the average length of routes.

CHICAGO POST-OFFICE.

Average number of pieces per carrier per day	1,125
Average number of pieces per carrier per trip	329
Average number of pounds per carrier per day	56
Average number of pounds per carrier per trip	16
Average number of miles per day per carrier	14.8

CHATTANOOGA POST-OFFICE.

Average number of pounds per carrier per day	71.04
Average number of miles per carrier per day	15.21

Owing to physical impossibilities of equalizing carriers' routes, instances are abundant where the weight of the mail in the early morning delivery has exceeded 100 pounds. Routes of over 20 miles in length are also numerous. The proper delivery of 1,125 pieces of mail per day, as noted in the above table, demands constant carefulness. The serious result that one misdelivery might entail amply justifies the strict departmental regulations concerning such error.

In selecting letter carriers from the list of eligibles the great majority of appointments are made to the substitute list. The period of time served as a substitute varies, but the average, as given by the Department's figures, is one year and seven months. Taking this estimate as a basis, he would then be three years and seven months in offices of first class and two years and seven months in offices of second class before the maximum salary was reached. This would make an apprenticeship period averaging considerably over three years.

In acquiring a trade in civil life an apprenticeship of from eighteen months to two years is considered sufficient, and rare indeed are the instances in which this period exceeds over three years. This fact alone should indicate the high standard of efficiency and ability set for the letter carrier by the Post-Office Department. Yet, in comparison with ordinary trades in civil life, in which the service is neither more arduous nor responsible or the period of apprenticeship as long, and where no educational test is required, the wages in many instances are higher, as the following table will indicate:

Average daily wages (gold) in cities of the United States, 1892 to 1896.

Year.	Blacksmiths.	Bricklayers.	Carpenters.	Compositors.	Painters (house).
1892	$2.59½	$4.23½	$2.65	$2.78	$2.68½
1893	2.59½	4.12½	2.67	2.77½	2.69
1894	2.49½	4.13½	2.62½	2.79½	2.67½
1895	2.47	4.02½	2.55½	2.81	2.60½
1896	2.44	3.82½	2.52	2.82½	2.58½

The above statistics are taken from Bulletin No. 38 of the Department of Labor, and are a part of the exhibit of that body at the Pan-American Exposition.

In the period quoted above wages reached a lower level than at any time in the past thirteen years.

In connection with the foregoing table, below is an additional one showing wages paid in some of the best-known trades in the State of Pennsylvania. This table is taken from fifteenth report of the Department of Labor, Wages in Commercial Countries.

Pennsylvania.	Number of employees.	Hours per week.			Rate per day.

Blacksmiths	21	.....	.....	.....	1.75	4.25	2.54

According to the late report of the superintendent of the free-delivery system there are 10,830 regular carriers in offices of the first class and 6,955 regular carriers in offices of the second class. For the first named the maximum wages per day is $2.72. For carriers in offices of second class the maximum is $2.36 per day. In both offices the minimum wages a carrier receives is $1.63 per day.

In the two tables previously submitted, showing wages paid in ordinary trades in civil life, it will be noted that in the majority of instances the wages per diem exceed that which the letter carriers receive. As the contrary has often been asserted, this is the most important fact.

The present law governing the salaries of letter carriers was enacted January 3, 1887. The following is an extract of this law:

"SEC. 2. That there may be in all cities which contain a population of 75,000 or more three classes of letter carriers, as follows: Carriers of the first class, whose salaries shall be $1,000 per annum; of the second class, whose salaries shall be $800 per annum, and of the third class, whose salaries shall be $600 per annum.

"SEC. 3. That in places containing a population of less than 75,000 there may be two classes of letter carriers, as follows: Carriers of the second class, whose salaries shall be $850 per annum, and of the third class, whose salaries shall be $600 per annum."

In establishing the salaries of letter carriers in 1887 it is natural to assume that Congress was guided by the nature and responsibility of the employment, coupled with conditions prevailing in civil field of activity at that time. It is also logical to assume that if there had been a marked increase in the average wage paid labor in the United States since that period it should be a potent argument favoring a readjustment of the present salaries of the carriers.

The following table, taken from Bulletin No. 38 of the Department of Labor, takes 1860 as a base at 100 and shows the trend of wages in gold for 21 industries from that time up to and including 1899:

Year.	Wages.	Year.	Wages.
1860	100.0	1880	141.5
1861	100.8	1881	147.5
1862	100.4	1882	149.9
1863	76.2	1883	152.7
1864	80.8	1884	152.7
1865	66.2	1885	150.7
1866	108.8	1886	150.9
1867	117.1	1887	153.7
1868	114.9	1888	155.4
1869	119.5	1889	156.7
1870	133.7	1890	158.9
1871	147.8	1891	160.7
1872	152.2	1892	161.2
1873	148.3	1893	159.6
1874	145.0	1894	157.6
1875	140.8	1895	157.3
1876	135.2	1896	157.4
1877	136.4	1897	159.0
1878	140.5	1898	158.8
1879	139.9	1899	163.2

It will be observed from the above table that since 1860 the trend of wages has been almost continually upward. It will also be noted that in twelve years following 1887 a gain of ten points is recorded. While no data is obtainable showing trend of wages since 1899, it is universally conceded that the past three years have witnessed an almost unparalleled advance. Evidence of this is found in the recent voluntary 10 per cent increase in salaries paid railroad employees. The extent of this increase is indicated by the following Associated Press dispatch of November 18, 1902:

"NEW YORK, November 18.

"Following the lead of the Pennsylvania and New York Central railroads, practically every big road in the country will raise the wages of its employees. In round figures, 650,000 men will get an annual increase aggregating $17,000,000.

"Nineteen railroads are included in those which will grant the increase. The movement for increased wages is the most stupendous in the history of the country. The total pay rolls of the railroads to-day is nearly $750,000,000.

"It is expected that the public will be forced to pay part of this increase through their freight rates.

"Among the railroads affected are the Pennsylvania; New York Central; West Shore; Missouri Pacific; Texas Pacific; Denver and Rio Grande; Rio Grande and Western; Lake Shore; Delaware, Lackawanna and Western; Nickel Plate; Wheeling and Lake Erie; Pittsburg and Lake Erie; Wabash; St. Louis and Southwestern; Erie; Philadelphia and Reading."

Next to the Government the railroads of the United States give employment to more men than any other industry, and their concerted action reveals the tendency of the times. But the railroads are not alone in this movement. Some time within the past three years a similar increase in wages has been made by almost every large corporation in the country. Nor is this all. Nothing can be more certain than that this upward trend of wages will continue. After all, wages in the country depend upon the average wealth-producing capacity of its citizens, and as long as we retain the American genius for organizing, systematizing, and inventing labor-saving machinery wages will continue to advance.

The President, in his recent message to Congress, says: "We still continue in a period of unbounded properity. * * * There undoubtedly will be periods of depression. The wave will recede, but the tide will advance."

Owing to the fixed and unchangeable rate of wages paid letter carriers, his employment is becoming rapidly less attractive, as the disposition to increase salaries in other industries becomes more manifest. Evidence of this condition is found in the rapidly growing number of resignations from the carrier service in the past four years, as shown by the following table:

1899	120	1901	175
1900	142	1902	231

While the past five years have witnessed a most gratifying increase in the general rate of wages, in keeping with this increase there has been a corresponding advance in the cost of living. From figures taken from the twenty-third annual report of the Massachusetts bureau of statistics of labor, this increase in the cost of living from 1897 up until 1902 is given at 15.37 per cent. It is quite certain that this ratio has been maintained throughout the United States.

Testimony was submitted before the Anthracite Commission on December 5, 1902, showing that the cost of meats alone had advanced 23 per cent in the previous year. The price of fuel is also much higher.

As further evidence showing the increased cost of living, the following tables are submitted:

Comparison of the retail cost of staple groceries on December 1 for the four years 1899, 1900, 1901, and 1902, showing the advancing prices.

The tendency to higher prices, as indicated by the foregoing tables, is not confined to articles entering directly into the cost of living. Nearly all commodities show advanced quotations.

In the recent annual report of the Superintendent of the Free-Delivery System this condition is given recognition when he says: "During the past year pressing demands from many offices have been made upon the Department for an increase in the allowance for horse hire. * * * An investigation into these widespread complaints has shown that an advance in the price of horse provender has taken place during the past year. Throughout the Eastern and Middle States this advance seems to be general, and also prevailing largely in the South and Northwestern section."

No matter in which direction inquiry is extended, investigation will demonstrate that an increase in the cost of living similar to that experienced in the State of Massachusetts has been sustained throughout the country. It can also be stated as reasonably certain that this upward tendency of prices will continue indefinitely. As the labor cost necessary in the production of a commodity is the greatest factor in determining its market price, hence the economic agencies that are cooperating to cause the wages of the producers to advance acts with similar effect upon the product. An era of prosperity is an era of advancing prices.

We submit that to meet this present and prospective advance in the cost of living the compensation of the letter carriers should also be advanced.

We further submit that investigation and consideration of the various factors that assist in establishing a rate of wages will demonstrate that the present salaries of letter carriers are insufficient. We believe that it is the policy of our Government to fix a compensation for its employees commensurate with the duties performed, and we believe if inquiry proves that an injustice exists this injustice will be corrected.

As Richard T. Ely, in his Introduction to Political Economy, well says, "Government is today the largest employer of labor in the country, and all other employers and employees are more or less affected by the manner in which it treats its employees. Shall Government as an employer be influenced by the demands of ethics? Undoubtedly. As Government is an ethical person it ought to be a model employer, insisting upon justice in service and granting justice in conditions of service and in its remuneration."

In the past forty years no branch of our Government service has grown into such public popularity as has the postal system. Through the ever-changing conditions of this period the affection of the people for this Department of the Government has never wavered, and to-day their regard is more deep and abiding than ever before. No cause has contributed more largely to the desirable end than the faithful, honest, courteous, and capable letter carriers, who, face to face in their own homes, meet every week one-half of the population of our country.

This class of public employees now come before you, seeking nothing but justice and asking at your hands naught but an impartial inquiry into the merits of their petition. Confident that this boon will not be denied us and that our prayer for relief will receive your honorable consideration, we submit this memorial.

Now, sir, I trust that the amendment I have proposed will receive the support of every friend of the letter carriers. The question affords the Members of this assembly a good opportunity of testifying to their convictions on the wage matter presented for a vote. The Congress is largely responsible for the great increase in the cost of living in this country characterizing the last few years. It is to be hoped that this branch of the Congress will not deny to a hard-working class affected by that increase some relief in the way of advance in income.

Mr. BAKER and Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] to speak in support of his amendment.

Mr. BAKER. I want to speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized in support of his amendment.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think there should not be charged against me any hostility toward the Administration or toward the Government or any exhibition of what my friend from Indiana called "temper" because I for once in my life assume to have an opinion of my own.

It is not important to me whether this amendment is adopted. I do not care whether anybody votes for it. I want the opportunity of voting for it myself. That is the reason I offered it. And the reasons why I desire to vote for it I shall be glad to give, and I am reminded by my friend from Massachusetts that the time has come when some of them should be given.

I do not believe that we want to set up the one-man power in the Post-Office Department, unless the one man is the Postmaster-General—a Cabinet officer. I do not think it well to put the whole Post-Office Department in the service of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General. And in order that I may not tramp upon anybody's sore corns, let me say that I mean nothing by that except in an ordinary way; that idea has not come to me since the investigation that was ordered a few days ago, and since we were charged, along with other wicked people, with having done wicked things.

This is a business proposition. It is not right to put 102,000 men under the charge and direction of one officer of this Government unless he is a major-general of high rank. [Laughter.] The Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, if my amendment does not prevail, will have twice as many people under him as he would find in the Regular Army of the United States. It was said the other day——

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURDOCK. Does not the gentleman think that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General runs his office competently and honestly?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Oh, I am not defending anybody; neither am I assailing anybody. I am talking about a business affair. I am not "pitching into" anybody belonging to the Post-Office Department. That Department, in one bureau or another, may have been run competently. I am not raising the question of the competency of anyone. I do not know anything about that. I say to the gentleman who asks me that question that any man may come to such conclusion as he pleases on another's competency. I question no one in any one bureau. The more people you provide for in this bill the more chances there are to get places out of that bureau. Now, there are in this department 67,000 fourth-class postmasters.

There are in the Fourth Assistant's office 20,000 letter carriers; there are also 15,000 rural free-delivery carriers, 200 inspectors charged as route agents; also 80 special agents, 10 division superintendents, making in all, if I count the figures accurately, 102,360 men. Prior to this assignment, made by the Postmaster-General, there were in this department from 35,000 to 36,000 less employees. You will see that by this assignment, made recently, and, as I am told, for temporary purposes only—I have no authority to say that my statement is absolutely accurate—but from the best information that can be given to me I am told that the two departments were transferred temporarily.

There were in all these divisions of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General about 68,000 or 69,000 employees before these two assignments. Under the First Assistant's office there are 265 first-class postmasters; there are 1,200 second-class postmasters; there are third-class postmasters numbering 3,848; clerks, 2,300. I am not certain that these figures are accurate, but they approximate in a general way the number of employees in each one of these departments.

The Second Assistant Postmaster-General has about 10,555 employees. The Third, 150.

Now, there should be some reason given other than the one that might be assigned as patronage disposition why this amendment should be made. I do not care, I will say to you, whether it is made or not. There should, of course, be some good reason for it. My friend asked the question, and he is entitled to the best I can give. I believe that the day is coming, and not far off, when the fourth-class post-office will go into history.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out two or three words.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is hardly in order. The Chair is of the opinion that when a gentleman is addressing the committee and his time has expired he is not entitled to offer a pro forma amendment and hold the floor for five minutes more. The motion would not be in order.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be permitted to address the House for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania may be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MURDOCK. You told us just now that you did not doubt but what the day was coming when the fourth-class post-office would disappear.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. There were, in 1903, 69,464, and only 2,000 disappeared that year.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I did not say when it was coming. I do not say it now. I do not wish gentlemen to understand me as being a prophet. I know this: The country has been developing, and one of the things that is bound to happen is the disappearance of the fourth-class post-office. I do not know how it is with other gentlemen. There were nearly 300 that encountered my attention when I came to Congress eight years ago. They are fast going out. I am rather sorry they are. Progress is going on in my Congressional district, and they go out like old limbs drop from a withered tree.

How it may be in other places I do not know. But to get back to the question put by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The first, second, and third class offices will have all the rural routes when the fourth disappears. I think it was for that reason, anticipating that all the routes would be centered in these different divisions, that it pleased the Postmaster-General one or two years ago to make this assignment, putting these rural routes in the hands of the First Assistant Postmaster-General. First, as an illustration of what I mean, these rural routes will eventually be confined to the offices above the fourth class. The town in which I live is a first-class office, or almost first-class—will be in a few days. There are 9,000 people living in it, and there are twelve routes.

All the rural fourth-class offices for 5 miles around have gone. The star route has gone. That business of that office, understand me to say, is conducted under the First Assistant Postmaster-General. Why should you have another jurisdiction? If it was thought right at one time for him to have these rural free-delivery routes, why take them away from him now? Why should there be two jurisdictions in the same post-office? Why should either the Third or the Fourth Assistant Postmasters-General take away these rural routes from the First Assistant Postmaster-General, thereby creating two jurisdictions in the same office when one will answer? I speak of the post-office in my town, and it is but a fair illustration of the situation we meet at other places.

I understand it to be the intention of the Government to establish these central places, from which these mails can be distributed, along the railroads. In that way they can abolish what is known as the "star route." In that way they save the postage to the postmaster, where the office happens to be a first-class office. I understand it to be the policy of the Department—and I believe it to be a good one and in the interest of the service—that these places of concentration and separation of mails be on the railroads as nearly as can be conveniently arranged. The same reason which I have given to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] prevails, namely, that there is in the First Assistant Postmaster-General complete jurisdiction when the places of distribution are in offices above fourth grade.

I have no disposition to impose upon the patience of this House nor to take its time. It is argued as one of the reasons why this amendment should not prevail that if this section stays in the bill I will move to put on another section. The fault is not mine. I moved to amend by adopting the two sections including these two great departments. The gentleman from Indiana raised the point of order, and the Chairman properly decided that I could not do it. I have no other method except the one I am now employing. Gentlemen will understand that it is not for the purpose of creating delay nor imposing upon the patience of anybody; but I do say that if it appears to be the wisdom of this House that this amendment should not prevail I will not tarry with you any more. I know what it is to run against a great committee in the House. I can signify to the country that I am opposed to giving to any official of this Government one hundred and one thousand men to be under his control without securing the passage of this amendment.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has, very properly, I think, stated the legal effect of changing this paragraph from the place it now occupies in the bill to the one that is proposed. I will therefore not discuss that question.

There must be some reason for the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER]. I agree with him very fully that the power of the Postmaster-General, in proper places and under proper conditions, ought to be limited, that proper restrictions should be placed upon him; but it must be remembered that the power rests now, by law, in the Postmaster-General to place the carriers under either one of the four grand divisions in that office.

For reasons satisfactory to him this power has been given to the Fourth Assistant. No reason has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] or any other gentleman upon this floor why the House of Representatives should at this particular time interfere with the discretion of the Postmaster-General in a purely administrative act. If it had been shown that the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General was incompetent to discharge the duties imposed upon him, then the motion might be properly entertained.

The House must look back to the motives that actuate gentlemen sometimes in proposed legislation. Do you suppose it would have ever been suggested to this House to take this power, wisely and legally lodged, this discretion, properly reposed in the Postmaster-General, from him and to exercise it by the House (a thing unheard of heretofore under similar conditions) unless there had been some feeling somewhere against the officer now exercising the power under the direction of the Postmaster-General? We had as well deal plainly with this question.

The purpose is plainly to put the whole rural-delivery system back under the First Assistant, from whom it was taken and placed under the Fourth Assistant. I submit to the House that the country will say to you, if you take this step now, that you are endeavoring to visit punishment upon the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General for the part that he has taken in discovering, rebuking, and punishing frauds committed in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General. We had as well be plain about this. This is not the time—the conditions existing are not such that this House could wisely, in my judgment, at this time, take from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General the power that he now exercises in reference to the matters under discussion and put them back under the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The First Assistant Postmaster-General is a very nice gentleman, a very capable and honest gentleman, but that department of the Post-Office is now discredited. Why shall we place the control of these things back under a discredited department that is now undergoing investigation in the courts of the country? Why take it from that branch of the Department that has brought about and is aiding in the prosecution of these wrongs? Have you such feeling toward Mr. Bristow, because of the discharge of his duty there, that you propose to violate all precedent, that you propose to take from the Postmaster-General the power and the discretion he now has, and to place back, at your will and against his, the control of these matters in the First Assistant's office? It is an unwise thing for you to do. The country will say that you are galled, that you are chafing under the report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, that you want to get just as far from him as you can. I think it will be better for the public interest that we stay by him just a little while longer. [Applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word, and then I shall move to close debate. Under existing law the expenditure of all of the money relative to the postmasters of the country is under the First Assistant Postmaster-General. It merely confuses the subject-matter to enumerate the number of offices and say that so many are under one assistant and so many under another. The importance of the subject is the control of the expenditures of the 73,000 postmasters of the country. All of the appointments, so far as the issuing of commissions is concerned and the entries of the appointments by way of bookkeeping, are now under the Fourth Assistant, but the expenditure of all the salaries of those 73,000 postmasters is under the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

The disbursement of $20,000,000 to over 23,000 clerks in first and second class post-offices is to-day under the management of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, as well as the payment of the several hundred assistant postmasters, so that aside from the pure, simple bookkeeping department of the appointments all of the disbursements for postmasters' salaries, assistant postmasters, and all of the clerks, the disbursements of the rent, light and fuel, all of the supplies for all of the offices to-day falls under the control of the First Assistant Postmaster-General. If you by any sort of legislation transfer from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster to the First Assistant Postmaster the letter carriers and the rural-delivery carriers you increase his power just by the number of those appointees and the expenditures incident to that service. That would result in giving 47,000 more employees and the payment of all their salaries and expense accounts to the First Assistant.

Now, I appeal just to the common-sense judgment of this committee. First, see if you understand yourselves the duties of these Assistants. I do not impugn any lack of information, but I mean let us start with that. All of the administration of the service, the disbursement of all the appropriations for those offices to-day comes under the First Assistant, except the rural delivery and the letter carriers and a miscellaneous number of clerks like the inspectors. It would reduce the Fourth Assistant to less than 5,000 employees, and if you count the postmasters would make the service of the First Assistant control over 147,000 employees.

Now, I say, just as I did at the beginning, I feel that the gentlemen are moved more by their personal feeling in this matter than by their judgment, and when I appeal to their common-sense judgment I rely upon their understanding of the administration of this great service. Do not cripple your own record, gentlemen, by undertaking such a move as this when you do not accomplish what the gentleman's motion, according to his construction of it, seeks to accomplish. Now, one word, Mr. Chairman, upon the pending amendment to the amendment. That amendment is made by the gentleman from California. Under the ruling of the Chair, as suggested by my colleague from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] on the committee, that amendment will make inoperative absolutely the expenditure of the appropriation for the letter carriers of the country. You undertake, gentlemen——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not now. You undertake here by an indirect movement to carry forward some pet arrangement that is out of order in this bill and by doing so cripple the service of thousands of offices in this country by making nugatory the appropriation for the 23,000 letter carriers of the country. I think I need do no more than again appeal to the common-sense judgment of this committee. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that both amendments will be voted down. I now move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments be now closed.

Mr. BENNY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BENNY. A number of gentlemen desire to talk upon this paragraph here, and I have noticed the chairman of the committee made two or three speeches——

Mr. PAYNE. This is not debatable, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNY. I am not going to debate this proposition——

Mr. PAYNE. But you are debating it.

Mr. BENNY. No——

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BENNY. The chairman of the committee has now spoken several times, three I think, upon this subject.

Mr. OVERSTREET. How much time do you want?

Mr. BENNY. I do not want any time just now. I am going to find out my rights, and then I propose to get the time I want.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for the regular order, then, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BENNY. I want to know now from the Chair how often, under the rule, the chairman of the committee is entitled to talk upon any given paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that that is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from New Jersey. The Chair understands the parliamentary rule and usage, which make the rules, to be that the chairman of the committee in charge of a bill on the floor of this House is entitled at all stages of the bill to the first recognition for such purpose as he sees fit, to expedite the bill under the rule. On any pending amendment there is five minutes, debate allowed on each side, and the chairman in charge of a bill may at any time after five minutes' debate on each side, move to close debate, and anything after that, the Chair understands, proceeds by unanimous consent.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SULZER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana to withhold his motion for five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have been more than liberal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to close debate on the pending paragraph and amendments.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD), there were—ayes 83, noes 50.

Mr. SULZER. I call for tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. SULZER.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 40.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first announce the vote. On this question the ayes are 91 and the noes are 40. A quorum has voted, and the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to close debate prevails. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes had it.

Mr. WYNN. A division, Mr. Chairman; and to facilitate matters I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, what is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. WYNN.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 89.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to give notice that after the committee shall rise I will ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment to the amendment in open House.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to give that notice. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 15, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For rental or purchase of canceling machines, and motors and power therefor, $200,000: Provided, That no canceling machine shall be rented at an annual rental exceeding the rate now paid by the Department.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 17, page 12, the words "rental or:" and strike out all after and including the word "Provided," in lines 18, 19, and 20; so that the paragraph will read: "For purchase of canceling machines, and motors and power therefor, $200,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. To that, Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment was to abandon the iniquitous practice of renting canceling machines. I find by consulting the report made by the Postmaster-General that during the last year we spent in the neighborhood of $176,000 for canceling machines—for machines that were rented.

The International Postal Supply Company rented us 250 of these machines at a rental of $400 each, receiving from the Government in rentals $100,000. The Berry Postal Supply Company rented 75 machines at $150 each. Four other companies rented machines at rentals running from $110 to $150 each.

There was opposition to this appropriation a year ago, and it was permitted to pass with a provision that a commission should be appointed by the Postmaster-General to report whether or not it might be advisable to purchase machines. I find by consulting the hearings before the Postal Committee that the First Assistant Postmaster-General testified that in his judgment the appointment of such a commission would be futile, in that the companies that furnished these machines would refuse to sell; that they would rent, but would not sell.

In other words, these manufacturers have placed themselves before this House in this attitude: "We have a machine that is essential to the dispatch of public business—you can not get along without it; we are protected by the patent laws of our country; we will rent you these machines at an exorbitant price, but we will not sell them to you."

This bill carries an appropriation of $200,000, and every dollar of that money will be spent in rentals. I have examined some of these machines now being used in the city post-office. The machines for which we pay an annual rental of $400 each has a mechanism no more complicated than the average sewing machine.

These machines have been used by the Government, as I understand it, for four years. During these four years we have paid $1,600 per machine in rent. They say to this House that we must continue to pay this exorbitant rental. We say that we would like to buy the machines. They answer that the machines are not for sale and that we must rent at this exorbitant price or they will take out their machines.

I think this House should say to these manufacturers, "Then, gentlemen, take out your machines." Now, I have it from gentlemen in every way reputable that it is possible, if this commission were organized and competition invited and it were given out that Congress was going to purchase these machines, to get a machine which would render just as good service as any of the machines now rented by the Government, at a purchase price not to exceed $325.

The machine will do maximum work. The price is minimum. The gentlemen composing this company guarantee to keep the machine in repair for three years. After the three-year term they guarantee to keep it in repair for ten years at $25 per year per machine, having machines on hand constantly, so that if any machine breaks down they can supply a new machine to take its place.

The hearings before the Post-Office Committee and the evidence submitted by the First Assistant Postmaster-General establishes the fact beyond question that it is possible to secure canceling machines that will do the work and that we can, if it is given out that the rental policy has been abandoned, purchase the machines.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, from the argument made by the previous speaker this committee might conclude that there was no competition whatever in the rental of canceling machines and that but one company was furnishing these machines. Following the last speaker very closely, I failed to discover any reference in his remarks to the report of the committee which the Postmaster-General appointed to conduct an investigation, pursuant to the provision incorporated in the last post-office bill, to determine the feasibility of purchasing canceling machines.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I did not refer to the finding made by that commission because the commission has never reported.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg to differ with the gentleman. I have in my hand House Document No. 573 of the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, which contains that report and which has been before this Congress for nearly a month.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that I secured my information from a member of the Post-Office Committee that that commission had never reported.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will plead guilty to the charge of giving the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS] that information, because that was the information given to the committee at the time this item was put in the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to acknowledge that at the time this clause was passed upon by the Post-Office Committee the report of that commission had not been published. This committee of experts appointed by the Postmaster-General recommends against the purchase, for the present, of any canceling machines.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the report show what the initial cost of the machine is?

Mr. STAFFORD. No mention whatever as to the cost is made.

Mr. CROMER. Who were those experts?

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee consisted of the superintendent of the division of allowances and salaries.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. What is his name?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. C. M. Waters.

Mr. CROMER. Let us hear some more of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. And two post-office inspectors.

Mr. CROMER. Who were they?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will give their names in a minute: Mr. M. C. Fosnes, post-office inspector in charge at St. Paul, Minn., and Mr. Paul Williams, post-office inspector in charge at Chattanooga, Tenn.

Mr. CROMER. They were all employees of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. STAFFORD. They were all employees of the Post-Office Department. They sent out proposals, as this document sets forth, inviting bids from all competitors. Nine owners of different patented machines submitted written bids, some for the sale and all for the renting of their respective machines. And, further, in conformance to the requirements, each machine was placed in working order at the Washington post-office, and a test made of each. The results of that examination are set forth in detail in their report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reverting to the question of the purchase of these machines, there is one machine——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. As I understand, the chief objection to the purchase of these machines is that their life is short, that it does not extend over three years.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what the report sets forth.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But the rental of one of these machines for that length of time has been $1,200. Now, if the machines could be purchased for $400 apiece, it does not take very long to tell how much the Government could save in three years by purchasing the machines.

Mr. STAFFORD. You refer to the Hey-Dolphin machine; this machine, as found by this select committee, was superior to any other make, but the owners of this particular machine declined to make any proposition for its unconditional sale.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Why?

Mr. STAFFORD. No reason was given. And when this company withdrew its machines from the postal service during prior Administrations, because of its refusal to accede to a less rental, which is the same to-day, other machines were purchased which proved entirely unfit and unserviceable.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. But the postal service still went on after the Hey-Dolphin machines were withdrawn?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; but the Government lost thousands of dollars by the change. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is competition among the owners of the different machines in the renting to the Government. I wish to quote the language of the report:

> Furthermore, we believe it advisable to adopt for use in the postal service any machine that, after test, proves reasonably satisfactory; so that no one company or combination of companies may have a monopoly of the business, and thus have the Department at its mercy.

If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana prevails, there will be but one course open for the Department. Whether these officials approve the machine or not, they will be compelled to purchase it, regardless of their own conclusions as expressed in the report, while under the provision as reported in the bill they will have the option either to rent or to purchase.

Is it to be claimed that this House is better equipped than the Department to pass upon the question of the desirability of purchasing these machines at the present time, and to act absolutely and force the Department to purchase machines outright against its best judgment?

The gentleman from Indiana is in error also when he says that certain companies have not offered to sell these machines. Some owners have offered to furnish machines at a rental of $150 per annum or to sell them at $600.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Do I understand that the lessors of these machines keep them in repair?

Mr. STAFFORD. They contract to keep them in permanent repair.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Have the lessors heretofore furnished the power to run the machines?

Mr. STAFFORD. The furnishing of power is an entirely independent matter. The lessors equip the machines with motors, if not hand-power machines. But the power is provided by the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent for a few minutes more, in order that I may answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. POWERS].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin may proceed longer? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. I notice that by the provision of the bill for this year the lessors pay for the motors and the power. Has such a provision been in the bill in former years?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is my impression that the Government has always paid for the power. We have only changed the phraseology, and instead of providing for motor power under the item of miscellaneous expenses we have now included it in this item.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. What I want to get at is, is there as large an appropriation for rental this year as last?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a less appropriation by $50,000.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. Why should there be a less appropriation than there was a year ago?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because only $174,000 of the $250,000 appropriation in the post-office supply bill for the current year has been expended; and I would add that the report of the select committee shows that they only need $201,700, and they receive within seventeen hundred dollars of that amount.

Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts. And does the appropriation recommended by the committee contemplate any increase in the number of machines?

Mr. STAFFORD. It does contemplate an increase, as this report shows that it is proposed to install 120 more machines. At present there are 886 machines in operation, and this bill provides for the operation of 1,004 machines.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will the gentleman also explain to the gentleman from Massachusetts why the entire appropriation was not used up last year?

Mr. STAFFORD. It goes to show that those who estimated the present appropriation were closer calculators than those of last year.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. No; the reason was that this provision was made that no more than $175,000 should be used in rentals, and the remainder was to be used in the purchase of the canceling machines, and no machines were purchased, and practically the entire sum provided in the appropriation available for rentals was used up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Last year a sum of $250,000 was provided for rental and purchase, of which not more than $190,000 should be expended in rentals, but a surplus of more than $15,000 in the rental item was unexpended.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. They came dangerously near it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Fifteen thousand dollars balance. The remainder of the appropriation above $190,000 could have been used at the discretion of the Postmaster-General for the purchase of machines, if he deemed such course for the best interest of the service.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Does not the gentleman think that the way to bring these manufacturers to time would be to give them to understand that this Government would not submit longer to such extortionate rentals, and would demand the purchase of machines, or else the transaction of no business with them whatever? Does not the gentleman think that would bring these manufacturers to time?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not agree with the gentleman's premise when he says that owners have been extortionate in their demands, for, as shown by the report of the special committee, there are many machines now being rented for $150 a year, although in the instance the gentleman refers to that machine rents for $400 a year. Yet the report shows that from the results actually attained it is worth three times as much as any machine that is renting for $150 a year.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. In that connection, will the gentleman give me the cost of the Hey-Dolphin machine—the cost of producing it?

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no data in the hands of the committee or of anyone else as to cost, but we know that it is a patented machine.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. As a matter of fact, is there any more machinery about it than about an ordinary sewing machine?

Mr. STAFFORD. Whether there is more machinery about it or not they have an absolute patent, and if this results in a monopoly and gives them an opportunity to extort any price they see fit, the fault would appear to be there and you should change the patent laws——

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Oh, no——

Mr. STAFFORD. And not hamper the Post-Office Department because the manufacturers refuse to sell their machines.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the way to meet that is to refuse to do business with them. I submit that the position of the gentleman is not logical when he says that because these machines, costing not more than an average sewing machine, possibly, must be had that the Government should submit to this extortionate demand.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman assumes that it is only a question of one machine, but there are seven or eight now in use the rent of which is one-third of the amount paid for the machine he refers to. There is no claim that the rate is extortionate as to these other machines, so that the Department would be compelled to purchase them.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. And yet $176,000 is paid for the rental of one machine.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; but $100,000 was so used. However, this report shows that it is the best machine offered at present.

It has been pointed out why it is not best at the present time, at least, for our Government to be forced into the purchase of these machines. It is better to leave the present phraseology so as to leave it discretionary to either purchase or rent. Is it to be assumed that the Post-Office Department is going to do that which is against the best interests of the service? That is the very basis of the gentleman's remarks.

I wish to state further that, as appears from the report, these machines are now in the transition stage, when important and radical improvements are to be expected; so that should the Government be driven to purchase, at this time, one or more patents, it might be a very short time before their superiority would be supplanted by other inventions of far greater utility. Anyone who will read the report closely will be convinced that it would be a shortsighted policy to insist upon an arbitrary course, leaving no discretion with the Department.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just one word, Mr. Chairman, and then I will move to close debate in the hope of an early rising of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House directly to the proposed amendment. Should the amendment of my colleague prevail, it will oblige the Government to buy these machines, if they use them at all. All of these machines are patented. It is not necessary for me to enter into a discussion as to whether the machinery is or is not complicated mechanism. This amendment proposes that the Government should go into the business of buying these patented articles.

The Department feels that there is a necessity for these machines. That is an established truth in every large office. We care for that both by rental and purchase. If they can be purchased, they can be purchased under the authority of the present law as well as under the provision in this item in the pending bill. If they can not be purchased they can be rented.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at present.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee has scaled down this appropriation very considerably. Whatever may have been the method of expenditure of this item in the past, certainly no one has charged that there has been any misappropriation of the fund for the rental of these machines.

There has been more or less criticism as to the purchase of machines by the Department—other machines—but not of the rental. The question of rental depends entirely on the nature of the monopoly which these people hold, and it is a monopoly under the patent laws, the only monoply which the Government recognizes. If, therefore, you strike out the authority to rent and limit it to purchase in this amount, only one of two things can follow. Either to force the Government to buy them at a very high, if not exorbitant, price, because they are patented articles, or do away with the convenience entirely. It is more, however, than a convenience. It is a necessity. I say we have scaled this down, I think with danger to the service in view of the demand, and I believe that we can therefore afford to follow the appropriation, limited as it is, rather than to compel the purchase.

Now I yield to my friend.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. As a matter of fact, did not we do without these canceling machines up to six years ago?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The first appropriation was in 1893, I believe.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. We have done without some other things.

Mr. OVERSTREET. We could do away with the railway postal cars and the money that is being spent for them, but that would not expedite the business like these later facilities.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I am perfectly frank to say that, rather than be robbed as these people have robbed the Department, I would be willing to dispense with the postal car.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give us an estimate of how many additional clerks would be required in the post-offices if these machines were done away with?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was coming to that, and I am glad that the gentleman made the suggestion.

Mr. MANN. One of these machines will do more canceling than 100 clerks.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was going to reply that the increased cost to do this same work by the increased number of clerks would be more than double, in my judgment.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I should like for the gentleman to name an office where they took out any clerks by reason of the fact of having machines in there. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. They have not taken them out for the reason that the gentleman knows the increase of business——

Mr. MADDOX. If one would do the business of a hundred clerks, there ought to have been some discharged.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, it is not an unusual thing for more than a hundred or several hundred clerks to be given in one year to such an office as the Chicago office. It is not an unusual thing by reason——

Mr. MADDOX. The Chicago post-office is not the only post-office in the United States.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is true; but these machines are used entirely in the first-class offices, as I understand; a very limited number in the second-class offices.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads that these machines we are renting and paying an annual rental of about $400 apiece for cost about $150. Is that so?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should say not. I do not know who your authority is for that, but I go by the record of the Department, which shows that they have been unable to ascertain the cost. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state what gentleman stated that?

Mr. TAWNEY. I stated a member of your committee stated a moment ago that they had no data, but he understood that they cost $150 apiece.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I differ entirely from that.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I do not believe they cost half that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think they cost many, many times more, and that only shows the difference of opinion. None of us have the data. They are patented articles, and that is what makes them cost so much. I do not know what the cost is to the owner and know nothing about that. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this item and amendments be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Division.

The committee accordingly divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 38. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LIVERNASH. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, remarks upon what, upon the amendment which the gentleman offered?

Mr. LIVERNASH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] asks unanimous consent that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the amendment offered by him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous items in the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, $1,000: Provided, That a sum not exceeding $300 may be used for the purchase of city directories and books of reference.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the post-office appropriation bill and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

RESIGNATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letter, which was read, and ordered to lie on the table:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, March 22, 1904.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have this day forwarded to the governor of Ohio my resignation as a Representative in Congress from the Nineteenth Congressional district, to take effect at noon to-morrow.

I have the honor to remain, very truly, yours,

CHARLES DICK.

The SPEAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 196. An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians in the State of North Dakota, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 60:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to print from the stereotype plates 2,000 copies each of the reports of the governors of Alaska, Arizona, New Mexico, and Oklahoma for 1903, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Department of the Interior—

to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

H. R. 3565. An act directing the Secretary of War to expend $125,000 heretofore appropriated for a channel through Sabine Lake, Texas; and

H. R. 6787. An act to confirm and validate patents to certain lands situated in the Bitter Root Valley, State of Montana, above the mouth of the Lo Lo Fork of the Bitter Root River.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Accounts was discharged from the further consideration of House resolution No. 244, and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. PATTERSON of Tennessee was excused from further attendance on the sessions of the House for the present, on account of serious illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1840); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10004) to authorize the Vulcan Coal Company, of Vulcan, W. Va., to bridge the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at Vulcan, Mingo County, W. Va., where the same forms the boundary line between the States of West Virginia and Kentucky, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1841); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9669) to prevent the adulteration of blue grass, orchard grass, and clover seed, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1842); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 23, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. QUAY. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania objects. The Journal will be read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, and it was approved.

PACIFIC COAST JOBBERS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I rise to a personal explanation. I desire to have a correction of the RECORD made.

On the 8th of March I received the following letter, dated from the Pacific Coast Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association, which I will read:

PACIFIC COAST JOBBERS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Francisco, Cal., February 12, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We beg to advise you that the following resolution regarding the bill to remove restrictions from the interstate-commerce act has been unanimously adopted by the executive committee of this association, representing over 200 of the largest jobbing and manufacturing concerns on the Pacific coast.

The resolution follows:

"Resolved, That this association views with alarm the possibility of the passage of Senate bill 3937, and hereby requests the Pacific coast Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best efforts to defeat same."

Yours, respectfully,

PACIFIC COAST JOBBERS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION.
H. D. LOVELAND, President.
HAMILTON W. BARNARD, Secretary.

I presented that resolution to the Senate on the 8th of March, and the RECORD makes the following statement:

He—

also presented a memorial of the Pacific Coast Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association, of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

This morning I received the following letter from the Pacific Coast Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association:

PACIFIC COAST JOBBERS AND MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
San Francisco, Cal., March 17, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. MITCHELL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We notice that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reporting the proceedings of the Senate on Tuesday, March 8, 1904, there occurs on page 3112, under the heading of "Petitions," etc., presented by your good self, the following paragraph:

"He also presented a memorial of the Pacific Coast Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association, of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce."

There must have been some error in reporting or printing this paragraph, as any and all communications which we have forwarded to you have advocated an increase in the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission and opposed any curtailment of the authority and scope of that Commission, which we regard as too limited at the present time.

In order that our sentiments may be properly understood by the honorable Senators, we would much appreciate it if you will kindly publicly correct the paragraph appearing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by stating, as is the fact, that this association favors the passage of such amendments to the interstate commerce act as will properly increase the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and is unalterably opposed to any bill which would have the contrary effect.

Yours, very respectfully,
H. W. BARNARD,
Secretary.

I do not think the reporters are to be blamed at all for the statement which was made. I think perhaps the letter was ambiguous to a certain extent, and they might readily have made the statement which appears in the RECORD. I did not at the time of submitting the resolution make any statement. I present these letters in order that the association may be placed right on the RECORD.

MARY A. SHAW.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Mary A. Shaw v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 53) authorizing the reprinting of certain documents to be sold by the superintendent of documents; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11449) to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River;

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 55) providing for the publication of the reports of the Board of Managers and Inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) for the printing of 5,000 copies, with accompanying maps and illustrations, of the report of the governor of New Mexico to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, and the printing of 1,000 copies of the latest map of said Territory; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) providing that the bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology be printed in octavo.

The message further returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 36) to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mail.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 14256) making an appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SENATOR FROM OHIO.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the legislature of Ohio has elected Hon. Charles Dick to fill the vacancy in our membership occasioned by the death of my late colleague, Mr. Hanna. Mr. Dick's credentials have been presented to the Senate and filed. He is now present, and I ask that he may be qualified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-elect will present himself at the desk, the Chair will administer the oath required by law.

Mr. Dick was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. FORAKER, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

UNVEILING OF STATUE OF GENERAL SHERMAN.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on the 17th instant, to report a substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution reported as a substitute, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in the form such as is customary in the case of eulogies 12,000 copies of the proceedings and accompanying documents, with suitable proce plates to be bound therewith, upon the unveiling of the statue of Gen. William T. Sherman, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies, of which 200 copies shall be bound in full morocco, to be distributed under the direction of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library in such manner as, in his judgment, may be desirable.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read again. There was some confusion, and it was difficult to get its purport.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read, at the request of the Senator from Missouri.

The concurrent resolution was again read; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

LAND AT PORT ANGELES, STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. KEARNS. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9777) granting to the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, for parking purposes, certain portions of the Government reserve in said city, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask that it be now considered.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 65) providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HALE submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $195,260.43 to pay amounts found due the several States for expenses incurred and paid by them under act of July 27, 1861, as recommended by the second comptroller of the Treasury, November 21, 1892, and December 2, 1892, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN WALLER.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill (S. 36) to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mails, was ordered to a third reading, and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF DESERT-LAND ACT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The second reading of the bill introduced yesterday by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] will now be in order.

The bill (S. 5168) to repeal the desert-land act and the commutation provision of the homestead act was read the second time by its title.

Mr. GIBSON. As the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill was not concluded yesterday, I have consented to defer my remarks until to-morrow at the conclusion of the morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will still lie on the table.

BERTHA A. HOLZER.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Bertha A. Holzer, widow of W. J. Holzer, late a folder in the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

LEONARD E. WALES.

Mr. BALL submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Leonard E. Wales, in trust for Edward R. Elkinton, William R. Elkinton, John Y. Elkinton, and Mary W. Elkinton, minor children of David W. Elkinton, late conductor of elevator in the Senate of the United States, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HOURS OF LABOR.

On motion of Mr. McCOMAS, it was Ordered, That 1,500 additional copies of S. 489, "limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," be printed for the use of the Committee on Education and Labor.

DOCUMENTS ON CRIMINOLOGY.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I hold in my hand four public documents on the subject of criminology. I ask that the four may be reprinted as one document, the supply having been exhausted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the documents referred to by him, on the subject of criminology, may be printed as one document. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not going to object to that order, but I want to say that I think the Senate has been bothered about long enough by Mr. MacDonald, who is the author of these documents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. COCKRELL. Did I understand the Senator from Connecticut to object to the printing of that document?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator did not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not hear what the document is.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not object to it, but I said that I thought the Senate had had about enough of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. If we have had enough of it, enough is enough. Let us hear what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] has asked for the reprinting as one document of four documents on criminology, prepared by Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. KEAN. I object to the printing of the documents, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

PAYMENTS TO DELAWARE INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. QUAY, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish forthwith to the Senate a statement showing the difference in value between coin and currency on payments made by the United States to the Delaware Indians, from and including the year 1862 to and including the year 1878; said payments being set forth in the report of the subcommittee of the Senate on Indian Affairs, dated March 29, 1902.

Mr. STEWART. I do not think this resolution will be necessary under the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. It would take some time to get this information, and I think that amendment covers the point.

Mr. QUAY. It may not be necessary and it may. It can do no harm.

Mr. STEWART. It can do no harm; but the information can not be obtained in time for the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. I do not know.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me there are some complications about this matter of the difference between currency and gold that can not well be settled by a resolution such as the Senator now proposes. I think there ought to be some direction more in detail to the Secretary of the Treasury as to how he shall make this computation. I have just been looking at the treaties to see what was required under them. Will the Senator allow the resolution to lie over for the present? No information that can now come from the Secretary can be of value in the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. QUAY. I think it very possible that information may be had from the Secretary of the Treasury that will be of importance in the passage of the Indian appropriation bill, but I have no objection to the resolution going over in order that the Senator may examine the treaties which he has before him; and I do not myself care to have it passed without looking at them. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. I say the resolution can go over for the present. I do not want to have it go to the Calendar. I want to have it lie on the table, so that I can call it up to-day if I shall desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the resolution may lie on the table subject to his call. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 55) providing for the publication of the reports of the Board of Managers and inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903;

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) for the printing of 5,000 copies, with accompanying maps and illustrations, of the report of the governor of New Mexico to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, and the printing of 1,000 copies of the latest map of said Territory; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) providing that the bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology be printed in octavo.

The bill (H. R. 11449) to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 53) authorizing the reprinting of certain documents to be sold by the superintendent of documents, which was on page 1, line 12, after "sale," to insert "such order for reprinting to be subject to the approval of the Secretary or head of the Department in which such public document shall have originated."

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS J. HOBBS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 3256) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass. It will not occupy a moment.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it not novel to direct a subordinate, a disbursing officer, to issue a check?

Mr. LODGE. I supposed it was in the usual form.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the Secretary of the Treasury ought to be directed to issue it.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that it be changed so as to read "that the Secretary be authorized to cause to be issued a check," etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "That," at the beginning of the bill, strike out the words "Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk of;" insert after the word "the," in the same line, the words "Secretary of the;" in the same line, after the word "Treasury," strike out the word "Department;" and in line 4 strike out the word "issue" and insert in lieu thereof the words "cause to be issued."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, which will be stated.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "said" and insert "an;" and in the same line, after the word "check," to insert:

Issued by him on the 8th day of July, 1903, numbered 40008, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in favor of Crane & Company, for the sum of $5,220.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, instructed to cause to be issued a duplicate of an original check issued by him on the 8th day of July, 1903, No. 40008, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in favor of Crane & Co., for the sum of $5,220, under such regulations in regard to its issue and payment as have been prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury for the issue of duplicate checks under the provisions of section 3646, Revised Statutes of the United States.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSAGE RESERVATION.

Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senator from Nevada in charge of the Indian appropriation bill to allow me to call up for passage the bill (H. R. 8878) to extend the provisions of the act of January 21, 1903, to the Osage Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes. It was favorably reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with sundry amendments by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], and it will take only a moment. It consists of only about twenty lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STEWART. I yield for that purpose.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, in line 8, after the word "are," to insert "as to the use of stone;" and on page 2, line 1, after the word "therein," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided further, That all limitation on the export of stone and gravel for any and all uses and purposes from any part of the Indian Territory and the Osage Nation, in Oklahoma, are hereby removed.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the use of timber and stone for domestic and industrial purposes in the Indian Territory,' approved June 6, 1900," are, as to the use of stone, hereby extended to and shall include the Osage Reservation, in the Territory of Oklahoma: Provided, That the proceeds from the lands in said Osage Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory, shall go to the Osage Nation or allottees therein.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF EIGHTH STREET NW.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator from Nevada to yield to me to ask for the consideration of a bill which I feel sure will pass without objection. If there is any objection to it, I will withdraw the request for its consideration.

Mr. STEWART. On that condition I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3454) for the extension of Eighth street NW., or Wrights road, District of Columbia.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEWART. I now ask that the reading of the bill may be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senate to the item on page 53 of this bill, beginning in line 10 and ending with line 19, for payment to J. Hale Sypher of $50,000. The point of order was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. The Chair is of opinion that the private claim under Rule XVI barred from appropriation bills must necessarily be a claim against the Government of the United States, which would take money from the United States Treasury. This item is not such a claim. It is neither against the Government nor does it take Government money from the Treasury. In the opinion of the Chair the committee having jurisdiction of the subject had a right to report this item favorably and thus make it in order. So the Chair overrules the point of order raised by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. Then, Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment of the committee ought to be amended. I move, after the word "dollars," in line 12 on page 53, in the amendment of the committee, to strike out the remainder of the clause; so that, if amended, it would read:

For payment to J. Hale Sypher, to be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, $50,000.

The reason I do this is because, so far as I can find, there is absolutely no agreement under date of November 7, 1891, between J. Hale Sypher and the Choctaw Nation; and I should like very much if the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] would furnish to the Senate information as to the services rendered by this claimant.

Mr. STEWART. I suggest that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who is familiar with the subject, make the explanation.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has given some attention to this subject. I really do not myself know what is the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment of the committee submitted by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, line 12, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out:

which said sum the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay immediately to J. Hale Sypher upon execution by him of a receipt in full of all claims against the Choctaw Nation for his services and expenses as the attorney of said nation under contract entered into on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1891, between said J. Hale Sypher and the said Choctaw Nation.

So as to make the clause read:

For payment to J. Hale Sypher, to be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, $50,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I understand that some Senator has asked that the nature of this claim might be explained. I have not been a very strenuous advocate of inserting this amendment, though I assented to it being placed in the bill. I can state, I think, what the nature of it is.

In 1891 there was an amendment put on the Indian appropriation bill to pay the Choctaws and Chickasaws, in round numbers, about $3,000,000 for an alleged title to lands which had been opened for settlement to the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes. That grew out of transactions long ago, and was known as "the leased district." This land was west of the ninety-eighth meridian. I insisted at the time that the Indians had no title; that they had parted with it after the lease to the Government, but the Senate thought otherwise, and adopted the amendment.

The money could not be drawn, under the amendment, until the President approved the conveyances. President Harrison refused to approve the conveyances, and sent to Congress a message in which he said that he believed there was so much fraud connected with the obtaining of that amendment that he was not disposed to give his assent under any circumstances to anything which would result in the payment of this money.

There had been a pretty extensive and vigorous lobby employed by one set of Indians to procure this money. When the money was finally paid, $692,000 of it was paid out to attorneys and lobbyists; but while the question was pending before the President as to whether he would approve the leases the Choctaw council discharged all of the attorneys who had been employed under its authority theretofore and appointed new representatives to come to Washington and to employ counsel for the purpose of procuring this money.

That delegation embraced the Delegate, the governor, and one other prominent Choctaw. They came here and employed Mr. Sypher. They made a contract with him to pay him 10 per cent of the amount to be procured. He worked at it faithfully, and I think it is in evidence that he devoted all the time that was necessary for about a year and a half to try to secure the payment of this money. But President Harrison went out of office without paying the money or without approving the conveyances. The conveyances were prepared by Mr. Sypher, and they were signed by this delegation that employed him. He asserts that he had at last convinced President Harrison that the money ought to be paid, and that the only reason it was not paid while the matter was in his charge was because there was not sufficient money in the Treasury.

But when President Cleveland came in the Choctaw people came here with a new set of agents to induce President Cleveland to approve the conveyances. I do not wish to go into any scandals about that, and decline to do so. President Cleveland, however, after two or three months' consideration, approved the conveyances and the money was paid. It was paid mainly to Mr. Stanley and Mr. Green McCurtain, Mr. McCurtain being one of the committee that had employed Mr. Sypher. As I said, the money being paid, $692,000 of it was distributed among lobbyists and attorneys, giving Mr. Sypher nothing at all and not recognizing him. The balance of it was distributed to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, except about $37,000, which, as I have always understood, was retained by the governor, upon the plea that he had to pay it out in connection with obtaining the legislation.

This whole matter has been, to my mind, one of the most notorious instances of lobbying that I have ever known since my coming to the Senate. I introduced a resolution which called upon the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the Senate what had become of this money. A good deal of it was traced; some of it could not be traced. But the Choctaws never paid Mr. Sypher a dollar. He labored assiduously trying to get this money paid. On the whole, I have thought the Indians owed Mr. Sypher something. He did not absolutely procure the payment of the money—that is to say, it did not pass through his hands—but he had cleared the way for it so that Mr. Cleveland, as President, found that the way was clear.

We have not felt that the Choctaws were doing the fair thing by Mr. Sypher. We do not allow him the 10 per cent under his contract, but we allow him what may be called a quantum meruit for his services during that year and a half, which we believe to have been faithfully rendered and to have been of value to the Choctaw Nation in securing the payment of this money.

I do not know that I can state the matter any more fully than I have.

Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator has fairly and fully stated the case.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask what the statement of the Department is in regard to this claim, and whether the Senator from Nevada has a letter from the Interior Department or the Indian Commissioner in regard to it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there is any recommendation for it by the Department or by the Indian Commissioner.

Mr. STEWART. Was there not a letter before the subcommittee? It is a matter that was referred to the subcommittee. I do not know that I have ever read the letter.

Mr. LODGE. Is there a letter?

Mr. BARD. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STEWART. Let the letter be read, so that we may see what it is.

Mr. LODGE. The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 10, 1904.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: Acknowledging receipt of a copy of Senate bill 3359, "A bill for the relief of the attorney and representative of the Choctaw Nation," by reference of the chairman of your committee, with request for report thereon for the information of your committee, I have the honor to inclose herewith a copy of a report by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in the matter, a copy of the bill having been referred to him on January 15, 1904, in which he recommends, for reasons fully set forth, that the Department report adversely to the bill.

I concur in the views of the Commissioner, and earnestly recommend, in justice to the Choctaw Nation, that the bill be not favorably considered.

Respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. KEAN. Now, Mr. President, I should like to have the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs read.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is one thing which I ought to have said in my explanation, which is this: That the reason the Choctaw people give for not recognizing Mr. Sypher is that they obtained from the attorney-general of the Choctaw Nation an opinion saying that the act under which he was employed was unconstitutional; but they availed themselves of the act so far as the preparation of the leases was concerned. They acted under that to get the money, and then said that they repudiated the contract.

Mr. STEWART. But the commissioners appointed under the act continued to receive the money.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They repudiated the contract, claiming that it was unconstitutional, but they went forward under it as to everything else except paying the money.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, in 1901 Congress adopted what is substantially an effort to make these Indians pay their debts. Some little experience of mine connected with them justifies me in saying that they never pay if they can help it. In the act making appropriations for the Indian Service for the fiscal year 1902, approved March 3, 1901, the following provision was inserted:

For payment to the heirs of Albert Pike, deceased, to be paid as hereinafter provided, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation——

Mr. ALLISON. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. TELLER. Page 22 of the act making appropriations for the Indian Service, approved March 3, 1901—

$75,000; which said sum the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay immediately as follows: Thirty thousand dollars to—

I need not read that. It simply gives the names of the members of the family and the administrator to whom the amount should be paid. The paragraph continues:

upon execution by each of the said heirs and said administrator of a receipt in full for all their respective claims against the Choctaw Nation for the services of Albert Pike in the collection from the United States of what is commonly known as the "net-proceeds claim."

In that case Albert Pike had rendered service to these Indians for a number of years. They had declined to pay him, as they do on all occasions decline to pay honest attorneys who do their work. After an investigation by the Committee on Indian Affairs, this claim was believed to be just. It was reported in the bill to which I have referred, which was passed and became a law, and the money was paid. There is nothing unusual in the pending claim, and I think we can also find some other precedents for it.

Because the Indians paid a large amount of money, that is no reason for saying when the money was paid to them that Mr. Sypher should not be paid for his work, for no part of that $600,000 was earned in the business that Sypher was engaged in. Sypher had prepared all the papers. He had done, up to the time President Harrison went out of office, everything that it was necessary to do, except the payment of the money. At that time the probability is that it would have been paid if the Treasury had been as flush as it has been at some other times. It was subsequently paid in the early days of the Cleveland Administration, and, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], it appears from the Treasury Department that a large sum of money was paid out, ostensibly and professedly, as I understand, for services rendered in securing the passage of the original bill, which was the cause of the President declining to pay anything until he knew something about where it was going. I do not understand that the President meant to say that no part of it should be paid. I think the President's notion was that he would see, when it was paid, that it did not go into the hands of an irresponsible lobby that had really earned nothing.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to inquire of the Senator if he knows how much has been paid to other attorneys connected with the case?

Mr. TELLER. Nothing at all was paid to attorneys out of that money. It was paid to the lobby; and we know who they were. That is shown in the Treasury report. Not one of them, I think, is an attorney, and none of them had been making any claim upon this fund for services rendered. After the passage of the act it was necessary to do a good many things to secure the payment of this money. All of that General Sypher had performed, and all that was left to be done was the payment of the money.

Mr. KEAN. I ask to have the letter to which I have referred read.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that Mr. Sypher had nothing to do with the original lobby, and I have every reason to believe that he protested very vigorously against their being paid anything, saying that it was a robbery of the Indians to pay them anything; but the protest availed very little just at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks for the reading of the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. STEWART. Before that is read, I wish to make a remark.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say just another word. This was not a matter in the Interior Department at all. It was a matter purely in the executive department with the President. The Interior Department had very little to do with it, at least; but there is enough in the Department to show that General Sypher had rendered service to those Indians. It is clear that he procured what you might call the principal steps of securing the form of transfer or release, and all that had to be done by sending or going to the Indian Territory.

Mr. STEWART. What impressed me most was the fact that a law was passed discharging these attorneys or this lobby, or whatever it was, and appointing a commission to employ an attorney to get this payment. That commission came here and employed General Sypher by a written contract. The Senator from California [Mr. BARD] has the contract, and I will ask that it may be printed as a part of my remarks. I will not stop to read it. It is a very full contract.

General Sypher went to work superintending the doing of the things necessary to get the money. The bill was passed and the whole thing straightened up so that the Indians could get the money. He attended to that. The commission came on and cooperated with him; but when they wanted to make a change they got an opinion of their attorney-general that the law under which Sypher was employed was unconstitutional; but the commissioners who employed him were continued in office. They came here, and they got the money on the papers which had been prepared and filed by Sypher.

It seems they thought there was nothing unconstitutional about it but the employment of Sypher. That looks to me so crooked that it rather hurts their case, because if it was unconstitutional to pay Sypher to carry out that contract, it was unconstitutional to pay over any of the money. The whole thing was an absurd excuse, undoubtedly, and although I have not investigated the matter particularly myself, the subcommittee investigated it very thoroughly.

I will ask the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] to send up the papers that he has so that they may be printed in the proceedings in order that we may have the record complete.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, as I understand this amendment, it does not involve this claim at all. The amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], as I understand it, only involves the question of taking a receipt in full under the contract made by Mr. Sypher with the Indians. Now, if there is any reason why he should not give a receipt in full under that contract, I should like to hear it.

Mr. STEWART. There is no reason, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As soon as the Senator from Nevada has surrendered the floor it will be read.

Mr. KEAN. I thought the Senator from Nevada had yielded the floor.

Mr. STEWART. I have no objection to the amendment, so far as that is concerned, but I should like to have in the RECORD the contract and the documents which the Senator from California has. I do not ask that they be read, but that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks that the contract and the papers in the case may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARD. I will call attention first to the act of the council of the Choctaw Nation, found in this document on pages 38 and 39, which will be read by the Secretary, and, in addition, a copy of the contract between the nation and Mr. Sypher.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from California ask that they be read?

Mr. BARD. It was suggested by the Senator from Nevada that they be read.

Mr. STEWART. No, I do not ask it.

Mr. KEAN. I ask that they be read.

Mr. STEWART. I do not ask it unless somebody wants them read. However, I want them to appear in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the documents may be printed in the RECORD as a part of his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States did on the 3d day of March, A. D. 1891, make an appropriation of the sum of $2,991,450 in favor of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians, for their right, title, and interest in certain lands west of ninety-eighth degree west longitude, and now occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapahoe tribes of Indians;

And whereas the attorneys and others employed in the prosecution of the claim by the commissioners appointed by the Choctaw government have failed to procure the payment of said appropriation to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, as required by the act of the general council of April, 1891;

And whereas it appears that contracts made by said commissioners with their attorneys have never been approved by the Interior Department as required by the United States statutes, thereby precluding said attorneys from being of any use to the Choctaw Nation in procuring said appropriation, and it is believed that said attorneys with supposed contracts are an absolute hindrance to the prompt payment of said appropriation, thereby depriving the Choctaws of their just dues: Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it further enacted by the general council of the Choctaw Nation, That any and all contracts made by the Choctaw commissioners with any attorneys in connection with the appropriation of $2,991,450, and not approved by the Department of the Interior, are declared void and of no effect.

SEC. 2. That the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation and the national treasurer and the special delegate heretofore appointed be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to proceed at once to Washington City, D. C., and make a formal demand for this money, and to this end they are authorized to procure such assistance and to take necessary steps to procure said money before the 1st day of December, 1891, and they are further authorized to sign the necessary relinquishment to said lands west of the ninety-eighth degree west longitude, now occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes of Indians.

SEC. 3. That all acts or parts of acts, resolutions or parts of resolutions, except the "disbursement bill known as the per capita bill," of April, 1891, coming in conflict with this are hereby repealed, and this act take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Approved, October 19, 1891. J. H. BRYANT, Acting P. C. C. N.

Proposed by R. J. Ward.

Agreement.

Whereas the Choctaw Nation of Indians in the Indian Territory have a just and valid claim against the United States of America for certain money or moneys appropriated by act of Congress approved March 3, 1891, to pay said nation of Indians for all their right, title, interest, and claim which said nation may have in and to certain lands designated and described in the act aforesaid, are desirous of securing the services of J. Hale Sypher, an attorney and conselor at law, to prosecute said claim, and to collect the amount appropriated by the act of Congress aforesaid, to-wit, $2,206,987.50:

Now, therefore, this agreement, made and entered into by and between J. Hale Sypher, attorney and counselor, party of the first part, and Governor Wilson N. Jones, principal chief; Hon. Green McCurtain, national treasurer, and Hon. Thomas D. Ainsworth, special delegate, commissioners, appointed by act of the general council of the Choctaw Nation approved October 19, 1891, parties of the second part;

Witnesseth, That for and in consideration of the professional services of the party of the first part in and about the prosecution of the said claim and the services of others who may be employed, or authorized by him to act in the premises, either as colleague or as substitute, the parties of the second part hereby promise and agree for themselves and their heirs and legal representatives to pay to the party of the first part, his heirs, substitute or legal representatives, a fee equal to 10 per cent of whatever sum of money or other evidence of indebtedness which may at any time be awarded or recovered on account of said claim, and the said fee shall become due and payable immediately upon the making of said award or payment, and the parties of the second part hereby stipulate that the party of the first part, his substitute or legal representatives, shall have direction and control of the prosecution of said claim to its final termination and adjustment, with power to receive, receipt for, indorse, and collect, any draft, warrant, or other evidence of indebtedness, that may be issued or rendered in payment thereof, and, further, to retain from the proceeds of any such draft or other evidence of indebtedness the amount of the fee herein stipulated; and, if requisite to the faithful performance of this agreement, the parties of the second part hereby authorize and bind their heirs and legal representatives to invest the party of the first part, his substitute or legal representatives, with like power, to the end that the provisions of this agreement shall fully be carried into effect. And the parties of the second part further agree to furnish all evidence and papers that may be lawfully required in the prosecution of said claim, and to execute from time to time and deliver to the party of the first part such powers of attorney or other papers as may be necessary for the prosecution and full settlement and collection of said claim, and the payment of said fee.

It is further agreed that this agreement shall not be affected in any particular by any revocation of the authority granted or which may be granted to the party of the first part, nor by any services rendered or which may be rendered by others or by the parties of the second part, his heirs or legal representatives, or by any of them.

This agreement is limited by the provisions of the act of the Choctaw council of October 19, 1891, requiring necessary steps to be taken to procure said money before the 1st day of December, 1891. (See act.)

And the party of the first part agrees to diligently prosecute said claim to the best of his professional ability to a final termination.

Witness our hands and seals this 7th day of November, A. D. 1891.

Mr. KEAN. I now call for the reading of the letter which I sent to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks for the reading of a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 9, 1904.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Department letter of January 15, 1904 (I. T. D., 216-1904), inclosing for report a copy of a bill (S. 3359) entitled "A bill for the relief of the attorney and representative of the Choctaw Nation," which provides:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to and due, or out of any funds which may hereafter become due, the Choctaw Nation, $220,698.75 to the attorney and representative of said Choctaw Nation, as per contract duly executed by said nation and under a power of attorney, set out on page 25 of the message of the President of the United States of February 18, 1892, to the Senate of the United States."

The Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1891 (26 Stats., 1025), appropriated $2,991,450 to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians for all their interest in certain lands occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, under Executive order, which had been ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty with said nations, concluded April 28, 1866 (14 Stats., 769), and provided that three-fourths of the appropriation should be paid to such person or persons as are or shall be duly authorized by the laws of the Choctaw Nation to receive the same, at such time and in such sums as directed and required by the legislative authority of the Choctaw Nation, and also provided for the payment, in a similar manner, of the remaining one-fourth to the representatives of the Chickasaw Nation. The act made the appropriation "immediately available and to become operative upon the execution, by the duly appointed delegates of said respective nations specially authorized thereto by law, of releases and conveyances to the United States of all right, title, interest, and claim of said respective nations of Indians in and to said land (not including Greer County, which is now in dispute) in manner and form satisfactory to the President of the United States; and said releases and conveyances, when fully executed and delivered, shall operate to extinguish all claim of any kind and character of said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians in and to the tract of country to which said releases and conveyances shall apply."

On March 17, 1891, the principal chief of the Choctaw Nation addressed a letter to the President requesting information as to what form of release and conveyance named in the act of 1891 would be satisfactory to the Government. This letter was referred to this Office and was the subject of office report of April 29, 1891, a copy of which was transmitted by the Department to the President in a communication dated May 6, 1891. In that communication Secretary Noble referred to an interview had by him with Mr. Leo E. Bennett, United States Indian agent at the Union Agency, Ind. T., "regarding the manner in which this business has been conducted in the Choctaw Nation" and inclosed an affidavit of Mr. Bennett, in which it was stated that Robert J. Ward, one of the delegates of the Choctaw Nation, and who, among others, was to execute the release and conveyance to the United States, is a senator in that nation's council to negotiate the final cession of the Choctaws' interest in the lands west of the ninety-eighth meridian. Secretary Noble further said:

"By an act of the general council of the Choctaws (No. 34) entitled 'An act to authorize the appointment of three commissioners to treat with the United States Commissioners in reference to the leased district, and for other purposes,' approved November 5, 1889, Ward was appointed as one of the three commissioners, the other two, J. H. Standley and H. C. Harris, who, you will perceive, are also among those to execute the present deed; that by an act of the general council (No. 14) entitled 'An act contracting to the delegation appointed to negotiate with the authorities of the United States one-fourth of the recovery out of the "leased district,"' so called, etc., 'the compensation was fixed at 25 per cent.' This was approved December 24, 1889.

"While this last act was pending and while the names of the delegates were before the senate of the Choctaw Nation, pending confirmation, Ward was approached, as he says, by one Thibeau, a white man, residing in Paris, Tex., who said there was a plot on foot among certain senators to defeat said measure; that if he (Ward) was willing to pay for it he could fix the matter; and Ward was induced finally to give seven promissory notes, hereinafter described, to induce the confirmation of the delegation and the approval of the fee of 25 per cent out of the funds recovered. These notes were given, he states, on the 23d and 24th days of December, 1889, and were to the following persons and amounts:

W. W. Hampton, senator	$15,000
L. W. Oakes, senator	10,000
H. P. Ward, senator	5,000
Columbus Irwin, senator	5,000
Simon Wilson, senator	2,500
J. B. Jeter	10,000
G. T. Thibeau	20,000

"The form of note is inclosed, and it seems that each note was signed by R. J. Ward, who also signed the names of Standley and Harris. The note to Hampton appears to be for $12,500 instead of $15,000, as stated in the affidavit.

"The number of Senators thus to be compensated formed a majority of all the body that was to confirm the per cent and authorize the delegation to act in making these conveyances. If true, therefore, these facts should impair the validity of the consent apparently given by the Choctaw Nation to these conveyances and involve the question of good faith as to the whole transaction.

"There is no evidence corroborating the statements of Ward, but inasmuch as he criminates himself in the transaction it is hardly presumable that he has told an entire falsehood.

"It is impossible for me, with this knowledge, which I communicate to you, to recommend the completion of this transaction without an investigation into the facts thus asserted by one of the parties implicated, and which statement seems to have been voluntarily proffered."

Secretary Noble accordingly recommended that all action by the President "be postponed until the Ward statement can be laid before Congress, and due investigation into the facts be properly made by that body. He concluded with the statement that—

"The allowance made to the delegation of 25 per cent would amount to $747,862.50, and this enormous sum of money for the services rendered leads to grave suspicion, if the facts mentioned have any basis whatever, of a much wider conspiracy against the public welfare both of the Choctaws and the United States."

The communication from the Department was transmitted by the President to Congress with his message of February 18, 1892, in which message the President, after alluding to the section in the Indian appropriation act of 1891, said in part:

"If this section had been submitted to me as a separate measure, especially during the closing hours of the session, I should have disapproved it; but as the Congress was then in its last hours a disapproval of the general Indian appropriation bill, of which it was a part, would have resulted in consequences so far-reaching and disastrous that I felt it my duty to approve the bill. But as a duty was devolved upon me by the section quoted, viz, the acceptance and approval of the conveyances provided for, I have felt bound to look into the whole matter, and, in view of the facts which I shall presently mention, to postpone any executive action until these facts could be submitted to Congress.

"Very soon after the passage of the law it came to my knowledge that the Choctaw legislature had entered into an agreement with three citizens of that tribe to pay to them, as compensation for procuring this legislation, 25 per cent of any appropriation that might be made by Congress. The amount to be secured by these three agents, under this agreement, out of the three-fourths interest in the appropriation of the Choctaw Nation, is $560,896. I have information that a contract was made by the Chickasaws to pay about 10 per cent of their one-fourth interest to the agents and attorneys who represented them.

"Within a month after the passage of the law R. J. Ward, one of the agents who was to divide with his two associates the enormous sum to be paid by the Choctaws, presented to me an affidavit dated April 4, 1891, which is herewith submitted. It appears from his statement that the action of the Choctaw council in this matter was corruptly influenced by the execution of certain notes signed by Ward for himself and his associates in sums varying from $2,500 to $15,000. His associates deny any knowledge of this, but the giving and existence of these notes is not refuted. The statement of the two associates of Ward, denying any knowledge of or participation in this fraud, are also submitted, together with other papers relating to the matter. Whatever may be the fact as to the use or nonuse of corrupt methods to secure this legislation from the Choctaw council, I do not think the Congress of the United States should so legislate upon this matter as to give effect to such a contract, which I am sure must have been unnoticed when the measure was pending. If the relations of these Indians to the United States are those of a ward, Congress should protect them from such extortionate exactions. We can not assume that the expenses and services of a committee of three persons to represent this claim before Congress could justly assume such proportions. The making of such a contract seems to convey implications which I am sure are wholly unjust.

"After the passage of the appropriation bill legislation was had by the Choctaw Nation looking to the completion of the contract made with their delegates as to the payment of this money; but subsequently, when it was supposed that this extraordinary arrangement might require me to bring the matter to the attention of Congress, an act was passed by the Choctaw general council, approved October 19, 1891, declaring all contracts made by the Choctaw delegates with any attorneys in connection with this appropriation void and of no effect. A copy of this law will be found with the papers submitted. There has also been submitted to me an unofficial copy of the opinion of the attorney-general of the Choctaw Nation, holding that this last legislation is unconstitutional and void. I am of the opinion that, if this appropriation is to stand, provision should be made for protecting these tribes against extortionate claims for compensation in procuring action by Congress.

"Copies of the several laws passed by the Choctaw Nation with reference to this matter will be found in the accompanying papers."

All of the foregoing correspondence will be found printed in Senate Executive Document No. 42, Fifty-second Congress, first session. On pages 24 and 25 of that document will be found the following:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 4, 1891.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES:

SIR: We, the undersigned, commissioners appointed by an act of the general council of the Choctaw Nation approved October 19, 1891, being authorized and directed to proceed to Washington City, D. C., and make a respectful formal demand upon the United States for the payment of the money appropriated by Congress, approved March 3, 1891, do hereby most respectfully appeal to you for just and speedy action in the premises.

We would most respectfully submit that our people, having learned of this appropriation for their benefit by the Congress of the United States, do not understand the cause of the delay in the realization of the money, a portion of which, by recommendation of the governor and general council of the nation, will be set apart for schools and purposes of internal improvements, and therefore much anxiety and restlessness prevails in the nation, to the detriment of harmony, peace, and good order among the people.

We desire to assure the President that no portion of this money is to be paid for improper and illegal purposes. No agents or lobbyists have been employed by us to advocate our claims or to attempt to influence improperly or illegally either Congress or any officer of the Government.

We have employed and engaged the professional legal services of Gen. J. Hale Sypher, who presented us this morning. He is our true and lawful attorney and representative, and we have none other authorized to represent or to act for us.

Very respectfully, your obedient servants,

WILSON N. JONES,
Governor and Principal Chief of the Nation,
GREEN MCCURTAIN,
Treasurer of the Nation,
THOS. D. AINSWORTH,
Special Delegate of the Nation,
Commissioners of the Choctaw Nation of Indians.

J. HALE SYPHER,
Attorney and Counselor.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Subscribed to before me this 4th day of November, A. D. 1891.

[SEAL.] ALLEN R. ADAMS, Notary Public.

The foregoing is the "power of attorney set out on page 25 of the message of the President," referred to in the bill (S. 3359) under consideration. It will therefore be seen that the "attorney and representative" of the Choctaw Nation, for whose relief the bill is intended, is Gen. J. Hale Sypher, an attorney of this city.

It does not appear that any contract between parties claiming to represent the Choctaw Nation and General Sypher was ever submitted to this office for approval under section 2103 of the Revised Statutes. Apparently the only information had by this office that such a contract ever existed is contained in a printed brief prepared by General Sypher, which was recently left by him with the office.

In said brief it is stated that on November 7, 1891, a contract was executed between J. Hale Sypher, attorney and counsellor, party of the first part, and Governor Wilson N. Jones, principal chief; Hon. Green McCurtain, national treasurer, and Hon. Thomas D. Ainsworth, special delegate, commissioners, appointed by act of the general council of the Choctaw Nation, approved October 19, 1891 [April 9, 1891 (?)], parties of the second part, in which it was provided that General Sypher should be paid for his services "10 per cent of whatever sum of money or other evidence of indebtedness which may at any time be awarded or recommended on account of said claim," meaning the claim of the Choctaws to $2,206,987.50, being their share of the appropriation made by the act of 1891.

General Sypher makes the assertion in the closing paragraph of his brief that he "held a properly executed and binding power and contract and labored in this behalf many years and did not receive a dollar," but was defrauded out of his "fairly and justly earned fee."

It should be noted that this alleged contract was executed on November 7, 1891, by a Choctaw delegation appointed under the Choctaw Act of October 19, 1891, which act was declared unconstitutional and void by the national attorney of the Choctaw Nation in an opinion rendered October 30, 1891. (See Senate Ex. Doc. 42, 52d Cong., 1st sess., p. 26.) If this act was void—and undoubtedly it was, as it sought to impair a prior contract obligation, to wit, the agreement of the Choctaws to pay the delegation of 1889 25 per cent of the sum recovered by it to the nation—then every act performed by the new delegation must have been a mere nullity, including the contract made with General Sypher.

General Sypher could not have "labored in this behalf many years," as he states he did in his brief, as less than two years elapsed from November 7, 1891, the date of his contract, until June 2, 1893, the date on which the payment of the $2,206,987.50 was made to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation.

This payment was made by the Government direct to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation without deducting any attorney's fees, but it appears that the nation afterwards compensated its delegation of 1889 and certain attorneys, as follows:

James S. Standley, settlement of amount due delegation of 1889	$551,746.87
D. M. Ross, attorney fee, as per contract	75,000.00
John C. Orrick, attorney fee, as per contract	66,209.60

A detailed statement showing these payments is contained in Senate Executive Document No. 8, Fifty-third Congress, first session.

In a report made by General Sypher as "attorney for the Choctaw Nation," found in a printed pamphlet left by him with this Office, and made subsequent, it is presumed, to the date on which the nation received payment of the money, he characterized the payments to the agents and attorneys as an "outrageous and shameful robbery," which could not have been consummated without the active cooperation and participation of the Choctaw national treasurer. He declared that he had more than earned his fee as stipulated in his contract, but added that since the Choctaws "have been so shamefully and outrageously robbed of nearly one-third of the appropriation," he would wait a reasonable time for the principal chief to take such action as will justly remunerate him (Sypher) for his professional services to the Choctaw Nation.

This last statement of General Sypher may account for his present application to Congress for relief, as embodied in the bill S. 3359. He probably failed to reach a settlement satisfactory to him with the Choctaw national authorities.

It seems to this Office that General Sypher's contract and the claim made by him thereunder must be judged by the standard of the laws of the Choctaw Nation. It never had any standing under Federal law. And as the Choctaw law under which the contract was made was declared unconstitutional and void by competent authority of the Choctaw Nation, it follows that the contract must also be held invalid.

The enactment of the bill S. 3359 is therefore not recommended.

The copy of the bill received with the Department's letter of January 15, 1904, is herewith returned with a copy of this report.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I was not present with the committee when this case was finally adjudicated. However, I was there during the entire time of its consideration.

I do not think there are many things to be taken into consideration in determining what is a just and appropriate sum to be paid to Mr. Sypher as attorney for the Choctaw Nation. These facts appear—they are undisputed: By an act of the Choctaw Nation a certain committee was authorized to proceed to the city of Washington and there employ an attorney who would give his services in securing for them the payment of a claim of about $3,000,000 against the Government of the United States. This commission proceeded to the city of Washington under that act of the Choctaw Nation, and they employed Mr. Sypher to look after their interests.

There is nothing here to show that Mr. Sypher knew of any of the conditions prior to that time or of the fact that this act might, by an Indian attorney, be declared unconstitutional. He went to work under the authority that was given him. He performed services under the contract, which provided for a contingent fee. He was to receive 10 per cent on this sum of nearly $3,000,000 in case he succeeded in securing its payment by the United States to the Choctaw Nation. He was to receive nothing, of course, if he did not succeed. He therefore put his time and his labor against the contingency of securing the proper amount or an amount that would be agreeable to the Choctaw Nation. He absolutely performed, according to the statement which appears before us, nearly two years of actual service, and was almost continuously engaged on that particular case.

Now, it is true that he would have received about $260,000 as his fee had he been successful in securing the payment of the claim. It is true also as a matter of law that if he did not succeed in gaining his point and securing the payment he would have received nothing. Therefore, he is not entitled to recover his 10 per cent.

Now, why did he fail? That is a matter which should be presented to every attorney in the Senate. He failed not because of any lack of diligence on his part, not because of any lack of skill upon his part, but because the Choctaw Nation thought they saw another channel through which they could reach the new Administration that would be more successful. Therefore, without taking into consideration at all the amount of labor that had been performed by General Sypher, they summarily dismissed him, after he had succeeded in preparing all of the papers and doing all of the things required as a condition precedent to securing the payment of this sum. Now, the nation say he should recover nothing whatever for his services, because he was to receive a contingent fee, but they themselves, by their discharge of him, placed it out of his power to secure this fee.

I have the right to assume that, as the following Administration, the Administration of President Cleveland, directed this payment, it was properly directed and that there were legal grounds for its payment. Therefore, I have a right to assume that if the nation had not discharged General Sypher he would have received the entire sum of $265,000; in other words, that it was not necessary to have the lobby which afterwards charged more than $600,000 for their services.

So the question which would be presented to an attorney in this case is one of equity: What should be paid General Sypher upon the quantum meruit for his services? He performed those services. The amount involved was $3,000,000. He would have received a large fee. Therefore, taking into consideration the amount which he would have received had he carried his contract on to the end and secured the payment of the sum, taking into consideration his ability as an attorney, and taking into consideration the length of time he was employed, it seems to me the only question presented here is one as to the amount that should be paid.

It may be that $50,000 for eighteen months' or twenty months' labor is too high; possibly I myself would not have agreed to give him that much had I been there; but I certainly would have voted to pay him a reasonable sum.

It seems to me the fact of the payment that was made to the others, the fact that somebody in the Choctaw Nation, whom they declare to be their attorney-general, found, for convenience, to get rid of this man's contract, that the provision was unconstitutional and that they could discharge him under it, should not be taken into consideration by the Senate in determining what the services of General Sypher were worth.

It is a fact undisputed that the payments which were made were payments that were made upon the papers and upon the record prepared by General Sypher; and therefore if this law was unconstitutional in one part, it seems to me as though the whole act was tainted with unconstitutionality, and they should not have received any sum of money under it. But they did receive their money through the labors that were performed under this contract.

Now, what amount should be paid him? If $50,000 is too much, let us agree upon some sum that will be reasonable and just and appropriate in this matter. He has waited many years for payment for his services. He performed the services. So far as this record shows, he performed them conscientiously and honestly, not only services to secure the $3,000,000, but also to prevent the same nation from being robbed out of $600,000 additional by a set of lobbyists. He has done his duty.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this nation should be compelled—and they have the money—to pay him some reasonable sum. If $50,000 is too much, let us place it at what amount we think would be right and just in view of all the considerations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the amendment to the amendment. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the Senate will disagree to the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I hope not.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know anything about this matter except what I have learned from the statement just made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. If his statement is true—as I have not any doubt it is—I think the money ought to be paid. I shall vote for the amendment, and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the claim for attorney's fees made by Mr. Sypher appearing in this bill is the first knowledge I have had that he had any claim for services. The original matter of the Choctaw Nation is perfectly familiar to most of those who were in the Senate in 1891. This Choctaw and Chickasaw claim, so called, was pending here and pressed upon the consideration of the Senate for a great many years. Finally, in the short session ending the 4th of March, 1891, an amendment was put upon the Indian appropriation bill providing for the payment of $2,900,000, in round numbers, to the Choctaws and Chickasaws for certain lands.

As I remember it, there was in fact no real foundation for this claim. It had been reported against over and over again, and the executive officers had decided that the claim was not one which ought to be paid by the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. You mean the $3,000,000?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean the $3,000,000. But it had been pressed upon Congress year by year, and when the appropriation was finally agreed to by the two Houses there was hesitation by President Harrison in signing the bill. He regarded it, from his investigation, as a claim that had no real foundation, and therefore he would have vetoed the bill but for the fact that it passed upon the 3d of March, and its failure would have required an extra session of Congress. Therefore he signed the bill, there being other matters in the bill important to the Indian Service and which could not have been carried out without an extra session of Congress.

President Harrison, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of the Interior, and others for the time being hesitated about paying over this money, arising out of contracts between various attorneys. I will not call them lobbyists, but they were people employed by the Choctaw Nation to secure from the Government of the United States this payment for certain lands. I think the Senator from Colorado was then a member of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I was.

Mr. ALLISON. He will remember all the facts, perhaps, more clearly than I do, but I think the claims for attorneys' fees amounted to $700,000 or $800,000, and there was a conflict between them as to who were entitled to the money. Among the attorneys who had been employed from time to time, some employed and then discharged, and others employed in their places, there were questions arising, covering several years, as to what should be paid to them. So the money was not presently paid. They were all here, and in one way and another claiming their portion of the money. Finally it was paid. The statute itself provided how it should be finally paid.

The statute—that is, the amendment of the appropriation bill—itself provided that this money should be paid to a duly authorized agent or agents of the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations. They received some $2,200,000, and then of course this swarm of attorneys appeared for their proper proportion of the fees connected with this payment, and, as I see from the paper here, $551,000 was paid to certain people who had served the Choctaw Nation in securing the appropriation.

After that had been done the Committee on Appropriations was badgered certainly for two or three years by other attorneys claiming that in the adjustment of the fees and the payment of the $551,000 they had not been paid or that they had not received their proper share. The heirs and executors of Albert Pike made a very clear statement to the Committee on Appropriations showing that Albert Pike had done a very large amount of service in this regard for the benefit of this claim, and I think on a deficiency appropriation bill provision was afterwards made to pay the heirs of Albert Pike.

Mr. TELLER. It was in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. It was done in the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. KEAN. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Now, of course, with this transaction Mr. J. Hale Sypher had no connection whatever. He appeared on the scene after the money had been appropriated by Congress and at a time when there was no possibility of escaping the payment of the money under that statute unless it was repealed, modified, or suspended in some way. There were no papers, there could possibly be no papers, in the case unless it should be a legal argument to show something for or against a particular attorney who should share in this money after it had been paid over to the Choctaw Nation. What services Mr. Sypher rendered to the Choctaw Nation as respects these attorneys I do not know.

Mr. STEWART. It was necessary for him to make out the deeds and prepare the papers on which the President would act. The approval of the President was required.

Mr. ALLISON. There were deeds of the land, of course, to be made up. The statute required certain things that the Choctaw Nation should do. They had to make out a quit claim deed for this land, which they had sold and had been paid for many years before; but inasmuch as it was necessary to show that there was some title in the Choctaw Nation, the amendment provided that they should execute deeds, as the foundation of the whole claim was that they had some shadowy title to these lands. It was purely a shadowy title.

The Committee on Appropriations at that time investigated it with the utmost care, and so far as I know they were unanimous in the belief that the claim ought not to be paid by the Government of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. What do I understand the Senator to say was unanimous?

Mr. ALLISON. That this Choctaw claim ought not to be paid. I am speaking of the committee.

Mr. TELLER. The Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If the Senator will permit me, he will remember, if he has not already stated it, that when President Harrison sent in his message, a resolution was introduced in the Senate directing it to be paid without the approval of the leases by the President; and the Senator will also remember that both he and myself took quite a part in that discussion and that the resolution did not pass the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I had not stated that, and it is not material to what I was about to say.

Now, Mr. President, I have no doubt that Mr. Sypher did some work here. That is shown by the fact that he went to the Choctaw people and got an agreement out of them to pay him 10 per cent of an appropriation which had already been made by Congress.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator that I think the evidence will hardly justify the statement that he went to them at all. They came to him.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. TELLER. They came to him and solicited his assistance.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to do injustice to Mr. Sypher. The three commissioners probably came here and employed him.

Mr. TELLER. It was after the President had declined to make the payment.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Mr. Sypher was employed, and he undoubtedly did work, but that work was done for the Choctaw Nation, and it was done under a contract with them and not under a contract, as I understand, that we are bound to respect, because it was not registered in the Interior Department, as every contract must be, the theory being that it must receive the approval of the Secretary of the Interior before it is registered.

He performed that service and ought to be paid. I have no doubt, a reasonable fee. Whether the amount here proposed is reasonable or unreasonable I do not know, but I have often seen such appropriations go around in a circle. Now, without the consent of the Choctaw Nation, without their approval and against their protest, we propose to take $50,000 out of their money.

Mr. LODGE. And against the protest of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it not perfectly plain that the Choctaw Nation will come to the United States with another claim and have another attorney who will say that we improvidently and improperly took $50,000 out of their money, and that we must restore the money to their credit in the Treasury? Now, that will be the result of it. We have done that in the past in instances I remember. I venture the prophecy that we will argue this case over again five years, ten years, hence, when it will present itself in the form of restoring to the Choctaw Nation the money they are entitled to because of this improvident appropriation made out of their funds against their protest.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, I understood him to state that they were not entitled to any of the $3,000,000 they did get.

Mr. ALLISON. I so stated, and I so believe now.

Mr. STEWART. If they got all of that sum, to which they were not entitled, they ought to divide with some of those who did the work for them.

Mr. ALLISON. They certainly ought to divide with all the people who helped them.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator takes his seat, I wish to ask him to inform me whether or not I correctly understood him. I understood the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to say that this employment of Mr. Sypher commenced before the money was appropriated.

Mr. ALLISON. Oh, no.

Mr. FORAKER. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that he was not employed until after the money had been appropriated. What was the employment for, then?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand it was an employment to get the money the appropriation provided for.

Mr. FORAKER. Did not the appropriation provide that it should be paid?

Mr. ALLISON. It did so provide, but——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator allow me to make a statement? President Harrison declined to make the payment.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not aware of that.

Mr. TELLER. He declined for two reasons, I think; and I know something about it. One reason, I think, was that he was of the opinion the Senator from Iowa says the Committee on Appropriations were.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado will please suspend one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. STEWART. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TELLER. That opinion was that the Choctaws ought not to have anything; that it was an improvident act on the part of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. A gratuity.

Mr. TELLER. A gratuity. And the further reason was that they had made arrangements of such a character that a large portion of the money was to be diverted from the Indians into the hands of improper persons. That, I think, in General Harrison's mind was the real governing cause why he declined for nearly two years to make the payment.

Mr. LONG. And he never did.

Mr. TELLER. And he never did make it, although there is reason to suppose it would have been made by him had the Treasury been flush. I think it can be demonstrated that he would have paid it; but just at that time, when he was going out, there was not a superabundance of cash on hand.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word in reply to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. FORAKER. Before the Senator passes from that, let me inquire what, then, was the particular service General Sypher was employed to render?

Mr. TELLER. In securing, first, all the necessary steps which they had to provide for in order to have the money paid over. They could not have it paid over without doing certain things, as the Senator from North Dakota says, conditions precedent which they were to perform, and in inducing the President, if he could, to forego his objection to the payment upon the assurance, as he had from the commission who came here, that they would not allow to be diverted to lobbyists the money that properly belonged to the Indian tribe.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me, I should like to read the clause making the appropriation in the act.

Mr. TELLER. Very well: I have no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. It provides as follows:

> And the sum of $2,991,450 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians for all the right, title, interest, and claim which said nations of Indians may have in and to certain lands now occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians under executive order, said lands lying south of the Canadian River, and now occupied by the said Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians. Said lands have been ceded in trust by article 3——

Mr. TELLER. When?

Mr. ALLISON (reading):

> Said lands have been ceded in trust by article 3 of the treaty between the United States and said Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians, which was concluded April 28, 1866, and proclaimed on the 10th day of August of the same year, and whereof there remains, after deducting allotments as provided by said agreement, a residue ascertained by survey to contain 2,393,160 acres; three-fourths of this appropriation to be paid to such person or persons as are or shall be duly authorized by the laws of said Choctaw Nation to receive the same, at such time and in such sums as directed and required by the legislative authority of said Choctaw Nation, and one-fourth of this appropriation to be paid to such person or persons as are or shall be duly authorized by the laws of said Chickasaw Nation to receive the same, at such times and in such sums as directed and required by the legislative authority of said Chickasaw Nation.

Now, after this appropriation, Mr. Sypher became the attorney of the Choctaws under this appropriation in connection with the agent. I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that he was one of the agents.

Mr. STEWART. He was one of the commission.

Mr. TELLER. There was a commission of three.

Mr. ALLISON. He was one of the commission.

Mr. STEWART. Authorized by the statute.

Mr. ALLISON. Authorized by the statute. Now, the thing that was to be done was simply to prepare the necessary claims and deliver——

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. ALLISON. And deliver the necessary orders of the Choctaw Nation as respects the payment. That is all there is to it.

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President, that is not a fair statement. The President of the United States, as I said, declined to pay this money. There is not any law I know of that would compel the President to make payment if he declines. How far he may decline and what will be the proper thing for him to do is a question I do not care to go into. There was a very strong feeling, as the Senator has said, that this provision ought not to have been made, and there was a good deal of talk to the effect that it should not have been passed, but of course it could have been legally reached only by a reconsideration or repeal of the act.

Now, Mr. President, I am not willing to admit that this was one of the cases there is no question about, as the Senator from Iowa would seem to indicate.

From 1866 up to the day the appropriation was made these Indians were before the Interior Department pressing this claim day in and day out, and I have not any doubt that they had twenty-five or thirty different attorneys, first and last, doing that thing. Every man connected with the Department knew that it was a very sore question with the Indians. They believed that they were being defrauded by the Government. I knew something about it. It is a long time ago, and of course I will not attempt to state from memory exactly what was done, but I know it was one of those things that had bothered Congress and had bothered the Executive Departments. Finally it was determined to get rid of the thing and pay it off, just as we pay off a good many other things which Indians have brought against us, in order that we might maintain the confidence and good will of the Indians, and because the legislative department and the executive department have felt that if there was any error anywhere we had better make it against the Government of the United States and not against the Indians; that if there was a doubtful question, we would give the Indian the benefit of the doubt and not take it ourselves, because the Indian was absolutely helpless and we had the power, and that as became a great nation we would deal with our wards in a generous manner.

Now, Mr. President, this payment had been pressed again and again. There was not a Senator who voted for it who had not heard it discussed on and off here for years and years and knew all about it. Whatever opinion he might have, he had had an opportunity to make up his mind from the record. When he came to deal with these questions he could go to the record and take the facts and determine, as no man could unless he went through the whole question from beginning to end.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? The original claim, if it has any bearing upon this amendment, arose in this way: In 1866 the Cherokees, Chickasaws, and Choctaws leased to the Government land, to settle friendly Indians upon it, west of the one hundredth meridian. They claimed that they had never done anything except to lease the land, and when the Government appropriated it and divided it up among the Indians it was bound to pay them.

The Government, on the other hand, claimed that subsequently there had been another treaty in which the Indians had parted with the title, and it involved not only this but some 12,000,000 acres which were in the same situation. It was finally decided in a suit in the Court of Claims and in the Supreme Court within the last two or three years that the Indians had no title to it. The Court of Claims found that they had. The Supreme Court reversed them and found that the original contention of the Government that the Indians had parted with their title was correct.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I did not intend to go into an intricate and difficult explanation, but that is stated very frankly and very clearly.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to ask if I understood him correctly. I understood the Senator to say that after this money had been appropriated it was within the power of the President of the United States to say that it should not be paid. Am I correct in that?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know what the Senator understood, but that is not what I said. I did not say that it was within his power. I said there was no way I know of, if he declined to pay it, to make him do it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The condition to the payment of the money was that proper conveyances should be executed and approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Oh, well, then——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. And he declined to approve those conveyances, not, perhaps, because they were improper, but upon the ground——

Mr. TELLER. Not because they were irregular or defective, but because he did not want to make the payment.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senater's pardon. I was not familiar with those facts, but I was rather struck by the statement, and I wanted to know if I understood him correctly.

Mr. TELLER. Nobody imputes any impropriety to President Harrison. There was ten times as much trouble and fuss made about the appropriation after it was made as was made before, and if it had been made before, the appropriation would not have been made at that time, I presume. But, in my judgment, whatever might have been the subsequent conclusion of the court, it was a doubtful question and one that we did well, I think, to get rid of by an appropriation not larger than that which was made.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a word or two about the service of General Sypher.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question before he proceeds with that point?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. In the determination of the liability of the Choctaws and Chickasaws to General Sypher, and if liable the amount for which they were liable, were these two tribes, by their representative or in any other way, heard before the committee?

Mr. TELLER. There is but one tribe, the Choctaws, involved here. The Chickasaws have nothing to do with it.

Mr. McLAURIN. Was that tribe, either by its representative or in any other way, heard before the committee?

Mr. TELLER. A bill was introduced for the payment of this debt. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and a subcommittee was appointed, of which the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was one and the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] the other. I do not know whether there was a third member of the subcommittee or not.

They took this matter up and had it under consideration for some time. I do not know how long they had it before them, because this bill was referred to them some time ago. They notified the attorney of the Choctaws, who is here, of this controversy. He claimed that they wanted to produce papers of some kind—I do not know what—but his objection, I understand, grew out of the fact substantially that after they had passed the act and after General Sypher had come here and done his work to a large extent the attorney-general of that Territory, the Indian attorney-general, decided that it was unconstitutional—that the act was unconstitutional—and thereupon they ignored Mr. Sypher after he had practically rendered the service. Just when that was done I do not recall, although it is in the papers; but the commission appointed under that unconstitutional act kept on and received the money finally.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They signed the conveyances on which the money was paid.

Mr. TELLER. They signed the conveyances and made the deeds to the Government, all of which were accepted eventually and all approved before they were accepted—that is, approved as to their form. The attorney-general of the Department decided that they were wrong and needed still the approval of the President. It was at that time, I think, that General Sypher was employed. When the act was passed the Choctaw people were in fear that the provision in the act of Congress would be repealed and that they would be remitted to their original state, and of course they were anxious to get the money and get it as quickly as they could, as they always are.

Mr. President, I believe that, under the circumstances, this provision has met our approval as to the amount; in fact, I know it met the approval of the two Senators who have had the matter in hand. General Sypher said to them: "Whatever you think I ought to have, if you will state the amount, I will take it." General Sypher rendered these Indians services, practically, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says, for nearly two years to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him how long Mr. Sypher was engaged in this service?

Mr. TELLER. I have stated that about three times.

Mr. CLAY. I did not hear the Senator. I was out of the Chamber.

Mr. PATTERSON. General Sypher rendered about twenty months' service.

Mr. TELLER. He rendered about eighteen or twenty months' service; practically two years' service, and ever since he has been trying to get his pay.

Mr. CLAY. He was employed to get the money after the act of Congress was passed?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; because the President of the United States declined to approve the deeds; not because he considered them irregular, but because no money could be paid until he did approve them, and he was doubtful whether, under certain conditions, the payment ought to be made at all.

I think, as I stated before the Senator from Georgia came in, that there were two objections. One was that a very large part of this amount would go to a lobby.

Mr. CLAY. Is not $50,000 a rather large sum for twenty months' service?

Mr. TELLER. General Sypher had a contract with the Indians to receive 10 per cent of the amount secured; and they prevented him from completing his contract by discharging him.

Mr. President, as I said before, we have a precedent here in dealing with these people, and that was only in 1901, when it was necessary to compel them to pay General Pike. He had been their attorney for at least twenty or twenty-five years; he had been for at least twenty years, to my certain knowledge. I made the acquaintance of General Pike in 1866, and I had known him intimately from that time on. I knew he represented those Indians. He was himself, in person or by his son, at all times, more or less, during that period their attorney; at least he was while I had anything to do with these affairs.

Mr. PATTERSON. I would ask the Senator whether the $75,000 paid to Albert Pike was in addition to the six hundred and odd thousand dollars paid to the other gentlemen?

Mr. TELLER. That was in addition to the fees of the other attorneys. The Indians made no provision for the payment of General Pike, and they did not intend to pay him. They only paid him because Congress compelled them to do so; and they will not pay this claim unless Congress compels them to do so.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, it seems to me there is one weak spot in this claim as it now stands, notwithstanding the very full and persuasive statement made by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. I have not the honor of being a member of this committee, but I am informed that the Indians were not represented at all before that committee when this matter was being considered. The Senators who are members of the committee will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. TELLER. I will suggest to the Senator that that is an incorrect statement, for their attorney was before the committee—whether the Senator was there or not I do not know—and the attorney was also before the subcommittee, as I understand.

Mr. McCUMBER. And he also appeared before the whole committee.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; he appeared before the whole committee.

Mr. STEWART. I notified the attorney immediately on the filing of this amendment, and told him to notify the nation that we would give them a hearing, or that the conference committee would give them a hearing if the bill should pass before they had a chance to appear before the committee, and I urged him to have the papers sent in.

Mr. TELLER. That was before the committee reported this bill—while it was pending before the committee.

Mr. QUARLES. I understand that the attorney has requested the privilege of introducing some papers which have a bearing on this question, and that they were not received or considered by the committee. I will ask the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] if that is correct?

Mr. BARD. Yes. I will say, however, in that connection, that the request of the attorney for the Choctaw Nation to introduce those papers at the hearing and to consider this matter was made about thirteen or fourteen days ago. He stated, however, in answer to questions that were put to him, that he was not then prepared to reply; that in order to do so, it would be necessary for him to send for certain papers to the Choctaw Nation, and that he had sent for the papers, which were then inaccessible to him, it being a long way to Washington.

Mr. QUARLES. Thank you.

Now, Mr. President, here is the trouble, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]: If we sit here practically as a judicial tribunal to pass on this question, and take $50,000 out of the treasury of the Choctaws and the Chickasaws, without giving them a full and complete hearing, we will certainly have this bill coming back here again for a return of this $50,000 on the ground that the Indians were not heard, as they had a right to be; that they have not had their day in court; and not only will that claim be presented, but it will be allowed, and will pass this Senate.

It would seem to me, therefore, far better that this amendment of the committee should be disagreed to at this time and take the matter up after the representatives of the nation have had a full and complete hearing and the nation has had its day in court.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply wanted to say to the Senator that, while I was not present at any of the subcommittee meetings which had this matter in charge, the attorney representing the Choctaws was before the full committee at its meeting on Saturday and urged his objections to the bill at that time. Neither by word nor by act nor in any manner did he indicate that he wanted any further time before the full committee; nor was there anything stated in the arguments on either side to the effect that more time was required. The attorney submitted his case to the committee. He did not ask for further time. And so the committee had a right to assume that he was not asking for further time to introduce any new matter.

Mr. STEWART. One other matter. In this bill there is an appropriation of $700,000 to pay the Choctaws for lands that were taken by the freedmen. Although we are legally bound for it, and it will be put in as an appropriation, I do not think that originally it had very much foundation. I do not think that after the war we ought to have paid them anything. We ought to have given the money to the negroes at the time. The loyal Creeks came here with a delegation and stayed for three or four months. A portion of them insisted that there should be no treaty signed on the part of the loyal Creeks without such a provision; and they stayed here until they had secured the insertion in the treaty of a provision that the blacks should share equally with the Indians, that they should be treated in that way, and they have been treated in the same way. The Choctaws ought to have been treated in the same way; but they have not been. We gave them the land, and the court held that the United States must either take the land away from the negroes or pay for it. Finally it got settled upon a money appropriation. Here is $700,000 which I do not think ever ought to have been exacted.

Some of the Indians had been in rebellion. The Creeks had been divided about equally. The loyal part of them insisted that the negroes should be taken care of in any arrangement made; but the Choctaws did not; and the Government has to buy that land in order to give the negroes 40 acres apiece, and we pay for it in this bill.

The Choctaws knew what was going on. Their attorney was before the committee and knew what was being done, and some suggestion was made about having papers. I saw him last night, and I told him if he had anything to present, he could bring it before the conference committee; that anything that would defeat this agreement could undoubtedly be heard there. There was no snap judgment taken. These Indians should be fairly dealt with. I think the Choctaws have been pretty liberally dealt with in this bill, and they ought to pay their debts.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, only a moment. It seems to me to be entirely beside the question involved here to discuss the proposition whether Congress should or should not have appropriated the $3,000,000. That was adjudicated by Congress, the appropriation was made, and it can not be recalled.

The nation ought to be made to pay a lawyer who, under contract, performed services for the nation in obtaining property or in obtaining an appropriation or in attending to the business of the Indians. It is ridiculous, really, that such claims should come before the Senate in this way.

The proposition is that we should take this sum out of the moneys which belong to the Choctaw Nation—somebody's else money—which the Congress is called upon to appropriate, and of course the facts should be ascertained in the clearest possible way, and under circumstances which would enable the owners of the money to have a full hearing on common-law proof in order that the ascertainment may be an accurate one and one binding upon both parties.

I think such a claim as this ought to have been referred—as either House of Congress has the perfect right to refer it—to the Court of Claims before it is finally passed; and there the Choctaw Nation could have its day in court and General Sypher could have his day in court.

I was told a few moments ago by the attorney, or a gentleman who represented himself as the attorney, of the Choctaw Nation that they had not had a completed hearing before the committee in opposition to this claim. The Senator from California [Mr. BARD], in the statement which he made, entirely corroborated the statement which this agent or lawyer of the Choctaw Nation made to me—that in the course of the hearing questions arose and were put to him which he told the committee he was not then prepared to reply to, and that it would be necessary for him to send for the papers out to the Choctaw Nation; that he had sent for the papers; that they were in an inaccessible place, a long way from Washington; that a part of them had been received, but that all of them had not been received.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] substantially stated the same thing a few moments ago, and he coupled with it a proposition which I think is entirely untenable from the standpoint of legislative propriety. He said that he had told this lawyer to get his papers, to present the objections he had to this appropriation, if he had any, and bring them before the conference committee, as I understood the Senator——

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, that is a novel proposition. A conference committee is not to legislate. The Senate is to legislate so far as its part of that function is concerned.

Mr. STEWART rose.

Mr. SPOONER. A conference committee—if my friend will allow me to conclude my sentence—is to reconcile differences between the two Houses.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator will excuse me.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. What the Senator says is news to me, and I think it will be to everybody else.

Mr. SPOONER. In what particular?

Mr. STEWART. That conference committees do not legislate.

Mr. SPOONER. They do, but they have no right to do so.

Mr. STEWART. They have made much legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. They have made too much. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator think it would be too much to request an attorney, if he had any objections to a provision in the bill, to present them to a conference committee?

Mr. SPOONER. I think—and I have no doubt about it—that before the Senate incorporates a provision in a bill it passes the Senate should have the information to enable it to decide whether or not the provision should become law. When a conference committee takes a bill into conference it represents the Senate; it is not there as a tribunal of original jurisdiction to take testimony and to hear objections. That proposition means that the Senate, half informed or uninformed, shall pass an act, so far as we enact provisions in a bill, to be overruled, in a subsequent examination as to the merits, by our own representatives in the conference.

Mr. STEWART. That occurs frequently.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator says it occurs frequently. I admit it.

Mr. STEWART. It occurs every day.

Mr. SPOONER. It occurs too frequently, as I said a few moments ago.

General Sypher performed services. I have no doubt he did. The Senator from California [Mr. BARD] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] constituted the subcommittee, and they have stated, as I understand, that he performed under contract, in good faith, services to this Indian nation, and that the reasonable value of those services is $50,000. I was prepared to vote for this proposition if the Choctaw Nation had had full opportunity to present its objections and to sustain the objections by such papers and documentary evidence as might be relevant, but the Senator's suggestion that we shall pass it anyhow and that its agent can bring these papers later to the attention of the Senator and his conferees on the conference committee——

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Always.

Mr. STEWART. We know very well what papers there are that they rely on.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, why does the Senator invite this gentleman to present them to the consideration of the conference committee?

Mr. STEWART. I wanted to let him bring them, if he could. I knew he did not have them. He has not got them now. The only thing the Indians relied upon from the beginning was the opinion of their attorney-general, that this law was unconstitutional. They made no other excuse. Sypher has been working at this, and all we ever heard was that the law was unconstitutional.

Mr. SPOONER. What papers show that?

Mr. STEWART. We have got the statutes.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask what papers could be brought here from the Choctaw Nation to show that that law was unconstitutional?

Mr. STEWART. The opinion of their attorney-general.

Mr. SPOONER. That is here?

Mr. STEWART. That is here; all the papers are here. He can not get any other papers.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator say to the Senate that it was for that purpose that that agent desired to be heard?

Mr. STEWART. He did not ask me, but I said "If you have got anything to present, bring it here."

Mr. BARD. I wish to state to the Senator from Wisconsin that, as the chairman of the subcommittee, I gave notice to Mr. McMurray, the attorney for the Choctaw Nation, and invited him to be present at a meeting before the committee, first on February 24, subsequently at another meeting on March 2, and the last on March 17. He did not appear at any of these meetings of the subcommittee, but he did appear at a meeting of the general committee on March 19. Before that committee, however, a statement was made that he had asked his people to send him certain documents and testimony, that he hoped to have them here shortly, and he thought that certain of those papers could arrive here in Washington to-day. I make this explanation to show that the committee has given him opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BARD. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Did the attorney state to the committee what the nature of those papers was, so that the committee could judge whether or not they were relevant to the question?

Mr. BARD. No.

Mr. SPOONER. He did not?

Mr. BARD. No; he simply described them in a general way.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator from California satisfied that the Choctaw Nation could have had a hearing by the committee before the appropriation of any money was made? If he is, I am content.

Mr. BARD. I have hesitated to join with the other members of the committee for that reason.

Mr. STEWART. What did the Senator say?

Mr. SPOONER. In this part of the Chamber the Senator was not distinctly heard. I understood the Senator to say that he had hesitated in the matter.

Mr. BARD. I hesitated, but did join with the members of the committee in that matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SPOONER. I yield the floor.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which was read from the Secretary's desk throws some light upon this controversy, and by reference to its statements a more accurate knowledge can be had, at least as to the dates and details of the several transactions that have been under discussion. It appears from this letter that it was in 1889 that the legislative body of the Choctaw Nation passed an act under which the persons were employed who undertook to secure the necessary legislation for the claim presented by the Choctaw Nation against the United States. It was in that contract that the sum of 25 per cent was to be paid to those employed for the purpose; and it was that 25 per cent which President Harrison thought was so extortionate and smacked somewhat of fraud. But when you take into consideration the fact that this claim had been before Congress at a number of sessions and had failed; that the claim had to be, as it were, initiated; that it had to be followed through the committees and through the two branches of Congress, and that subsequently those who made the claim and entered into the contract would be required to see that the claim was paid if the appropriation was secured, the contract for 25 per cent to some lawyers, at least, will not appear as extortionate as it will to others.

However that may be, that claim was ultimately paid by the Choctaw Nation, and it was paid because it was a legal contract and a legal claim against the Choctaw Nation. For some reason, perhaps because of the objections made by President Harrison to the payment of this claim, the Choctaw Nation, on the 9th of October, passed an act which undertook to annul the contract it had made with the first agents; and on the same date—and, I think, perhaps it was in the same act—they provided for the employment of General Sypher or Mr. Sypher—whether or not he is entitled to a military designation I do not know——

Mr. STEWART. In the same act they appointed the commission.

Mr. PATTERSON. They appointed the commission, but——

Mr. STEWART. And they authorized the commission to employ counsel.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes; authorizing the employment of Sypher. That act was adopted on the 9th of October, 1891. On the 30th of October, before the contract was entered into with Sypher, the proper authority of the Choctaw Nation declared that that act was unconstitutional.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. PATTERSON. I beg your pardon.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is where some of the trouble arises.

Mr. STEWART. They did not do that until after President Cleveland came into office.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the reason a clearer statement, or, at least, a more detailed statement, should be made. The Senator from Nevada is clearly laboring under an error.

Mr. STEWART. Oh, no.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think he is. I will show the Senator, and if I do not I will admit my error. In the brief that was filed by Mr. Sypher he went on to state his own contract, that he was appointed by the commissioners appointed by act of the general council of the Choctaw Nation approved October 19, 1891.

Mr. STEWART. They did not pass any other act. They did not pass any act repealing that act. That act is still in force.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; they did not pass any act repealing that one; but they did pass an act repealing, or practically repealing, the act under which the first contract was made.

Mr. STEWART. Yes; the first contract.

Mr. PATTERSON. The act under which the first contract was made. But the last act was passed on the 19th of October, 1891, and the attorney-general of the Choctaw Nation on the 30th of October, 1891, declared it to be unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I have here Executive Document No. 42 of the first session Fifty-second Congress. It contains the opinion of the attorney-general of the Choctaw Nation:

Office of national attorney, Choctaw Nation, Antlers, Ind. T., October 30, 1891.

That is the date of the opinion. The subject of the opinion was this act of the Choctaw legislature under which Sypher was employed.

Mr. STEWART. He went on and did the service. The commission that was appointed signed the papers, prepared everything for the payment of the money, and received all the money—all under that same act. That looks somewhat suspicious. We never heard of that act until after the money was paid.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think the Senator from Nevada does not state that with exact correctness.

Mr. STEWART. Then you are without proper information.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Indians got the money under the act of March 3, 1891, and any services that were rendered by anybody to secure the payment of that appropriation were not illegal and could not be unconstitutional, while the act that provided for the appointment of that person might have been unconstitutional But when you take up the opinion of the attorney-general, who was the authority under the constitution of the Choctaw Nation to pass upon such questions, you find that before the Sypher contract was entered into he had declared it unconstitutional. He gives a number of reasons for the unconstitutionality of the act under which Sypher was employed. I find this stated as one of them:

> This is clearly and positively unconstitutional and void.
> All laws of the Choctaw Nation (article 7, treaty of 1855, between the United States and the Choctaw Nation) must be compatible with the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof.
> The law under consideration violates the Constitution of the United States in that it impairs the obligation of a contract, and is therefore void under the treaty as stated, especially so as the contracts were made with United States citizens.

Now, the contract that was attempted to be voided by the act under which Sypher was employed was that which authorized the first employment of those who attended to the preparation of the law, guiding it in its course through committees and through Congress and who were deliberately set aside by the act of October 19, 1891, after the law of Congress had been adopted and when nothing remained to be done, as I understand the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but to take the necessary steps to secure the money from the Treasury of the United States.

This opinion of the attorney-general was published in the Indian Citizen, a weekly paper of Atoka, Ind. T., on Saturday, November 7, 1891. It was published in a public newspaper of the Indian Territory on the same day that the contract under which Sypher claims was entered into. It must be pretty clear that Mr. Sypher, if he did not learn of the fact at the time he made the contract, must have learned shortly afterwards, long before any particular service was rendered, that the properly constituted authorities of the Indian nation had declared the act of the Choctaw legislature, under which he was appointed, unconstitutional and void.

Mr. STEWART. So far as it abrogated previous contracts.

Mr. PATTERSON. It was unconstitutional and void, because it abrogated a previous contract.

Mr. STEWART. Had they not the right to employ more counsel? They went on with the business under the new arrangement. The act was not entirely void.

Mr. PATTERSON. The act of the Choctaw legislature not only authorized the employment of these men, but attempted to abrogate a legal, binding contract which had been entered into three years before.

Mr. STEWART. I doubt if it was legal and binding. It was for lobbying.

Mr. PATTERSON. It was for services, the principal part of which had been rendered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Assuming that that is correct, does the Senator, as a lawyer, hold that because the act was void, inasmuch as it attempted to vitiate a prior contract, it would be void so far as it affected another and future contract? Might it not be void because it vitiated or attempted to vitiate the one contract, and yet be valid as to the other contract?

Mr. PATTERSON. I can not undertake to answer that question as a lawyer or as a judge. I simply know that the act was declared unconstitutional, and that Mr. Sypher evidently proceeded to perform the duties with that opinion staring him in the face; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs gives that as one of his reasons for holding that this claim should not be paid.

Mr. McCUMBER. That would not necessarily govern an attorney who would act upon his power and upon his authority when he could see that the authority was binding and valid, would it?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think that an attorney seeking to perform his duty as a lawyer who undertakes to perform services under and by virtue of an act of a legislature would not be content to proceed under the employment if that act by the proper authorities was declared unconstitutional and void.

Mr. McCUMBER. But the act was declared unconstitutional and void because of a certain thing in it, and that was that it vitiated a prior act. It was not declared to be unconstitutional and void, as I understand, because it employed some one else.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; that is a mistake. The attorney-general gives a number of reasons for declaring it unconstitutional and void.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. And this is one of them. I cite this because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs cites this particular reason in his letter of February of this year.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that.

Mr. PATTERSON. A number of reasons are given, some two or three. This is the last reason that is given in the opinion of the attorney-general.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is another question right here which I should like to ask the Senator. Suppose that the attorney did hold this act to be unconstitutional. Can the nation itself plead ultra vires to the proposition that it employed a counsel to perform certain services when those services and acts have been performed and they have received the benefit of them? Could they then make that plea as against payment for the service agreed upon?

Mr. PATTERSON. I imagine that if the attorney rendered the services with notice as to the view of the law department of the State or of the nation, the Choctaw Nation in this instance, that it was unconstitutional, so far as the contract itself was concerned, he would have no claim either in law or in equity, and certainly that decision would be res adjudicata. It has never been appealed from. It was the constitutional authority under the constitution of the Choctaw Nation for passing upon questions of that kind, and it stands to-day the law of that nation.

Mr. STEWART. Is there anything in that opinion holding that the appointment of the commission was unconstitutional; that it could not go on; that any powers given to that commission were unconstitutionally conferred?

Mr. PATTERSON. It simply declares that the act is unconstitutional.

Mr. STEWART. I know that.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is all.

Mr. STEWART. If it carries the whole act, it makes it ridiculous. They have gone on under the act and got the money and all that. That is what makes the whole thing suspicious.

Mr. PATTERSON. The attorney-general gives additional reasons in this opinion.

Mr. STEWART. I do not care for the reasons he gives. If the whole act was unconstitutional, how could they make the deeds and get the money and go ahead with it?

Mr. PATTERSON. They made the deeds and got the money under the original appropriation.

Mr. STEWART. These men were appointed under that recent act—the men who carried it out?

Mr. PATTERSON. As I said before, the Senator from Nevada ought to be able to distinguish between services, by whomsoever they may be rendered, being perfectly legal, when the acts are done for the purpose of securing an appropriation already made, and an unconstitutional act.

There was nothing illegal in what Mr. Sypher did, no matter how unconstitutional the act may have been under which he was appointed; and whether it was Mr. Sypher or Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones or Senator STEWART, whatever was done to secure the money was perfectly legal. But the contract under which the individual may have undertaken to perform the duties might at the same time be absolutely void for want of proper authority in the legislature that adopted it.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator maintain that the Choctaw Nation is in a position to say that the contract appointing commissioners to make deeds and to secure assistants and appointing them, and under which they got the money, is unconstitutional? What the Senator read of that opinion is simply that they could not abrogate former contracts, that that would be unconstitutional. It can not be that the whole act is unconstitutional, for it seems that they have acted upon it and recognized it as a constitutional act, and I think the Choctaw Nation is estopped from saying it is unconstitutional.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have stated it a number of times, and it is unnecessary for me to go over it again. The only purpose I had was to make clear the order of certain things in connection with this transaction. I understand when a court or a proper authority declares an act to be void it is void unless the decision is reversed by some competent tribunal. A court may declare an act to be void in part and legal in part, but when the reviewing court, whether it commits an error or not, declares the act to be void and that stands, it is res adjudicata, and the act is void.

Mr. STEWART. What court declared it unconstitutional? No court. It is a mere opinion.

Mr. PATTERSON. I said to the Senator from Nevada that it was the attorney-general who, according to the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, was the properly constituted authority——

Mr. STEWART. How did he know?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, well, I do not know. But he was the properly constituted authority under the constitution of the Choctaw Nation, whatever it was, to pass upon the constitutionality of the law. I suppose the attorney-general was the court for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART. I never heard of it in any other case.

Mr. PATTERSON. But there are a lot of things you have not heard of, Senator.

Mr. STEWART. I have never heard of it in any civilized country.

Mr. PATTERSON. Perhaps not.

Mr. STEWART. Perhaps they are uncivilized, and that some outsider has a right to say how their laws shall be interpreted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he considers the dictum of an attorney in any case as res adjudicata, when it has not been tried by a court?

Mr. PATTERSON. As I understand it, these Indians have a government of their own, they have courts of their own, they have legislatures of their own, they have laws of their own.

Mr. McCUMBER. And courts.

Mr. PATTERSON. I said courts. They are all acting, as I understand it, under constitutions which they have adopted and which are satisfactory to themselves. They are independent nations for many purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Has any court held this act to be unconstitutional? I am asking the question for information.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have stated a number of times that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his communication states that this man was the properly constituted authority to pass upon the constitutionality of that act.

Mr. McCUMBER. To determine——

Mr. PATTERSON. I would have to go to all the laws and to the constitution of the Choctaw Nation before I could answer the question of the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator does not think the Commissioner intended to mean by that language that the decision of that officer, this attorney-general, would constitute the judgment of a court?

Mr. PATTERSON. I mean to say this: If our Constitution provided that the attorney-general of a State or of the United States should have authority and power to pass upon the constitutionality of laws, whenever that officer did declare a law constitutional or unconstitutional, it would be so. But we do not confer that power upon our attorneys-general.

Mr. McCUMBER. Nor does the nation, either.

Mr. PATTERSON. I do not know, beyond what the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says in his letter. I have to put that against the dictum of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to ask the Senator a question for information, because I have not read the papers, and that is whether the attorney-general held the act void as a whole? I understand the act covers several subjects.

Mr. PATTERSON. No.

Mr. CLAY. Did he hold an act of Congress to be unconstitutional?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no; an act of the Choctaw legislature.

I will say for the information of the Senator that the Choctaw legislature in 1889 passed an act under which, I think, three persons were employed to prepare this claim, to bring it to Congress, and to do all necessary service in securing the enactment of the law, and, I suppose, in connection with the collection of the money. Under the employment thus authorized by the Choctaw legislature they prepared the claim, came on to Washington, and gave all the necessary attention to it until it was passed by Congress and became a law.

Then President Harrison, for some reason, refused to pay it, and before the money was collected the Choctaw legislature enacted another law by which they declared all agreements made with the first commission or the first agents as null and void, and authorized the employment of another agent. It was under the second act that Mr. Sypher was employed, and it was that act which the attorney-general of the Choctaw Nation declared unconstitutional for a number of reasons, which are given in his opinion. One of the reasons he gives is that it impaired the validity of a contract, which is prohibited by the Constitution of the United States, in that it attempted to set aside the original contract under which the law was passed by Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, that looks like an absurdity on its face.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am not undertaking to stand for the attorney-general. He is an Indian, I suppose. I do not know.

Mr. SPOONER. The idea of holding an act of the legislature of the Choctaw Nation void, under the Constitution of the United States, because it impairs the obligation of a contract is a new proposition.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is because you have not read this opinion.

Mr. SPOONER. My recollection is that that prohibition of the Constitution is applicable only to the States.

Mr. PATTERSON. If it does not occupy too much of the time of the Senate, I will read the entire opinion. It is only a page.

Mr. STEWART. Read it.

Mr. PATTERSON. I myself have never read it all.

Mr. STEWART. Read it.

Mr. PATTERSON. This is from the Indian Citizen, of Atoka, Ind. T., November 7, 1891. It is headed "Constitutionality of a law."

Below will be found an official opinion of the national attorney of the Choctaw Nation on an act recently passed by the general council.

The act in question was published in these columns week before last and proposed to cancel the contracts of the attorneys of the nation made with the "leased district delegation," and authorizes the governor, treasurer, and special delegate to go to Washington and make a formal demand for the money, and also authorizes them to make other arrangements, without regard to cost, to get the money by the 1st of December.

The national auditor called upon the national attorney for his opinion as to the constitutionality of this action, and in accordance with the law requiring the national attorney to give his opinion in writing to the national auditor upon all cases concerning the revenue expenses of the nation, the following opinion was elicited:

OFFICE OF NATIONAL ATTORNEY CHOCTAW NATION,
Antlers, Ind. T., October 30, 1891.

Hon. WILLIAM WILSON,
National Auditor, Choctaw Nation.

DEAR SIR: Answering your letter of the 28th instant, returning the same with copies of the laws inclosed, I have the honor to answer your questions concerning the law in their order.

(1) The law relating to the appropriation of $2,991,450, passed by the general council on October 19, 1891, and approved by J. H. Bryant, acting principal chief Choctaw Nation, is not constitutional, but defective in various particulars.

That is the law in controversy.

(1) Article 3, section 8, constitution, requires every bill which shall have passed both houses of the legislature to be presented to the principal chief. The failure to do so because of the temporary absence of the chief for two or three days, or for any other cause not provided in the constitution or laws, makes it unconstitutional.

(2) The president of the senate is authorized to exercise the duties of the principal chief (article 5, section 4, constitution) only when a vacancy occurs "on account of the inability of the principal chief to discharge his duties."

In this case, however, there was no vacancy whatever in the office of principal chief, who was perfectly sound and well, was in the Choctaw Nation at his home, and immediately returned to the capital. Nor was there any legal disability.

Such temporary absence is not "inability" in the eyes of the law.

Such a construction would be highly mischievous, as the president of the senate could at his will deprive the principal chief of all authority unless the chief should be immediately and personally present at every instant when a bill should pass.

The president of the senate has no such authority, and the principal chief has no right to delegate such authority.

The Choctaw people elected the Hon. W. N. Jones principal chief, and he can not, except as expressly provided by the constitution, be divested or divest himself of his rights or his responsibilities.

The law referred to is unconstitutional in this respect, that it is signed by Hon. J. H. Bryant as acting principal chief of the Choctaw Nation, and not signed by Hon. W. N. Jones, principal chief of the Choctaw Nation.

(3) Again, the signature of the Hon. J. H. Bryant as acting principal chief is not authorized by the Choctaw laws, but if the principal chief's office had been vacant, the person authorized by law is the "president of the senate," and this alleged act is not so signed, but on its face it clearly appears that D. W. Hodges at this very time was president of the senate.

(4) The constitution of the Choctaw Nation, section 23, article 7, declares that any law "passed contrary to the provisions herein specified shall be null and void," and section 21, article 1, declares "the general council shall pass no bill of attainder, retrospective law, nor law impairing the obligation of contracts."

That is the Choctaw constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. That is their constitution?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes, sir; their constitution. He says:

The act under consideration proposes to impair the obligation of contracts in section 1 in express terms.

This is clearly and positively unconstitutional and void.

All laws of the Choctaw Nation (art. 7, treaty of 1855 between the United States and the Choctaw Nation) must be compatible with the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof.

The law under consideration violates the Constitution of the United States in that it impairs the obligation of a contract, and is therefore void under the treaty as stated, especially so as the contracts were made with United States citizens.

It is to be observed in regard to the alleged act of October 19, 1891, that it proposed to create a new delegation.

It would be obnoxious to article 7, section 13, of the constitution, which expressly requires that delegates or commissioners to transact such public business shall be nominated by the principal chief and confirmed by the senate, which has not been done, except in case of the special delegate and the delegation of 1889.

If it should be held that the alleged law of October 19 repeals the laws of April 9, then there is a special delegate; but it is evident that this construction would be obnoxious to the plain meaning of the general council.

Article 3, section 1, declares that the style of the law shall be, "Be it enacted by the general council of the Choctaw Nation assembled," which is not observed in the act of October 19, 1891.

This is a constitutional requirement, and any law (sec. 23, art. 7) which is passed contrary to such provisions is null and void.

He then says:

The laws of April 9, 1891, however, could not be repealed by the act of October, 19, 1891, because the latter is void, as above stated.

C. E. NELSON,
National Attorney, Choctaw Nation.

I do certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the original now on file in my office (October 31, 1891).

WM. WILSON,
National Auditor, Choctaw Nation.

Mr. President, if the original contract were extortionate, requiring all the services to be rendered for 25 per cent, when the claim was chaotic, as it were, when it was a matter of grave doubt whether the legality of such a claim could be established to the satisfaction of Congress, it seems to me that 10 per cent simply to remain in Washington and take the necessary steps to secure the payment of money that already had been appropriated might well come under that head, especially for so large a sum. I imagine it did not require the services of a very eminent lawyer.

But that is neither here nor there. I am not in the habit of depreciating the fees of attorneys, but it seems to me that when it is held in mind that Mr. Sypher proceeded under his employment to do services that ought to have been performed by others, who would doubtless have performed them had it not been for the enactment of this unconstitutional law, he knowing that he was running along grooves where if the law was constitutional by which he was appointed it would deprive those who had performed the main service of all compensation, it becomes quite questionable.

But if there is anything at all, Mr. President, in this claim, it is on the quantum meruit, and it strikes me that $50,000 for eighteen or twenty months' services is just simply out of all proportion. There is one thing certain. The committee in estimating the compensation did not determine what the value of the service was by basing it upon the value of the services of a Senator of the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. What service could Mr. Sypher perform as a lawyer, the money having been appropriated?

Mr. PATTERSON. He went into no court; he had nothing to do with Congress. What he had to do, if anything, was to make representations to the President who succeeded President Harrison that he ought to pay the claim, and if papers were to be drawn, then he had to give whatever time and attention were necessary, I suppose, for the preparation of the papers.

Mr. OVERMAN. Were any papers drawn?

Mr. PATTERSON. I suppose there were, from what some of the Senators say.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator not consider that it was the work of an attorney to prepare the papers and secure the execution and delivery of such deeds as would be accepted by the Government of the United States? Is not that regular legal work and work that people would usually employ an attorney for and not a layman?

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] makes a very proper suggestion, and that is that the Department itself is supposed to have very competent men for the preparation of papers of that kind. It has a number of solicitors and attorneys.

Mr. FULTON. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado a question. This man did do some work?

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, I think there is no doubt in the world about that.

Mr. FULTON. Because the contract is void, inasmuch as the act under which it was made is unconstitutional, does that constitute a good reason why Mr. Sypher should not be paid a reasonable compensation?

Mr. PATTERSON. I think that is true. I think every man should be paid——

Mr. FULTON. It seems to me the only question is to determine what is a reasonable compensation.

Mr. PATTERSON. If it was the United States against whom this claim was presented I should without hesitation insist that the man should receive reasonable compensation, although there were legal obstacles in the way of its payment. But it does seem to me, Mr. President, that this is a pretty questionable practice. We are the trustees for the Choctaw Nation. It is as though the Senator had a deposit in a bank and an alleged creditor of the Senator should go to the bank and say to the bank, "I want you arbitrarily to pay out of the deposit of your customer a claim that I present, because I can satisfy you it is just."

Mr. FULTON. I agree with the Senator that we ought to be very careful about it, but the committee has inquired into it and has become satisfied that this amount is reasonable, and yet I confess that I am not satisfied that it is reasonable. If the Senator will move to amend by providing a different compensation, it would please me better.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] suggests that I offer an amendment, which I do, to strike out the word "fifty" and insert "fifteen," making it read "$15,000."

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I do not intend to take more than three or five minutes of the time of the Senate. If this were a claim against the United States, I suppose there is no doubt that on the report of the committee it would pass, but the relation of the United States to this matter is a peculiar one. As the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] has just said, and as I suggested when I had the floor before, this is not our money which it is proposed we shall appropriate by this bill. We hold it in trust for the Choctaw Nation. We have the power to pass it and to take this money out of their fund, which is a trust fund, and pay it over to General Sypher, and we have the power, if the Choctaw Nation make a future claim against the United States, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa, that the money shall be refunded to them for breach of trust by the United States, to refuse to recognize it.

There is no relation in the world more sacred, and it always has been so and always must be so, than that of a trustee. In the case of no private trustee in the world could such a contract, or any questionable contract, be enforced against the trust estate without the cestui que trust having their day in court and without the claimant being forced to prove his case in court.

One reason why we should be peculiarly careful in appropriating the funds which we hold in trust for the Choctaw Nation is our power to do what we please, the mere matter of power, with their funds. That is why this Government should be peculiarly careful. I do not like to vote this $50,000 out of their fund on the presentation of the merits both as to the amount due and in other respects thus far made in this case, with the accredited agent of the Choctaw Nation contending here that they desire further hearings.

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. SPOONER. He does. He sent a card to me a few minutes ago. I declined to go out and asked him to communicate to me in writing—I never saw him until an hour ago—what he had to say, and he says, among other things, here:

We further will show by a copy of a judgment in the case of George Thibeau, who is mentioned in General Sypher's case, that after a full and complete hearing before a United States court and lasting more than a week the jury returned a verdict in favor of the nation, and many other matters.

I do not know what the Thibeau case is, but I know this, Mr. President, that in the administration of a trust the trustee, clothed with the power of sovereignty, ought not summarily to dispose of the interest of the cestui que trust. It is in violation of the plainest principles which control the administration of trusts.

As I said before, and I repeat it, the power is in Congress to refer by a mere resolution or by a resolution of the Senate a contested claim like this, when it becomes the duty of the Court of Claims to find the facts and report them to Congress, thereby opening the door to the Choctaw Nation to a full opportunity to present their case and their objections. That is what would be right between man and man, and that is what is right, Mr. President, between this great sovereign trustee and this Indian nation.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator will allow me, I desire to ask him a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether his investigations have led him to any conclusion as to whether the arrangement between General Sypher and the Indians was of such a character that there is an obligation upon their part to keep their contract with him?

Mr. SPOONER. I know absolutely nothing about this matter except what has been uttered in the Senate Chamber, and from what has been uttered in the Senate Chamber I have no hesitation in saying that, regardless of the validity of the act under which the employment was made and this service was rendered, and I do not doubt that the service was rendered, General Sypher would be entitled to recover a quantum meruit.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, one other question. These Indians are the wards of the nation, and it is the duty of Congress to protect their interests. These funds are trust funds, and, of course, should be guarded with the greatest of care. But is there not also an obligation on the part of Congress to see to it that any legal contracts these wards make shall be obeyed, and is there any power anywhere to compel them to meet that obligation unless Congress, representing the Government, whose wards the Indians are, should compel them to do it? And is it not as much a duty upon the part of Congress to see to it that any valid contract the Indians make shall be kept by them, even if it leads to an appropriation of the trust funds to the extent of whatever amount is reasonable to pay General Sypher?

Mr. SPOONER. Unquestionably. The Senator can have no controversy with me on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought not.

Mr. QUARLES. If my colleague will permit me, in the line of the query of the Senator from Oregon I will state that there is no contract here which under the law is entitled to recognition as such.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know nothing about that.

Mr. QUARLES. The law prescribes that any contract made by an attorney with an Indian tribe shall be void unless it is filed with the Secretary of the Interior and approved by him. Now, we are asked as a trustee here to waive that proposition. That is the situation from a legal standpoint.

Mr. SPOONER. I may be wrong about it, but I am not absolutely certain that the contract was one of those contracts which require the approval of the Department. It may be; but in any event, I think if General Sypher performed the service (and that he performed service, and able and faithful service, I have no question), where a claim is so indefinite, or rather where the conclusion upon it is so indefinite as this debate has shown this claim to be, even among the members of the committee, the wise course to be pursued is to refer it to the Court of Claims, in order that there both sides may be heard on the facts. When the case comes back from the court it will, of course, be advisory; but then it will be for us, as the Senator from Oregon suggests, if we are satisfied it is just, to compel them by our appropriation out of their fund to pay what they owe.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I interrupt the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The same thing which the Senator has been suggesting suggested itself to me, and this question arose in my mind, whether under our statutes we could refer to the Court of Claims to find the facts in a case which was not a claim against the United States.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a claim against the United States as a trustee, and if the state of the statute law is such as to preclude the Congress from referring a claim against a trust fund to a tribunal for ascertainment of the facts and an advisory report, that law ought to be amended, because it is peculiarly important that, as to that class of cases, the Congress should have the benefit of information elicited by a tribunal in which both sides have an opportunity at least to be heard.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before voting either upon this amendment or upon the original proposition, I wish to direct a question to the Senator from California [Mr. BARD] who was chairman of the subcommittee. As every Senator understands, a committee must rely in such a case upon the report of its subcommittee. The subcommittee of which the Senator was chairman reported to the full committee, I understand.

Mr. BARD. It made no report.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, if they made no report, there was nothing before the committee to bring up the question as to whether this Indian tribe had a legal or proper notice. If the Senator investigating the subject itself has come to the conclusion that this matter was not properly presented to the committee, that there is further evidence which ought to be considered, then I should be in favor of not considering the question at this time.

If the Senator, acting in the capacity of chairman of that committee, came to the conclusion that he had before him a written agreement, and knowing what character of evidence was necessary to change the terms of a written agreement, concluded that the evidence which was proposed could not be considered as relevant in the face of a written instrument, then he had a right and the committee had a right to absolutely disregard it.

In all of this argument before us to-day and in all the letters that are being sent in here there is not a syllable or a word to show what character of evidence they propose to introduce.

We have very clearly a written instrument—an instrument of employment. You can not change that instrument except by showing that it has been abrogated in some way or by showing that it was illegal from the beginning. It requires certain evidence to show either its abrogation or that it has been satisfied. No one proposes to furnish such evidence that I know of. Nobody has proposed it to the subcommittee that I am aware of. No one has proposed it, I know, to the general committee, because it was not mentioned.

But if the subcommittee having it in charge have reason to believe—and I got that opinion from the Senator from California—that legal and proper evidence could be produced which would modify or affect this contract in any way, then I should say that it would be the duty of the Senate to await action on this matter until they received that evidence; and if that is true, I should be in favor of not considering the question at this time.

I believe the Senator from Colorado can inform us upon this point, and I believe the Senate would be glad to know whether there is any legal evidence he knows of, or that has been suggested to him, that will bear upon this case and which could be considered in taking the whole matter of its merits into consideration.

Mr. QUARLES. It seems to me that the Senator from North Dakota has made out a prima facie case by his statement just made, namely, that the committee confided this matter to a subcommittee, which subcommittee had not reported to the main committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. It never came before the committee without some report.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator, if it was never reported on by the subcommittee, how it got into the bill?

Mr. QUARLES. That is the point I was going to make.

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume, of course, that there was an oral report. It came into the bill by the subcommittee reporting on it: and I understood that the subcommittee did make an oral report or made a statement concerning it, and that the action of the committee was based upon the statement of the case made by the subcommittee. If I am in error the Senator from California can correct me.

Mr. BARD. I will make this statement, Mr. President, that it is true the subcommittee never made a formal report on this matter, which had been submitted to it for consideration, but on the 19th instant, or I think it was last Friday, when the full committee held its meeting, the question was brought up, not upon a report by the subcommittee, and I regarded that action as taking out of the subcommittee all further authority to deal with the subject.

I should like to say, in answer to the suggestion which has been made, that I am fully convinced, after having given the matter a good deal of consideration, that this is a valid claim against the Choctaw Nation. I believe that it is good, and that it is good for the whole amount, 10 per cent, under the contract. I can not conceive of any documentary or other evidence that may be introduced here to alter my opinion in regard to this claim.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question right here? Was any character of evidence suggested to you which to your mind would have been evidence that could be legally considered as altering or varying the terms of the contract?

Mr. BARD. I do not remember that there was any statement made to me as to the character of the evidence which was proposed to be introduced.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a question for information merely? I should like to know if the Choctaws were heard, by their agent or counsel or in any way, in regard to this claim.

Mr. BARD. No; he was present at the meeting of the full committee. He had been notified nearly a month ago of our intention to take up the matter for consideration, and he was invited to be present at the hearings.

Mr. LODGE. The agent of the Choctaws?

Mr. BARD. Yes, sir; the attorney.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. With General Sypher. They were both before the full committee.

Mr. BARD. They were before the full committee.

Mr. LODGE. Was the agent opposed to this payment?

Mr. BARD. Yes; he made objection to it, but only in a general way, as I remember.

Mr. LODGE. Did he have an opportunity to submit any testimony or writing?

Mr. BARD. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, I can answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts. He made his objection entirely on the ground that this act had been declared unconstitutional, and therefore the Choctaw Nation was not responsible for it. He did not at that time claim that he wanted any further time, that his nation desired any further hearing in the matter, but he stood entirely upon that proposition. Now, if he made this claim to any subcommittee, it is without my knowledge. He certainly did not in presenting the matter to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. He did not ask for time to present any evidence?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not at all. Not a word was said about it. He did not ask for a minute's time.

Mr. BARD. I should like to state that I think the Senator is in error. I think the attorney at that time mentioned that he had telegraphed for some documents. I think that statement is corroborated by some members of the committee who were present.

Mr. QUARLES. He had not received the documents?

Mr. BARD. He had not received them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask leave to withdraw the amendment and to substitute another for it; that is, to withdraw the word "fifteen" and substitute "twenty-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, line 12, before the word "thousand," strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. STEWART and Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

For payment to J. Hale Sypher, to be paid out of any funds in the Treasury of the United States belonging to the Choctaw Nation, $25,000, which said sum the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay immediately to J. Hale Sypher upon execution by him of a receipt in full of all claims against the Choctaw Nation for his services and expenses as the attorney of said nation under contract entered into on the 7th day of November, A. D. 1891, between said J. Hale Sypher and the said Choctaw Nation.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROCTOR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. BURTON], and vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the negative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS].

Mr. QUAY. I desire to state that I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber, but as he and I agree generally about the features of this bill I take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. He is detained by illness. I withhold my vote.

Mr. WARREN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY]. I will ask if that Senator has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. WARREN. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Allee,	Fairbanks,	Kittredge,	Platt, Conn.
Ankeny,	Foraker,	McCumber,	Quay,

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

PAYMENTS TO DELAWARE INDIANS.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up a resolution which is lying on the table. It came up this morning, and was laid on the table subject to my call. I ask that it may be laid before the Senate and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution yesterday submitted by Mr. QUAY, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish forthwith to the Senate a statement showing the difference in value between coin and currency on payments made by the United States to the Delaware Indians, from and including the year 1862 to and including the year 1878; said payments being set forth in the report of the subcommittee of the Senate on Indian Affairs, dated March 29, 1902.

The resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 14, after line 5 on page 94, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee to Frank A. A. Robertson, Edmond Cheney Robertson, Ella F. Robertson, Samuel J. Brown, Joseph R. Brown, Augusta Brown, Jennie Brown, Susan F. Brown, Thomas A. Robertson, Ida Robertson, Nancy Tawaqin, members of the Sisseton and Wahpeton band of Sioux Indians, for lands heretofore allotted to them in the State of South Dakota, and all restrictions as to sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to approve a deed dated June 9, 1903, from Joseph C. Melot, citizen Pottawatomie allottee No. 489, and Eliza Melot, his wife, conveying to Louisa Melot (his divorced wife) the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 21, and the north half of the northeast quarter of section 28, in township 6 north, range 2 east of the Indian meridian, in conformity with the order and decree of the judge of the district court for Pottawatomie County, Okla., at the regular April term, 1898, which decree was rendered in the divorce case of Josept C. Melot against Louisa Melot, decreeing said land to the said Louisa Melot as alimony.

That Mark Burns, Chippewa allottee No. 17 (census of 1889), to whom a trust patent has been issued containing restrictions upon alienation, may sell and convey from his allotment to the village of Cass Lake, county of Cass, State of Minnesota, the certain 10 acres described as follows: Commencing 80 rods north from the quarter post on the section line between sections 9 and 16, running thence north 40 rods, thence east 40 rods, thence south 40 rods, thence west 40 rods to the place of beginning, being 10 acres located in the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 9, township 145 north, range 31 west, on the Chippewa Reservation, Minn., but such conveyance shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and when so approved shall convey a full title to the purchaser the same as if a final patent without restriction had been issued to the allottee.

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue patents in fee, severally, to Bert Dietrich, George A. Dietrich, Willie Pearl Dietrich, Clarence A. Dietrich, Ruby G. Dietrich, Thomas M. Dietrich, Charles Roache, Octaviana Roache, Safaro Roache, Brigida Roache, Sahropone or Sarapio Roache, Homy or Mary Roache, Pautrice Roache, Candelario Roache, Nicholas Roache, Kit Carson Farwell, Pearl Farwell, and Num mah che or Gertrude Farwell, members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to them, respectively, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said land are hereby removed.

Mr. QUARLES. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the committee right at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 96, after line 9, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee, severally, to Lotsee Dietrich, Pokin Roache, George Chandler, Allottee No. 283, and Louisa B. Farwell, members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to them, respectively, in the Territory of Oklahoma, and all restrictions as to the sale, incumbrance, or taxation of said lands are hereby removed.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 14, on page 96, after line 9, to insert:

That the allottees of lands bordering upon Spring River or Grand River, in the Indian Territory, may each alienate, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed 10 acres of land for waterworks or waterpower purposes. Any land so alienated not to be taken from the homestead of any member of the Cherokee tribe.

That the following-named allottees of lands situated in the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., are authorized to alienate certain portions of their allotments therein, described as follows, namely: Fred Long, the south half of the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 28, 20 acres; John Faber, the east half of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28, 20 acres; the heirs of George Bearskin, deceased, the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 22, 40 acres; Annie Daugherty, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 12, 40 acres; and James Boone, lot numbered 1 in section 3; all in township 27 north, of range 24 east.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, the amendment I am about to offer is a committee amendment sent down on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior. I will explain briefly that in the making of allotments of land there were allotments made to two sons of an Indian, one an infant son, who has since died. The land would revert to the father, but the father wants the surviving son to have his portion of the land which was formerly allotted to the son who died.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I notice a great many provisions in the bill for the removal of the restriction of the right of alienation of Indian lands. Are those all recommended by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. STEWART. Nearly all of them have been recommended by the Interior Department. We have struck out some such provisions from the House bill, and we have put in a good many, with a view of ascertaining if the Department could suggest some rule, or if we can invent some rule, whereby this removal of restrictions may be made without coming to Congress in each individual case, so that it may all be done without mentioning names. We have put these others in the bill so that it will all be in the hands of the conferees. We took the liberty of doing this in the hope that we may be able to agree upon some general plan; though I do not believe we can. I have pretty much given it up.

Mr. SPOONER. Is it proposed to pretty generally remove these restrictions?

Mr. STEWART. No; that is the trouble. We are afraid it would become too general.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course this is a very important thing for the Indians, and especially for their families. Unless these restrictions of alienation are removed no matter how drunk an Indian may get, he can not be despoiled of his land while he is non compos. If we once begin to remove these restrictions, I do not know where we are going to end.

Mr. STEWART. A good many of these are white men who have been doing business, and some of them are bankrupt.

Mr. SPOONER. How did those white men get to be allottees—by fraud?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know whether it is by fraud or not. Their allotments were obtained under the laws of the nation. They are adopted citizens of the tribe, and in that way they got to be allottees.

Mr. DUBOIS. I will ask that the amendment which I proposed shall come in after the end of line 3 on page 97.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 14, after line 3, on page 97, it is proposed to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to permit an exchange of lands in Oklahoma Territory now included in Kiowa allotment No. 310 for certain other lands in same Territory now included in Kiowa allotment No. 312, and to issue new allotment patents to the allottees interested carrying the exchanges into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section [22] 15, on page 97, line 22, after the word "of," to strike out:

June 30, 1902: Provided, That no compensation shall be paid to or received by any deputy clerk in excess of $1,200 per annum.

And insert:

March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., p. 1073).

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the chief deputy clerks located at South McAlester, Muscogee, Vinita, and Ardmore, respectively, as well as all other extra clerk hire and office expenses, shall be paid by the clerks of the respective United States courts of the Indian Territory from the emoluments of their respective offices, as provided by the act of March 3, 1901 (31 Stat., p. 1073).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as agreed to in the absence of objection.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to the fact that he has stricken out of it the limitation on the compensation of deputy clerks. He has not only changed the date of the act, but he has stricken out the following proviso:

Provided, That no compensation shall be paid to or received by any deputy clerk in excess of $1,200 per annum.

That leaves the whole matter open to somebody to pay an indefinite sum. The language of the proviso as it originally stood contains a restriction, as it seems to me, which is rather a wholesome one, and one which, as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], appears frequently in our statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa move to restore the proviso which has been stricken out?

Mr. ALLISON. I will make that motion, so that we may hear any explanation which can be given for the proviso being stricken out.

Mr. STEWART. The explanation is found in a communication received in answer to a letter in regard to the compensation of clerks, which was written by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], who, I understand, takes some interest in the matter.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. The letter had better be read, and I send it to the desk for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter referred to by the Senator from Nevada will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 9, 1904.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs, United States Senate.

SIR: There is an item on the Indian appropriation bill now pending before your committee which affects the office of the United States clerks in Indian Territory, which I desire to call to your attention.

Congress in 1895 passed an act reorganizing the courts in the Indian Territory, and in that act provided for the appointment by the clerk of a deputy clerk, to be stationed at each place of holding court in the respective districts, and fixed the salaries of the deputy clerks at $1,200 per annum as deputy clerks, and provided that these salaries should be paid by the disbursing clerk of the Department of Justice. Then, on the 19th day of February, 1903, Congress passed another act, creating what is known as "recording districts," establishing one at each place of holding court, and designating the deputy clerks as ex officio recorders. Then, in order to enable them to do the recording under the act of February 19, 1903, they were allowed to retain out of the fees for recording the sum of $1,800 each per annum.

This additional compensation was allowed so as to enable them to employ competent assistants in the recording office. Before the passage of this last act referred to there was no provision for recording deeds or instruments in writing in the Indian Territory, and since the passage of this act providing for the recording of instruments the work in the recorder's office has been very great, and it would be simply impossible for the deputy clerk to perform his duties as deputy clerk and then attend to the recording also without the proper additional help. So this allowance was given him.

Now, it will be understood that their additional compensation in acting as ex officio recorders is to be taken from the earnings of the recording fees, and all over and above the sum allowed to be retained under the law is turned into the Treasury of the United States. So that if any one of these recorders should not earn the designated amount to be retained, he would not get it. In other words, should they earn as ex officio recorders only $100 per annum they would receive only that amount; but should they earn over $1,800 per annum the excess under the law goes to the United States Treasury.

Now, in the bill now pending before your committee, on page 59, line 4, it is provided: "That no compensation shall be paid to or received by any deputy clerk in excess of $1,200 per annum."

This provision just referred to was placed on the bill as a House amendment and was not on the bill when it came from the House committee; and I submit that for the good of the service in the recording of deeds, leases, and other instruments of writing in the Indian Territory it should be stricken out, and that the item be left as it originally came from the House committee.

There is one other item to which I desire to call your attention in this amendment, and that is this: At present, and under the existing law, the chief deputy clerks of the respective districts are allowed a salary of $2,500 per annum, which has always been paid from the emoluments of the office and accounted for to the Attorney-General. And this amendment would, in my judgment, if allowed to stand, include the chief deputy clerks.

This, I know, was not intended to be done by the gentleman who offered the amendment. As will be seen by reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 5, page 3009, commencing at the head of said page, in which the gentleman offering this amendment stated that it would not include the chief deputy. But I very much fear from the language of this amendment it would include him, or that it would be so construed by the Department, and I feel sure it was never intended to do so.

I submit this explanation in justice to the deputy clerks, as I believe the adoption of this amendment would work a great wrong to the service. I am myself the clerk of the southern district of the Indian Territory, and am perfectly familiar with the matters of which I speak.

Trusting that this amendment will be stricken out or the corrections made to which I refer, I am,

Very respectfully,

C. M. CAMPBELL,
Clerk United States Court Southern District of the Indian Territory.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the chief deputies would be cut down to $1,200 by this provision. My attention was called to it by the provision above, which reads:

That hereafter the salaries of the deputy clerks in the Indian Territory appointed under the act of March 1, 1895 (28 Stat., p. 695), and acts amendatory thereto, be paid by the disbursing clerk for the Department of Justice at the rate of $1,200 per annum, as fixed by said act, in the same manner as the salaries of the clerks of the several United States courts in the Indian Territory are now paid: Provided, That the chief deputy clerks located at South McAlester, Muscogee, Vinita, and Ardmore, respectively, as well as all other extra clerk hire and office expenses, shall be paid by the clerks of the respective United States courts of the Indian Territory from the emoluments of their respective offices as provided by the act.

This provision as proposed to be amended would open up the entire compensation of deputy clerks, it seems to me, and would thereby change the existing law upon that subject, because the law provides that they shall only receive $1,200. That provision is stricken out. The amendment may not be necessary, and I hope the Senator from Nevada will give attention to it in conference and that it will be looked into carefully. I think probably it is a good provision to leave out, though I may be mistaken.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that was put in by the House, and undoubtedly the conference committee will be intelligent about that subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, on page 98, after line 2, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 16. That in carrying out any irrigation enterprise which may be undertaken under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and which may make possible and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the reclamation of all or any portion of the irrigable lands on the Yuma and Colorado River Indian reservations in California and Arizona, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to divert the waters of the Colorado River and to reclaim, utilize, and dispose of any lands in said reservations which may be irrigable by such works in like manner as though the same were a part of the public domain: Provided, That there shall be reserved for and allotted to each of the Indians belonging on the said reservations 5 acres of the irrigable lands. The remainder of the lands irrigable in said reservations shall be disposed of to settlers under the provisions of the reclamation act: Provided further, That there shall be added to the charges required to be paid under said act by settlers upon the unallotted

Indian lands such sum per acre as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior shall fairly represent the value of the unallotted lands in said reservations before reclamation; said sum to be paid in annual installments in the same manner as the charges under the reclamation act. Such additional sum per acre, when paid, shall be used to pay into the reclamation fund the charges for the reclamation of the said allotted lands, and the remainder thereof shall be placed to the credit of said Indians and shall be expended from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for their benefit.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 6, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 17. That in carrying out any irrigation enterprise which may be undertaken under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and which may make possible and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the reclamation of all or any portion of the irrigable lands on the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev., the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reclaim, utilize, and dispose of any lands in said reservation which may be irrigable by such works in like manner as though the same were a part of the public domain: Provided, That there shall be reserved for and allotted to each of the Indians belonging on the said reservation 5 acres of the irrigable lands. The remainder of the lands irrigable in said reservation shall be disposed of to settlers under the provisions of the reclamation act: Provided further, That there shall be added to the charges required to be paid under said act by settlers upon the unallotted Indian lands such sum per acre as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior shall fairly represent the value of the unallotted lands in said reservation before reclamation, said sum to be paid in annual installments in the same manner as the charges under the reclamation act. Such additional sum per acre, when paid, shall be used to pay into the reclamation fund the charges for the reclamation of the said allotted lands, and the remainder thereof shall be placed to the credit of said Indians and shall be expended from time to time, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, for their benefit.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I have no objection to that amendment, but I think that we had better make it general while we are legislating on the subject. I therefore move to insert, after the word "Nevada," in line 13, the words "or any other Indian reservation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 17, on page 99, line 13, after the word "Nevada," it is proposed to insert "or any other Indian reservation."

Mr. SPOONER. How will it read as amended? What is it about?

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended, the section would read:

SEC. 17. That in carrying out any irrigation enterprise which may be undertaken under the provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and which may make possible and provide for, in connection with the reclamation of other lands, the reclamation of all or any portion of the irrigable lands on the Pyramid Lake Indian Reservation, Nev., or any other Indian reservation, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reclaim, utilize, and dispose of any lands in said reservation which may be irrigable by such works in like manner as though the same were a part of the public domain, etc.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, there are two or three little amendments which I desire to have made. On page 8, line 15, after the word "court," I move to strike out "to be——"

Mr. LODGE. Has the last amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last amendment has not yet been agreed to. The Chair thought the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] addressed the Chair.

Mr. STEWART. I thought the amendment had been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand that the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] has been agreed to—to include any and all reservations?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to without objection, but the Chair will consider it open if the Senator from Missouri desires.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not know that the committee had accepted the amendment to include any and all Indian reservations.

Mr. STEWART. There can be no objection to it on any reservation. When it comes in the system of irrigation for particular lands, of course the reservation must be included in order to carry out the system; and if they irrigate the land of the Indians and give them for barren wastes 10 acres of irrigated land——

Mr. ALLISON. Five acres.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Only 5 acres.

Mr. STEWART. Ten acres, is it not?

Mr. SPOONER. I did not suppose there was any limit in the bill.

Mr. STEWART. I think we had better put it at 5 acres, because if they get 5 acres that will be enough.

The agent at the works telegraphed that it is necessary that it should be only five. If an Indian gets five acres of irrigated land, he is a rich man.

Mr. SPOONER. What becomes of the Indians whose lands are injured—which are overflowed or damaged?

Mr. STEWART. If they can be found we will attend to their cases. I do not think there is any danger of that. What about the white man who may be injured——

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If I understand this provision, it proposes, where Indians are on reservations which are irrigable and are to be irrigated, to give them five acres of land only and to dispose of all the rest of the land in the reservation to settlers and pay the result into the reclamation fund.

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Now, if the Senate desires to do that, these amendments are properly drawn to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. SPOONER. And that without consulting the Indians.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I so understand.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I did not understand that section 17 gives such authority. I read the provision hastily, and it occurred to me that if we were going to extend the reclamation law to any particular reservation it would be well to have a general provision extending it to all of the reservations. Of course, if the Senator from Connecticut thinks this disposes of lands in all these reservations belonging to the Indians I shall withdraw the amendment, for I have no desire to do that.

Mr. STEWART. I think you had better withdraw it.

Mr. ALLISON. It certainly does that. In lines 20 and 21 you will see it is provided that all irrigable lands not allotted shall be disposed of under the provisions of the reclamation act.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is this in favor of the amendment—that these lands, until they are irrigated, are worth nothing. It is not like taking agricultural lands away from the Indians and allowing them nothing for them. There is that distinction between desert lands and agricultural lands. Now, the amendment does, as I understand it, take away from the Indian upon any reservation which is irrigated all except 5 acres.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I think the Senator from Connecticut is correct in his reading of the amendment, and I withdraw my amendment in order not to complicate the matter.

Mr. DUBOIS. Does the Senator withdraw the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator withdraws the amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 15, strike out the words "to be;" so as to read:

For one stenographer to each of the three judges of the Choctaw and Chickasaw citizenship court, appointed by them, respectively, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. On page 1——

Mr. STEWART. I wish to put in one or two little amendments to finish up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. These are reserved committee amendments.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 24, after the word "Interior," insert the following:

By the Commission of three persons provided for in said section of said act.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment be again stated.

Mr. STEWART. Read it as the clause will read if amended.

The SECRETARY. On page 54, line 24, after the word "Interior," it is proposed to insert "by the Commission of three persons provided for in said section of said act;" so that, if amended, it will read:

And all other lands and deposits of like character in said nations segregated under any act of Congress shall, instead, be sold, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, by the commission of three persons provided for in said section of said act, after due advertisement, upon sealed proposals, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and approved by the President, with authority to reject any or all proposals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Are there not some committee amendments which have been passed over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are several committee amendments which have been passed over; two, the Chair believes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let us dispose of the amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. MCCUMBER. There is one matter which I wish to call up. I refer to what occurred yesterday, and I invite the attention of the junior Senator from Massachusetts to the proposition. I believe he raised the point of order on the Eli Ayres amendment.

I submitted to the Senator yesterday the report that was made by the committee, with the request that he would read it over to see whether or not he desired, from his previous knowledge of the case, after reading the report, to stand upon his objection. I know the Senator from Massachusetts would make no objection unless he considered that there were other grounds than the mere point that it was general legislation, for the reason that many amendments of general character have gone through.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will excuse me, I did not make the point of order that it was general legislation. I made the point of order that it was a private claim.

Mr. McCUMBER. As a private claim. I will say that many other private claims have been put on this bill, and I assume, therefore, that the Senator would make no objection unless there was some other reason back of it in his mind why this as a private claim should not be allowed.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator allow me to ask how many private claims are included in this bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not the number.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not true that there are sixty or seventy private claims included in this appropriation bill?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. How many?

Mr. CLAY. Sixty or seventy.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Oh, no.

Mr. STEWART. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. CLAY. How many pages in this bill are devoted to general legislation?

Mr. McCUMBER. Perhaps the chairman can answer the question. I will not myself attempt it.

Mr. CLAY. I have been told that there are twenty-one pages in it devoted to general legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. The question I wish to raise is of an entirely different character.

In 1839 Eli Ayres purchased 194 sections of land in an Indian reservation, from the Chickasaws, I believe it was. They were Indian reservees. This was done in conformity with the requirements of a treaty made with the Chickasaw Nation in 1834. He paid for that land according to the agreement, a hundred and fifty-five thousand two hundred dollars. This, I believe, was at the rate of one dollar and a quarter an acre.

It is contended on the part of the Department, as I remember, that this land was granted to the Chickasaws as a tribe and did not belong to them individually, and therefore they had no right to sell it individually. They did sell it. They passed their deeds. They received $155,000, as I am informed, according to the report, and the Government refused to concur in the deeds, and, holding that the land did not belong to the Chickasaws, or at least that they had no right to transfer it, the Government threw one-half of it open to settlement, or about that, and sold the other half.

For that which was sold the Government received some $56,000, which was put into the Treasury of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States held after that, as did the supreme court of the State of Mississippi, that those deeds were valid, that the land did belong to the Chickasaws individually, and that they had the right to convey the same, and since that time this claim has been pending before the Departments of the Government seeking to recover the amount paid.

Now, inasmuch as the Government received in actual cash for this land, which had been absolutely purchased and to which a good title had been obtained by Eli Ayres, the sum of only about $56,000, the claim of Mr. Ayres or his assignee was cut down to the sum of $56,000, the actual amount received by the Government of the United States.

Now, three things are undenied: First, the land did belong to Eli Ayres. He got a clear title to that land. Secondly, the Government had no title; and, thirdly, the Government took the land of Eli Ayres and sold it and received for that which was sold $56,000, and also opened up to settlement the balance of the land that had been purchased by him, for which, of course, it received nothing, it being taken as homesteads, etc., I presume.

Now, the question which arises is whether the Government, having sold property that did not belong to it and having received money for those lands, ought not at least to pay to the legal owner of the land what it received. This is the statement which comes before the committee. I served on the subcommittee on this case. It will come up year after year, and the same facts will be furnished us, which are found in the reports that have been made by the Secretary of the Interior, the deeds, etc., every one of which is obtainable. As I say, the question will come up again year after year, and if there is any reason why it is not a valid claim, and if the Senator from Massachusetts can give us that reason, I certainly will be gratified to receive it here on the floor, so that we may know that there is something back of what appears on its face to be a just claim. On the face of the facts it does appear clearly and beyond any question that the Government did take land belonging to Eli Ayres, and that it sold it and received the money for it.

Now, as I say, there may be something back of this which the subcommittee has not been able to find and of which some Senator can inform us. If there is, I know the subcommittee which has had this matter in charge will be glad to hear it, and so will the Committee on Indian Affairs. I fail to find any reason why it should not be paid.

Mr. CULBERSON. I notice that the amendment refers to Ayres as having been a resident of the State of Texas. I will ask the Senator if any other committee of this body ever reported this claim favorably?

Mr. STEWART. Oh, yes; the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the Committee on Claims has reported it favorably.

Mr. ALLISON. At this session?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; it has been before the Committee on Indian Affairs at this session.

Mr. ALLISON. On this bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. On this bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest that if objections are going to be made to particular items in this bill because they are private claims the general rule should be insisted on as to all of them.

Mr. McCUMBER. The reason why I called up this matter at the present time is that the same item was on the bill a year ago, I believe, and the same point was raised, and of course it was sustained; but those who have considered it feel that it is a fair amendment and that it ought to be paid. If there is any reason why it should not be paid and why it should be excepted from other amendments of like character, we ought to know it, and then we will be prepared to take it up again when it comes before the Senate.

Mr. STEWART. It went out in conference.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am informed that it was put on the bill and went out in conference.

Mr. TELLER. In answer to the inquiry whether the Committee on Claims has ever reported this matter, I will state that while a member of that committee I reported the bill for $155,000.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the amount now?

Mr. TELLER. Fifty-eight thousand dollars. It has been repeatedly reported from the Committee on Claims for that sum. The Government got actually in cash for this land $58,000, and finally, in order to compromise the difference between Senators, it was agreed that this amount should be paid. Last year we put it on this same appropriation bill, and the House refused to concur. It may do so again. I do not know. The report I made must have been ten years ago.

I regard this claim as an obligation on the part of the Government of the United States as binding as the obligation of any bond that the Government ever executed, and more so, because by force practically it took the money away from this man, long since dead, as I know, but whose heirs are entitled to it. Later the courts held that the title he had was good; and if the people who bought this land of the Government have any title at all, it is the title that lapse of time gives.

Mr. LODGE. I made the point of order against this claim. It is a large claim. It is an old claim. It has been here a great many years, I know. It has been discussed here at length. Some years ago I became entirely convinced, perhaps erroneously, although I have seen no reason to change my mind, that it was not a sound claim. I do not care to take the time of the Senate on the Indian appropriation bill in discussing the Eli Ayres claim. It can be argued here by the hour. I do not think it ought to be on the Indian appropriation bill. I do not approve of putting private claims generally on appropriation bills. I have not undertaken to make points of order against all of them, but I did against this one because I had discussed it at length and thought I knew something about it. I shall not withdraw the point of order, which I believe has been sustained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is so informed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I wish to offer an amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are several amendments which have been passed over.

Mr. STEWART. Let us dispose of those which have been passed over.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I thought we were through with the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks there are two other committee amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask what became of the Ayres amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Senator from Massachusetts insist upon the point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He did not withdraw it.

Mr. LODGE. I made the point of order yesterday, and the amendment was ruled out yesterday.

Mr. CULBERSON. Does the Senator insist upon the point of order?

Mr. LODGE. Yes, Mr. President; I made the point of order yesterday.

Mr. SPOONER. Yesterday afternoon the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] submitted some observations as to the treaties under which arises the claim of the Delawares for reimbursement for the difference between what should have been paid in gold and what was paid in currency. I should like a little more definite information from the Senator, if he has it at hand, upon that branch of this question, which is really the pivotal point in it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is that before the Senate? It was passed over.

Mr. QUAY. The Delaware amendment was not passed over. It was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was agreed to as amended.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It was agreed to?

Mr. QUAY. It was agreed to as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator allow the two other amendments which have been passed over to be disposed of?

Mr. ALLISON. It was my understanding that the Delaware amendment would be brought up when the bill reached the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes; in the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. The amendment was agreed to, and the Senator withdrew the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserved the point of order on the amendment, with a view of debating the question when it came up in the Senate.

Mr. QUAY. I did not hear anything about debating it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment which has been passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 5, after the words "practical stockmen," it is proposed to insert "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe:" so as to read:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, etc.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this amendment and the one at the bottom of page 8 were passed over largely at my request, I think. I have since then got a statement in regard to the nature of the examinations, which I will print in the RECORD, and also statements and reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs:

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION,
Washington, D. C., March 23, 1904.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate.

SIR: In compliance with your telephone request of the 22d instant for a statement of the subjects included in the examinations for farmer, matron, and stockman in the Indian Service, the Commission has the honor to submit the following information:

FARMER EXAMINATION.

Subjects:	Relative weights.
Penmanship	5
Spelling and copying	5
Farm economy, relating to farm implements, appliances, machinery, and buildings	25
Keeping accounts, elementary tests in farm accounts	5
Practical questions in carpentry and blacksmithing, embracing construction of farm buildings and ordinary blacksmithing and horseshoeing	15
Practical questions in farming, embracing operations with soils, crops, timber, in dairying, stock raising, orcharding, and gardening, as applied to general farming	25
Experience in farming	20
Total	100

MATRON EXAMINATION.

Subjects:
Penmanship	5
Spelling and copying, about seven lines of ordinary prose containing twenty or more misspelled words	5
Domestic economy, comprising practical economical housekeeping and the training of pupils in domestic science and good morals	25
Keeping accounts (a memorandum of domestic supplies received and issued is given, and the competitor required to make the proper entries to account for same)	10
Nursery management and domestic hygiene, involving a knowledge of the principles of domestic hygiene, the diseases of children and their treatment by the nurse, the ventilation and disinfection of the sick room, what to do until the doctor comes in emergency cases, and the general duties of a nurse	25
Cutting, fitting, and sewing, an essay of from 200 to 250 words on each of two topics relating to cutting, fitting, and sewing by both hand and machine	15
Experience	15
Total	100

STOCKMAN, DAIRYMAN, AND OTHER EXAMINATIONS FOR MINOR POSITIONS.

Subjects:
Age	20
Physical condition	20
Experience	60
Total	100

It will be noted that in the farmer examination the practical questions and tests, including a consideration of the experience of the competitor, constitute 85 per cent and the educational or scholastic tests, embracing merely the elements of a common-school education, but 15 per cent. An elementary knowledge of carpentry and blacksmithing is included for the reason that industrial teachers as well as farmers are appointed as a result of this examination, the scope and character of which were determined upon by the Commission, with the cooperation of officers of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The subjects included are only those considered by that Bureau as necessary and proper tests of fitness of its farmers and industrial teachers. The minimum scholastic tests have been insisted upon by that Bureau for the reason that the farmers in the Indian Service are also teachers of general farming and farm economy and should have sufficient education to intelligently instruct the pupils placed under their supervision.

Indian school supervisors and other officers closely connected with the Indian school work have urged that the standard be raised and that only well-educated and highly trained farmers who have an excellent knowledge of the theory as well as the practice of agriculture be appointed in the Service; but the small salaries offered are not sufficient to induce such men to seek the positions. It is not believed, however, that the present minimum standard for this position may be materially lowered without injury to the Service. Several weeks ago the Commission suggested to the Indian Bureau an increase in the relative importance of the element of experience as a desirable modification of the examination, but the Bureau has not yet concurred in the suggestion. It may also be stated that for the Indian schools in the arid region practical questions relative to irrigation and experience in such work are included in the examination, with a relative weight of 20 per cent.

While the Commission has failed at times to secure a sufficient number of qualified men for this service, owing to its unattractive character and the low salaries offered, the service has not been materially embarrassed through such failure, as temporary appointments of the Department authorized by the Commission have been made permanent where no eligibles were secured in a reasonable time. Special facilities have also been afforded to such temporary appointees to take the regular examinations by arrangement in certain cases to have them held at the schools where such appointees are employed.

The examination for the position of matron was determined upon by the Commission in conjunction with the officers of the Interior Department in the same manner as that for farmer, and embraces only those subjects considered essential tests of fitness for the position.

For positions of cook and laundress, and others of a minor character, no educational tests are required, although it has been stated by officers of the Indian Service that such employees act as teachers of their respective occupations and should therefore be tested in the elements of a common school education in addition to a knowledge of their respective trades or occupations. It is understood that the Department has been favorable to the retention of these minor positions in the classified service for the reason that quite as capable a class of employees has been secured as it would be possible to obtain in any other way for the low salaries paid.

The Commission will be pleased to furnish such further information as may be desired concerning examinations and appointments in the Indian Service.

Very respectfully, JOHN C. BLACK, President.

It will be seen that the examinations are extremely practical, in the case of a farmer only 15 per cent relating to penmanship, spelling, copying, and keeping accounts; 85 per cent is entirely as to experience and knowledge in farming. It is the same way in regard to the matrons, only 10 per cent being in reference to penmanship, spelling, and copying, while the other 90 per cent relates entirely to practical questions of housekeeping and experience. For stockmen, dairymen, and other minor positions the only subjects are age, physical condition, and practical experience. There is no scholastic examination whatever. It seems to me the examinations are not unreasonable.

The statements of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs seem to indicate that on the whole the officials think this system, if not perfect, is better than the old system. It seems to me the amendment proposes rather a radical change in the existing law without any information direct from the Department in regard to it. If it was the desire of the officers who are charged with the care of Indian affairs I of course should not think of putting my opinion against theirs, but it seems to me under the circumstances that it is a change which had better not be made without further knowledge than I at least have. For that reason I make the point of order that both of the amendments are general legislation and propose a change of existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. On what page are they?

Mr. LODGE. Pages 7 and 8, in regard to farmers and stockmen and matrons.

Mr. SPOONER. So far as the point of order is concerned, it is very difficult to say what is and what is not general legislation. This provision, I understand, lasts for a year, just as the provision that precedes it lasts for a year; and if in a bill appropriating money it is incompetent, because it is general legislation, for Congress to provide as to the instrumentalities which shall be employed in its expenditure and disbursement, it being a temporary provision anyway, living only as long as the appropriation lives, then there is a great deal in this bill that is general legislation; and so in every other appropriation bill. I think a ruling sustaining the point of order is one which would very much and very unfortunately tie up the hands of the Senate in the enactment of appropriation bills.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that this expires with the year. I think this is legislation which does not. I think as it stands it is general legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. It does not say "hereafter."

Mr. LODGE. No; but I think it is a clause which clearly, like a great deal of other legislation on appropriation bills, of course, as the Senator knows, does not expire with the year. I think this is of that character. It is a change in existing law. This changes existing law, and although that is the House rule and not our rule, I think it gives the amendment the character of general legislation. It changes an existing statute, which is a permanent statute.

Mr. SPOONER. I know what "general legislation" is under the constitutions of the States as contradistinguished from private and local or special legislation; but what this phrase "general legislation" embraces here or how to make any satisfactory definition of it, I have never yet discovered.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is a very vague term as it is used here. The President of the Senate, in ruling the other day, described it as legislation of a permanent character that did not expire with the bill. That is, he gave that as one definition. I have always thought the House definition as to an amendment changing existing law was much better. This certainly changes existing law, and as it changes an existing general statute, which is not an appropriation bill, it seems to me to come fairly within the scope and phrase "general legislation," because we are repealing a portion of a general statute.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, on its face it is not general legislation, as you can see. It says:

> To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments and rental of quarters, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $125,000.

It makes the appropriation for this year.

Mr. SPOONER. That is all right. That leaves the regular farmer just as he was.

Mr. STEWART. It makes the appropriation for this year.

Mr. SPOONER. This is for additional farmers and stockmen——

Mr. STEWART. And fixes the price.

Mr. SPOONER. And fixes the method of examination which shall apply to them. That changes no existing law. It regulates the appropriation of money which for the first time is made in this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I thought this was a regular appropriation made every year.

Mr. SPOONER. No; not this one for additional people.

Mr. LODGE. I thought we made that appropriation for additional people every year.

Mr. SPOONER. The chairman of the committee says no. Suppose the Civil Service Commission should lose a stockman now and then by some——

Mr. GORMAN. Do what? I can not hear.

Mr. SPOONER. Suppose the horrible thing should happen that the Civil Service Commission should for a year lose jurisdiction of a stockman——

Mr. STEWART. Or of a farmer——

Mr. SPOONER. Or a farmer——

Mr. STEWART. On a reservation——

Mr. SPOONER. Or a matron. I do not think it would shake the foundations of the universe or leave Liberty bleeding in the streets. But on the face of this amendment the point certainly is not well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senate desires the present occupant of the chair to rule on the point of order, he is perfectly willing to do so. He is under the impression that the existing law is changed by this amendment. Congress has already given to the President authority to extend the civil-service laws whenever he thinks wise, and if he thought wise he could do it just as well with this amendment out as with it in.

Mr. STEWART. Submit the point to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment changes existing law in that it takes the authority away from the President and gives it to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SPOONER. If the Chair will pardon me a suggestion, Congress makes a great many changes in existing law when it adds employees that are not provided for by existing law. That is a change in existing law, but it is not necessarily general legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair should have said "general legislation."

Mr. SPOONER. Is it general legislation? Is it possible that it is general legislation, and therefore obnoxious to the rule of the Senate, for Congress, leaving subject to the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission or the President those regular officers who have heretofore been provided for and whose compensation is simply provided for here, to add other employees who never have been in that work?

Mr. LODGE. I understand, as a matter of fact, that this clause has been carried for some years.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know about that.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. We have been in the habit, where very doubtful points of order have been raised, of having them submitted to the Senate. This apparently, from the discussion, is of such a doubtful character, and I suggest to the Chair that the point of order be left to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no hesitancy whatever in doing it. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. It can be submitted to the Senate on an appeal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. LODGE. Has the Chair decided the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not decide it. Is the amendment in order?

Mr. LODGE. Before that is done, I merely wish to say that I have here some statements of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I know very little about the Indian Service, but——

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I suggest to the Senator to read them.

Mr. LODGE. They are extracts from his reports.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Let the Senator read anything bearing on this question in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. LODGE. It is an extract from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of 1902. He says:

> The application of the classified service to this branch of Government employees has raised the tone and elevated the morals of the Indian school service.

He further says:

> Through politics and favoritism the Indian school service was handicapped to a considerable extent in the past, but this objectionable feature has gradually given way to a more efficient corps of employees, through which the schools have steadily improved and are now being intelligently conducted and rendering valuable service, with very little, if any, reasonable grounds for adverse criticism.

In his report for 1903 he says:

> The difficulty surrounding those who are employed in Indian schools is extremely great. Charged with the responsibility of forming the moral characters of numbers of Indian children who do not appreciate the restraints with which our own children are familiar, and knowing these general conditions, the characteristics of the Indians, and the lack of home support, when cases of immorality among the pupils are reported they are not judged with the same degree of harshness as would be the case had they occurred in a white school.

As employees of the Indian schools, if these people are to teach the Indians the business of farming, stock raising, and so on——

Mr. SPOONER. How is that?

Mr. LODGE. As I read the provision to which the amendment applies, they are "to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making an effort for self-support."

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator was reading about schools.

Mr. LODGE. I was saying that I suppose this comes under the general head of instruction.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LODGE. Permit me to finish reading this extract.

Mr. STEWART. We have followed that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; if he will not yield.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. STEWART. I say we have followed the suggestion the Senator has just read. We had some controversy about schools and agents and so on, and we followed that suggestion. We had quite a contest here whether that is to be carried out.

Now, here is another thing that the Commissioner recommends. He finds he can not get farmers under that system, and he recommends this slight change for half a dozen farmers to superintend farms and stock raising on reservations. The same man who wrote that recommended this provision.

Mr. LODGE. I, of course, give great attention to his recommendation. I should be glad if the Senator would read the recommendation he made.

Mr. STEWART. He made it verbally before the committee and it was put in at his suggestion.

Mr. LODGE. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. It was put in by the committee when the suggestion was made verbally. This was put in at the suggestion that it was impossible to get the right kind of men through the civil service to do that particular work.

Mr. LODGE. I see the subjects: "Examination for stockmen—age, physical condition, and experience." I suppose those are hardly scholastic tests.

Mr. SPOONER. That is very strong evidence that this matter ought not to be under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. Of course, I agree entirely with the Commissioner and the Senator from Massachusetts that the superintendent of schools and the teachers of Indian schools ought to be absolutely removed from politics. There is a great difference between handling children and handling hogs.

Mr. LODGE. I probably misunderstand the appropriation, but I supposed it was intended to instruct the Indians in farming and stock raising. That is what I supposed. I did not suppose they were merely employed to run a farm. I supposed they were employed to instruct the Indians and be associated with them. I think it is very desirable to get men of good character.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, when this matter first came up for consideration in the Senate I expressed the opinion that I thought it was wise, in view of the extraordinary power that Congress has conferred upon the President and the Civil Service Commission, that the whole question of the exemption of smaller places from the civil service should be treated as a whole and not be dealt with in this small way in various bills that are coming before Congress. I am still of that opinion. I have no doubt, and I trust, from what I read in the papers this morning as to the action of the President in the matter where there are quite a number of places to be filled in the construction of the isthmian canal, that he has rather reached that conclusion himself. I find that in his very extraordinary letter, which is published to-day, instructing the Commissioners, he uses the language which I shall read. It would seem that he believes in all important enterprises particularly civil service examinations can not well be applied to the smaller places. After notifying these gentlemen of their appointment as Isthmian Canal Commissioners, he says to them:

> I believe that each one of you will serve not merely with entire fidelity, but with the utmost efficiency. If at any time I feel that any one of you is not rendering the best service which it is possible to procure, I shall feel called upon to disregard alike my feelings for the man and the man's own feelings, and forthwith to substitute for him on the Commission some other man whom I deem capable of rendering better service. Moreover, I shall expect, if at any time any one of you feels that the work is too exhausting and engrossing for him to do in the best possible manner, that he will of his own accord so inform me, in order that I may replace him by some man who, to the requisite ability, joins the will and the strength to give all the effort needed. But so long as you render efficient service of the highest type in the work you are appointed to perform, you may rest assured of my hearty support and backing in every way.
> These are the conditions under which you have been appointed and under which I shall expect you to proceed. I shall furthermore expect you to apply precisely the same principles in the choice and retention of the subordinates who do the work under you as I have applied in your choice and shall apply in your retention. I shall expect you to appoint no man for reasons other than your belief in the aid he can render you in digging the canal. If, having appointed any man, you find that your expectations about him are not fulfilled or that from any reason he falls short of his duty, I shall expect you to dismiss him out of hand; I shall expect that under such circumstances you will pay not the slightest heed to any backing or influence the man may have. I assume, as a matter of course, that in dealing with contractors you will act on precisely the principles which would apply in any great private business undertaking. There is no man among you to whom I think it is necessary to say a word as to the standard of honesty to be exacted from every employee or contractor, for if I had had the slightest ground for suspicion that there was need to say such a word to any one of you I should not have appointed him. But I do wish to emphasize the need of unceasing vigilance in the performance of this great work.
> As to the details of the work itself I have but little to say. It is to be done as expeditiously as possible and as economically as is consistent with thoroughness. There is one matter to which I wish to ask your special attention—the question of sanitation and hygiene. You will take measures to secure the best medical experts for this purpose whom you can obtain, and you will, of course, make the contractors submit as implicitly as your own employees to all the rules and regulations of the medical department under you. I presume you will find it best to have one head for this medical department, but that I shall leave to your own judgment.
> The plans are to be carefully made with a view to the needs not only of the moment, but of the future. The expenditures are to be supervised as rigorously as if they were being made for a private corporation dependent for its profits upon the returns. You are to secure the best talent this country can afford to meet the conditions created by every need which may arise. The methods for achieving the results must be yours. What this nation will insist upon is that the results be achieved.

Mr. President, I think it is wise that the President should so instruct his Commission in regard to the selection of subordinates. He is receding from the advanced civil-service-reform idea which has been applied to small places such as those we are considering in this bill. It is the result, I have no doubt, of the President's experience when he has come to deal with these matters practically and when the responsibility of dealing with them is upon him. I do not know of any law in existence which authorizes such instructions in regard to employment, but the President has seen proper to determine that that is his power, his right, his duty, and it will apply to thousands and thousands of men.

As I said yesterday, I think the rule is a wise one, and he is perfectly justified, if he has the right, to instruct the Commissioners that the civil-service rules shall not apply to the persons who will be required in the construction of the canal. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts, who I know is an advocate of the civil-service-reform laws and regulations, that it is time some such rule as the President has now adopted in the employment of 20,000, 30,000, or 50,000 men, whatever the number may be, shall be extended to the service within the States and Territories of the United States.

I think it is fortunate that this matter comes as it does on the Indian appropriation bill, and that it comes at a time when the President has receded from the advanced position he has heretofore held.

I shall sustain the amendment of the committee, seeing that there is no way in which we can deal with the subject generally at the present session of Congress, and being perfectly prepared hereafter, at the next session of Congress, to restrict the power of the Executive, if it be necessary. Indeed, I think no man who considered the proposition in either branch of Congress when the original law was framed here contemplated that it would be extended as it has been to minor and subordinate positions.

I know that for a time, and for a very long time, the newspapers of the country, the civil-service boards, intelligent men, men of activity and of learning, created the impression that there was a disposition among men occupying seats in both Houses of Congress to oppose civil service because it was the matter of patronage that they wanted; that their only opposition to the law was because they wanted to benefit constituents and persons dependent somewhat upon them for political positions.

I myself have modified my own view within the last few years as to the operation of the law so far as it applies to clerkships and other offices of the Government. I think it has benefited the country and relieved us all. It is not a matter with me of patronage, but simply in the interest of the proper administration of the affairs of the country. I congratulate the country and rejoice in the fact that the President, whom I know to be entirely sincere in all the views he has had heretofore, has reached a point where he has opened the door and relieved the situation in the case of the isthmian canal. I only trust it will be extended, and that small farmers, charwomen, mechanics, and people who are dependent upon their daily toil for a livelihood shall have the opportunity to get these small places, not by political influence necessarily, but that the door may be opened to them as the President has now opened it to everybody who can live in the climate down on the Isthmus.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I agree with very much that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has just said, but I have never supposed that the civil-service law as it exists on our statute books or has been supplemented by legislation could by any means be held to apply to the building of the isthmian canal. So I do not think the order or statement which the President has just issued to the Commission has any significance whatever as relating to appointments under civil-service laws and regulations.

I think, with the Senator from Maryland, it is just right that there should be no appointments there by political influence, and even that Senators and Members of the House ought to refrain from recommendations of persons to be employed by that Commission. I myself have taken that ground. I received a great many applications from people who desired to be employed under the Commission, and I have uniformly said to them that I did not think the employment a matter which ought in any way to be influenced by what are supposed to be political considerations, and I must decline to make recommendations.

I would have said nothing on the subject, except I thought I gathered from what the Senator from Maryland said that the action of the President in some way was a departure from his former views with regard to appointments by civil service.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think the Panama Canal has any bearing whatever on the civil-service law or on this particular question; but I have no desire to have the Senate overrule what I believe to be a sound point of order. We have so few rules to protect us on appropriation bills that I do not wish to see this point overruled, and therefore I will withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I understood the Senator from Maryland to intimate some doubt of the power of the President to instruct the Commission in the matter of appointments. If the Senator will recur to the act he will find that the responsibility of constructing the canal is placed by law upon the President. Of course he is to do it through the Isthmian Canal Commission, but the act provides that—

> Said Commission shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President.

So everything the President said, I think, was not only well said, but said with as complete power as any public officer ever was charged with.

I do not think the Senator from Maryland is justified at all, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] has said, in inferring from the letter of the President—nor would he be if it were a specific order—that the civil-service rules should not apply to the construction of the canal, in imputing to the President any recession from his views in relation to the general subject of civil service. I have never supposed it could occur to any sane man in the United States that that canal could be constructed under the handicap, delay, and all that, of competitive examinations through the Civil Service Commission, thousands of miles away, a great work on which, I suppose, 50,000 or 60,000 men may be employed at a time—it may be more—where there will be a vast number of employees, some from this country and some not. The idea of applying to that work outside of the United States, technically, really, the civil service would be an utter absurdity, and would tend more than any other one act, I think, to impede the construction of the canal.

Mr. HOAR rose.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will withhold his amendment for a moment, until these amendments are agreed to. Without objection, the amendments on page 7 will be agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I rose to speak to the existing question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to say one word in regard to what has been said by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], because it seems to me that both those Senators, undoubtedly undesignedly, have perhaps confounded two very different things in speaking of the matter of appointment, as the Senator from Connecticut did, of persons to be employed on the isthmian canal. I understand that when civil-service reform was demanded and came into operation the whole civil service of the country, then amounting to between 50,000 and 100,000 persons, was practically used as an instrument for the promotion of the fortunes of the dominant political party, whatever it happened to be, and which at that time was the Republican party.

If it had gone no further than that, there was a certain reasonableness in the arrangement. At any rate, a very strong argument could be made for maintaining that practice. The dominant party is responsible for the Administration. The President is chosen as a political leader and as the head of a political party. I do not mean by that that he is to be the head of a political party in his executive action, but he is taken from among the great political leaders of the country. A party government, in the experience of mankind, wherever the people of a country in whole or in part govern themselves, is the best government that has ever existed on the face of the earth, and more is accomplished for liberty and order and advancement in that way than in any other.

Now, then, the political party being responsible for the Government and the Executive being responsible that the laws are faithfully and well executed, it was very earnestly and fairly argued that if that were all, it was better to make up the civil service of the country of men who were influential and active in their political parties. Such men are always and invariably men of energy. They are usually in our American community men of character, or they can not maintain their influence and leadership. The political party is then responsible, clear down to the roots, for an efficient and honest and satisfactory administration.

That was the old system brought in. It is our habit to say that in the old times of Washington and Jefferson that did not exist. General Washington declared when he was President that he would not knowingly put into any important public office a man who did not maintain the political opin ons of his Administration; and when Mr. Jefferson came into office he declared that he found every place in the civil service and every office above the lowest grade in the Army filled by a political opponent of his own.

But the trouble was the thing went further. The able and influential members of the two Houses of Congress undertook to claim not that the Administration should fill the offices with persons representing fairly the dominant party in different places, but that they should fill the offices with their particular adherents.

There were instances which the Senator from Maryland undoubtedly may remember—it is not necessary for me to specify them—where eminent politicians, Republicans holding offices in the Senate and the House, would recommend a Democrat a great deal quicker than they would recommend a man who was not devoted to their own personal fortunes, and who did not belong to their political faction in the party. So the thing became unpopular, and in some places a scandal, not because the appointments were political, but because they were made the instruments of building up in different parts of the country a sort of personal chieftainship; and the man who came to the Senate or the House frequently had, as Scott says in Waverly, a Vich Ian Vohr, with his tail on set of retainers in the Departments, who were thoroughly and utterly devoted to that man's political fortunes without any regard to the interests of the party which was organized to advance certain political principles. Every Senator will remember instances of that kind.

Civil-service reform went on the theory not that those examinations are the best possible way of ascertaining whether men are honest or efficient or capable of particular executive functions; it went on the ground that, on the whole, a system which was open to all citizens alike, which determined the title to appointments to office by certain examinations, while not the best thing possible, was infinitely better than determining them by the simple test of whether the candidate or the applicant was devoted to the particular fortunes of an ambitious candidate in the Senate or in the House of Representatives or in some other political office. It is not the best system; but it is a better system practically by far than the one it has supplanted, and it has grown in favor, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] indicated in his own case, by trial. The putting a stop to patronage for that purpose is a very different thing from the practice of consulting Senators and Representatives in regard to matters, even like this very matter of the persons who are to be employed in this mighty enterprise of building the Panama Canal.

I suppose everybody will agree that with such public instruments all employees of this sort ought to be fairly divided between the different sections of the country. The Government can not maintain the confidence or the affection or the support of the people unless the people of every part of the country have their fair and full share in it. It would not be just, if you are to appoint a thousand men for this particular public service, to take them all from California or all from Mississippi or all from Massachusetts, even if you got in that way, on the whole, a better set of public employees. Everybody agrees to that. If that is to be done, how is the President or how is an Executive Department to find out who are the best men and the qualities of men in a particular State, except by inquiry of the men whom that State has selected, or men of experience, acquainted with their people at home, whom the State selects as the best examples of its intelligence and capacity and integrity?

If the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] were applied to, who would know better than the Senator from Connecticut the capacity or quality of a young man in Hartford or in Meriden or in New Haven? Either he is to be consulted, or his associates in the other House are to be asked, when such a man applies for service as a clerk, or as a man capable of managing 500 men in the canal digging, or as an engineer, or as an accountant—either the Senator and his associates have got to be consulted and give their opinion in such cases, or the Administration has got to establish all over the country a lot of private and unofficial irresponsible sources of information, as the Administration now does in some of the Southern States, where there are no representatives in either House of Congress of its political party.

I do not believe that the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Connecticut will differ with me when I say that I do not think that method of procedure—perhaps the best the Administration could get—has worked very well in the South. If I were President of the United States, I should invite, in those Southern States which have not Republican Representatives, the confidence of the Senators and Representatives from those States, being quite certain that every one of them would not, in any advice so solicited, be governed by particular party or political feeling. I do not suppose, if a young engineer from Hartford or from Meriden, Conn., wanted to be employed on this canal and should apply to my friend from Connecticut, that he would care two cents whether he was a Republican or a Democrat.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I certainly would not.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Connecticut says he certainly would not, and we all knew that before he said it.

Why, then, in every instance should Senators not be expected to give any Department such information as they have in this important matter? What we want to put an end to and to keep out of the public service—and we have got it out of the public service—is the old political chieftainship, if I may use that phrase; the making of the political executive officers in this country a band of retainers for political parties or ambitious politicians. If that could be completely accomplished, I do not think it would do any great harm if the Democratic party were to come into power. I do not think they ought to turn out the old and efficient public servants. I myself do not think—though I have been the most zealous of civil-service reformers from the very beginning and made one of the earliest speeches ever made in this country for that policy—I do not think it could do any great harm if the Democrats, in making new appointments, should select men whom they were willing to be responsible for in the administration of the public service, if it could be done fairly—fairly to the whole Democratic party; fairly to the whole community; fairly to those communities that are themselves Democratic. But what this civil-service reform is here for is what I have stated.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me, I think I thoroughly understood the Senator; and if I have, I agree with him.

Where a State is represented by an entire Democratic delegation, consisting of two Democratic Senators and an entire Democratic delegation in the House of Representatives, the Senator takes the position that in such cases, in his opinion, the party in power ought to advise with the Representatives and Senators from those States in regard to the character and fitness of appointees to office.

Mr. HOAR. Subject always to the correctness of the opinion, which I certainly entertain in regard to my associates here, that they would give that advice fairly and without regard to partisan considerations.

Mr. CLAY. Take, for illustration, the State of Georgia to-day, which, as I have said, has eleven Representatives in the other House and two Senators here. Those eleven Representatives and those two Senators represent the intelligence and the wealth of that State. I believe that the Constitution meant that the President should advise with the Senators before making appointments affecting the people in such States. I agree entirely with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts on that point.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, in what I have said I had no intention, and I am sure I did not convey the idea, of attacking the civil-service law or the regulations made by the Civil Service Commission and approved by the President, except to comment upon the fact that those regulations have been extended to various subordinate and minor places which have no earthly bearing upon the success of political parties.

The civil-service law giving power to the President to make rules and regulations which are to have the force of law has been used and exercised by him to an extent which was never contemplated, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who was one of the original civil-service reformers.

But the President of the United States has seen proper—and he has undoubtedly the power—to apply the law to nearly every position, including the mechanics in the navy-yards and the subordinate places under the Interior Department. That has been a matter of very great hardship to that class of people.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me a moment, do I understand him to say that the law has been extended under the present Administration?

Mr. GORMAN. It has been extended.

Mr. LODGE. I understood the Senator to say that it had been extended by the present President.

Mr. GORMAN. To some extent.

Mr. LODGE. The extension of the civil-service law to employees in the navy-yards was made under President Harrison.

Mr. GORMAN. Under President Cleveland the law was also extended.

Mr. LODGE. President Cleveland extended it to 40,000 places.

Mr. GORMAN. Unquestionably. The President is a civil-service reformer and a believer in that principle; and, Mr. President, under the present Administration the President has enforced the law rigorously, and, I take it for granted, he has done so fairly; but he has applied it to a great number of subordinate officers within the United States. When, however, the Administration comes to deal with officers who have been sent to the Philippines, men who are sent seven or eight thousand miles from our borders, to fill places in which men ought not to be influenced by political considerations, holding the highest positions in point of salary, and with enormous responsibility, the civil-service law has been, by order of the President of the United States, suspended, and men who are sent to the Philippines to occupy such places have not been required to pass civil-service examinations, and the Senator from Massachusetts says that they ought not to be used as political agents.

So far as my observation has gone—and I do not criticise the President of the United States for pursuing that course—of the officers under him or his Secretaries, there are very few officials of importance who are not members of his own party. Whether they were appointed by the influence of Representatives or Senators I know not, and I do not care. Selecting them, as he has, outside of the civil service, to have consulted with his party friends in Congress would not be amiss; on the contrary, I think, as the Senator from Massachusetts has well said, he may get good information from that source.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. GORMAN. I yield.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May I inquire what officers the Senator from Maryland alluded to who were sent to the Philippine Islands as being exempted from the provisions of the civil-service law?

Mr. GORMAN. Nearly all of the civil officers.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The civil-service system there is more rigid than it is here.

Mr. GORMAN. In examinations?

Mr. LODGE. In appointments. There have been no appointments outside of the civil service, except those that came to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. GORMAN. It has not been three days since an order was issued that the subordinate officers, the clerks, collectors, and others in various positions, should be granted an increased compensation so long as they served in the Philippine Islands; and after service there——

Mr. LODGE. They are under the civil service when they go there.

Mr. GORMAN. They are not under the civil service by any means.

Mr. LODGE. Those were men who were under civil service when they went there.

Mr. GORMAN. No; they are not selected entirely from the civil service.

Mr. LODGE. Entirely.

Mr. GORMAN. Very few of them.

Mr. LODGE. The order applies only to those in the civil service, as I think the Senator will find.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator and I differ about that. I happen to know quite a number of persons who have gone to the Philippines who never passed a civil-service examination. They served in Cuba without a civil-service examination, and also in Porto Rico.

Mr. LODGE. The men who served in Cuba and Porto Rico were all certified and put in the classified service—all those who were considered fit.

Mr. GORMAN. I have not the order here, but I have it in my office. If the Senator will read the order of the Secretary of War issued within a week, he will see that it provides that all officers who go to the Philippine Islands shall receive increased compensation, and that when they return to this country, if they are certified by their superior officer as having performed their duties well, they can come back here and be eligible for appointment in the Departments at a reduced compensation.

I think I can not be mistaken, that in no case has a different rule been applied. It is probably wisely so. I do not criticise the President for that; I simply call attention to the fact that in all the appointments to places connected with the construction of the isthmian canal, as I have just stated, the President does not think for a moment of requiring such an appointee to pass the civil-service examination in order to be appointed by that Commission. I think it is wisely so. I think it would be impossible for him to apply the civil-service rules in the construction of that canal from the appointment of engineers down.

If that be true there, Mr. President, why must a more rigid rule, one that amounts almost to exclusion, be applied in all these little subordinate places in the country?

It is said—and said with great force, I have no doubt—that under the old rule ships were ordered to be constructed in the navy-yards at certain times for the purpose of increasing the number of employees, and that political influence was used in many cases where these yards were located. I have no doubt there was great abuse in that, and I think, to a very great extent, the enforcement of the law has had a beneficial effect.

I would not undo it all, but as the Administration has found it necessary to abrogate the rule in the class of offices which I have named, I do say that it is time, in my judgment, that it ought to be revised here and some more definite and just provision made for such cases as are now under consideration. Congress ought not to be called upon to be constantly legislating about these small places to gratify some head of a Department.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not wish to continue this discussion of the advantages or disadvantages to the Government and to the public service of the civil-service law and regulations. At the proper time I shall be quite willing to express my sentiments on that subject, but I know that the Senator in charge of this bill is very anxious to get on with it.

I simply want to say one word as to what I think would be the proper course to be pursued in the construction of the interoceanic canal. I think it has been put in the charge of the Panama Canal Commission to do this great work upon the same principles that would apply if a great transcontinental railroad was to be built by a private corporation from New York to San Francisco, if such a thing is possible to imagine. The construction of the Panama Canal is a great work and it ought to be pursued in the same way that a great work would be pursued by private enterprise. I should not expect that the president or the board of directors or the manager of such a great enterprise would inquire of me where he could find his engineers or his contractors or his bookkeepers, nor should I think it was any portion of my duty to recommend them to him.

Mr. HOAR. I might ask the Senator if his next-door neighbor happens to have a son who is a bright young fellow, would he not give him a certificate if he asked for it?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Very likely I would.

Mr. HOAR. That is all of it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But I want to say one thing. I have never asked a railroad company or any such establishment to appoint or employ a person in their service. If I did anything of that kind, I would do it, not as a Senator, not as a politician, but as an individual. I have not done it for fear that it might be supposed that I was asking it because I was a Senator or a politician.

I think this Commission has got the greatest work of the ages to carry through, and unless it does it on the strictest business principles, without reference to Senators and politicians as to the men who are to be selected to do that work, they will be in infinite trouble and there will be infinite scandal.

So for one I hope that no recommendation made by any executive officer or any person connected with the legislative branch of the Government will have any influence whatever in appointments or selections of persons to be employed under that Commission. I may be entirely singular about this, but I wanted to express that sentiment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not want to discuss the well-worn subject of civil-service reform, as it is called, or the classified service. I think it has proved of enormous value, and I hope that there will be no recession in it; but I do want to correct what I believe is an error on the part of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The Philippine service has been placed, and was placed at the earliest possible time, by Governor Taft under a civil-service system of classification far stricter than anything we have had in this country within my knowledge. The men transferred to that service were transferred from the classified service here, and they were given an advance of pay because they served in the Tropics. Of course, on their return, they were eligible to the classified service from which they had been transferred, but at a lower rate of pay.

In the Cuban and Porto Rican service men were appointed during a temporary exigency that lasted in Cuba for three years, and they were certified by the governor-general, in the case of Cuba, to the Departments here—that is, their names were placed on the eligible list, they having been tested for three years by Government service, and those whom the officers in Cuba considered to be good clerks or good officers were certified by them and were given eligibility in that way. I am perfectly certain that in the Philippines, since the service has been fairly organized, there have been no appointments made outside the regular classified service, except, of course, those which come through the Senate, with its power of confirmation.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I believe there is nothing pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are two amendments pending that have not yet been agreed to. One is the civil-service amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The point of order has been withdrawn on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order has been withdrawn; and without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Is there any other amendment?

Mr. STEWART. I do not suppose we can pass this bill to-night.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let us have an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment last adopted completes the committee amendments.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, if the committee amendments have all been disposed of, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I think we had better adjourn; and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LODGE. I hope the Senator will let us have an executive session for a short time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. STEWART. I yield.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Nevada withhold his motion to adjourn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada has withdrawn his motion and has yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], as the Chair understands.

Mr. STEWART. There is no use going on further to-night with the bill.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator permit me to ask for the present consideration——

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to know how I lost the floor? I believe I had the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not know he had the floor.

Mr. McLAURIN. I did have it, but I seem to have lost it.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] seemed to have the floor and moved to adjourn and then withdrew that motion.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Chair recognized me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will of course recognize the Senator from Mississippi; but he understood it to be the wish of the Senator in charge of the bill not to go on further with it to-night.

Mr. McLAURIN. I merely desire to offer an amendment to which the Senator in charge of the bill has said he has no objection. I should like to dispose of that amendment, because I may not be here in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

Any full-blood Mississippi Choctaw heretofore identified or entitled to identification under any application heretofore filed, who has removed or shall remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within six months from the passage of this act, shall be entitled to all the rights of a full-blood Mississippi Choctaw.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think that amendment ought to be adopted without the Senate knowing something about it and when it has never been submitted to the committee.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the Senator from Nevada in charge of the bill has seen the amendment and accepts it. At least, he said he would make no objection to it.

Mr. STEWART. I can not accept it, of course, so as to bind the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This is a very important question.

Mr. STEWART. It is an important amendment, and I suggest that it be printed and go over until to-morrow.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President——

Mr. CULLOM. If I can get the floor, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Illinois.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, March 24, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 23, 1904.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Horace Speed, of Oklahoma, to be United States attorney for the Territory of Oklahoma. A reappointment, his term having expired January 16, 1904.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY—CAVALRY ARM.

First Lieut. John C. Raymond, Sixth Cavalry, to be captain, March 21, 1904, vice Harrison, Second Cavalry, detailed as commissary.

Second Lieut. Douglas H. Jacobs, Fourteenth Cavalry, to be first lieutenant, March 21, 1904, vice Raymond, Sixth Cavalry, promoted.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander John M. Hawley to be a captain in the Navy from the 15th day of March, 1904, vice Capt. Theodore F. Jewell, promoted.

Lieut. Commander Frank F. Fletcher to be a commander in the Navy from the 12th day of March, 1904, vice Commander Charles E. Colahan, deceased.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Ulysses S. Macy to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 12th day of March, 1904, vice Lieut. Henry E. Parmenter, promoted.

Ensign Claude C. Block to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 28th day of January, 1904, after having completed three years' service in his present grade.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 23, 1904.

POSTMASTER.

MICHIGAN.

William N. Lister to be postmaster at Ypsilanti, in the county of Washtenaw and State of Michigan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, March 23, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following Senate resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 36) to reimburse John Waller, postmaster at Monticello, N. Y., for money expended in carrying the mail.

The resolution was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

Mr. REEDER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. REEDER. I understood, Mr. Speaker, that I was to have time this morning to present the matter of reconsideration called up yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not informed of any such agreement. This is a highly privileged motion and in order.

Mr. REEDER. I do not want, Mr. Speaker, to put this off too long; but if I can have time to-morrow morning I shall be satisfied.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make any agreement; but I understand the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, if it is in order at all, would be of the highest privilege—higher than that of a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The motion to reconsider is of the highest privilege, but after once entered it is a matter to be considered when it suits the House to reconsider it. The matter that the gentleman from Indiana calls up by his motion is of high privilege, and it is quite competent for the House to go on with that business, or it may refuse to go into Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to enter my point of order on the motion to reconsider, that it is not in order under the rules of the House, and let it go over with the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain any motion for other business until the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana is disposed of. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi) there were—ayes 105, noes 92.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question on ordering the yeas and nays was taken.

The SPEAKER. Thirty-four gentlemen have risen, not a sufficient number, and the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Inland mail transportation: For inland transportation by star routes, including temporary service to newly established offices, $8,100,000: Provided, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is authorized to provide difficult or emergency mail service in Alaska, including the establishment and equipment of relay stations, in such manner as he may think advisable, without advertising therefor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 11, page 14, the words "eight million one hundred thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "seven million eight hundred and fifty thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 11, page 14, strike out the words "eight million one hundred thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "seven million eight hundred and fifty thousand."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two. I would like to know whether the committee have taken any steps to require a better service in the star-route service?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Many efforts have been made in the past two or three years to require better service within the star-route system. The limitation of bidders to residents on these various routes, as well as the requirements of the contractors to deliver and collect mail from the patrons of the star routes, are in line with the improved service. Both of these propositions have resulted in improved service, although they have naturally called for more expenditure.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to cite, Mr. Chairman, one instance that came under my own observation. It was the case of a man who lived along one of the star routes, and he gave his mail to the contractor as he came by. The nearest postmaster complained that he was deprived of his revenue and urged a conspiracy by the patrons along the route to deprive him of the revenue. The Department at first refused to allow the carrier to take the mail, and it was only after an inspector had visited the neighborhood and reported that there was no conspiracy and after the Representative for that district had been put to a good deal of trouble that the matter was corrected. What I wish to know is why the Department did not give the man who lives along the star route an absolute right to put up his box and have the mail taken from it irrespective of the wishes or objections of the nearest postmaster?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That privilege is authorized and directed by the regulations of the Department. Wherever any patron residing along any star route will erect a box for the receipt of his mail a stipulation is entered into in each contract under the late administration that that box shall be recognized, and the contractor of the star-route service must deliver the individual mail for the patron into the box and collect mail as he may deposit in it.

Mr. RIXEY. That may be a regulation for the future, but I feel quite sure that it is not enforced now in all cases.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know about the special instance referred to by the gentleman, but that is the regulation, as I understand it.

Mr. COWHERD rose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COWHERD. Is it not a fact that that stipulation is put into all the new contracts, but that there may be some old contracts which have not been relet since this order was put in force which do not contain it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Quite right. Beginning with the last few years, as each route is advertised for anew, or any new service is inaugurated in the star service, that provision is inserted in the contract; and so far as the southern division, which was just let during the present year—during the past few weeks—is concerned, that provision was inserted in the advertisements, that all the contracts in that whole division must contain that stipulation. It is barely possible, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has suggested, that the case cited by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. RIXEY] may be under some of the old contracts, but the policy of the Department for the last few years is clearly in line with the suggestion I have made.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the chairman of the committee state what is the difference in the service furnished by the star-route service and that furnished by the rural free-delivery service?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The rural free delivery?

Mr. RIXEY. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The only difference is that the star-route contractor has no authority relative to registry and money-order service, and also the sale of stamps, while the rural free-delivery carrier does exercise that authority.

Mr. RIXEY. I will ask the chairman of the committee, for information, if it would not be well to extend that privilege also to the star-route service?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is a matter for consideration, perhaps, but that has not been taken up at this session.

Mr. RIXEY. Then, I would like to ask the gentleman this further question as to why there should be so much difference in the pay of the two services?

Mr. GRIGGS. Oh, that is easy.

Mr. RIXEY. Now, we have heard a good deal about the desirability of increasing the pay of the rural free-delivery carriers.

Mr. GRIGGS. I will answer that, if the Chairman will permit me.

Mr. RIXEY. But we have heard nothing about increasing the pay for the contract service or for requiring better service.

Mr. GRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I will answer my friend from Virginia as to that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GRIGGS. Two years ago the Post-Office Committee brought in a bill endeavoring to put the rural free-delivery service under the contract system. That is the system under which all star routes are let. The lowest bidder for a star route secures a contract and performs a service. Under the rural free-delivery service there has grown up a vast political machine, and the Government must pay, it seems, whatever salaries may be demanded by these organizations.

Mr. RIXEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask this question: Does he see any great reason why these two services should be under a different system?

Mr. GRIGGS. I did not two years ago, but this House almost unanimously did, and voted us down.

Mr. RIXEY. Does the gentleman believe there is any reason why there should be so much difference in pay?

Mr. GRIGGS. None whatever.

Mr. RIXEY. Because I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] the other day to state that the star-route carrier, for practically the same service, only gets something over $400, whereas——

Mr. GRIGGS. An average of $400.

Mr. COWHERD. He gets $400 on an average of a 20-mile route, and that has been increased, so the Second Assistant states, by reason of our increase in the pay of the rural carrier.

Mr. RIXEY. Then, Mr. Chairman, I believe I will offer an amendment to the pending section.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. RIXEY. I will ask to be recognized after that amendment is voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the committee is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on this subject which has just been discussed and make an answer myself in regard to this matter of rural free-delivery and star-route service. I want to say that I have for some time, whenever an opportunity has afforded itself, attacked the method and manner by which these star routes were let by the Post-Office Department. Now, it is true that until we established this rural free-delivery service and put it in operation there was no amendment nor any effort on the part of the Department which let out the star-route contracts to better that service in any sense of the word, nor have they ever made any effort until the rural service became permanent.

Gentlemen who were here four years ago remember that when we had the postal laws up for consideration, when an attempt was made to pass new laws to regulate the postal service, it was then suggested and also insisted even to the very last minute by the then chairman of the Post-Office Committee that the Second Assistant had no authority to do what he is doing to-day. If he has the authority now, he had it twenty years ago, and there was no effort upon the part of this Department to better the service in this country until the rural service was put into operation, and, in fact, developed all over the country. Then they began to see a way by which they could better the service. That is how it came about exactly. It was insisted then that if you proposed to let these rural routes out by contract they will be exactly where they were, as I insisted, four years ago and five years ago, and if you do it now you will soon be running mail routes with a one-eyed mule, as I said at one time, or a Texas pony hitched to one of these "jump-gulleys" all over the country with the United States mail; and there is not a Representative in this House who would admit, if he was in company with a foreigner, that that turnout was carrying the United States mail. That is exactly what we will get back to if you propose to put it under the contract system.

That is what it means. The difference that the gentleman is inquiring about is that up to a few years ago any man in this country could go and take contracts for thousands of routes all over the country and then go and sublet them, and that subcontractor could sublet his contract, until absolutely in our section of the country it got down to where a man would take a route of 20 or 25 miles and carry the mail on his back. That is the kind of service we had, and the rural service being forced upon this Department, the Second Assistant has discovered under this system a better way. If he had done what he ought to have done five years ago or ten years ago, I dare say the rural-route service would never have been heard of.

Mr. CROMER. Mr. Chairman, I can not understand why this item should increase so rapidly in the appropriation bill. According to the report of the committee I see that since 1891 this appropriation has increased 55 per cent, and yet the rural free-delivery service is displacing star routes all over the country very rapidly. It seems to me that the amendment of the chairman of this committee [Mr. OVERSTREET] ought to have gone much further, inasmuch as the bill proposes to appropriate $1,400,000 more than was appropriated last year, being 17 per cent increase. This effort on the part of the Department to popularize the star-route service is for the purpose of antagonizing rural free delivery.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. That is all there is in it.

Mr. CROMER. Instructions have recently been sent to special agents in my State that, in laying out rural free-delivery routes, whenever a special agent of rural free delivery comes to a road on which there is a star-route carrier the rural free-delivery service shall not be established on that road. For years and years this star-route service was carried on by very incapable agents driving blind mules through the country, a disgrace to our Government; but since the inauguration of rural free delivery the Department has seen fit to undertake to improve the service at the expense of the Government. I am in favor of reducing this appropriation much more than has been suggested by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the reduction in the appropriation, because I assume that the chairman of the committee has taken into consideration all the conditions existing and has concluded that the reduction can be made without detriment to the service, but I wish very briefly to reply to some of the statements made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CROMER]. Evidently the gentleman, happy and content, as he is and ought to be, with the extension of the magnificent rural free-delivery service in his district, forgets that there are vast areas in this country where it is utterly impossible, under present conditions or under the conditions which will exist for many years, to establish rural free-delivery routes.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Why is that? Let the House know why.

Mr. MONDELL. Because there is a very large proportion of our country so thinly and sparsely populated that it is impossible to get a population large enough within a given area to provide for the establishment of rural free delivery.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Just one other question. If that is true as to rural free delivery, why should it not hold good as to the star-route delivery?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I assume that the gentleman would not deprive citizens of the United States of the right and privilege to obtain mail because perchance the country in which they live is not fully developed or the conditions are such that it is impossible to settle the country thickly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then, why not give them the better mail service, even if the country is thinly settled?

Mr. MONDELL. They are receiving very fair service through the star-route system and hope to get better.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. It is only very recently that that is true, then.

Mr. MONDELL. The star-route service has been wonderfully improved in the last few years. That improvement has led to an increase in the cost of the service; and I want to call the gentleman's attention to the reasons for the increase in the cost of that service. He seems to be surprised that there should be an increase.

There has been an increase, first, because the western country is settling and developing and additional star routes are required. It is increasing because it has been necessary to make considerable expenditure for the establishment and the extension of star routes in Alaska. It has been increased further because the service has been vastly bettered, and the service should be still further improved. I do not think it is fair for a gentleman who has in his district the benefits of rural free delivery to say that improvements in the star-route service should not be had, because it may prevent the extension of rural free delivery. It certainly should not and does not have that effect.

Formerly star routes were carried very largely by syndicate bidders. Their methods were peculiar. They resulted in saving to the Government, but in very poor service to the people. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, in order to remedy that condition of subletting and resubletting, made certain provisions with regard to the contracts, which have resulted in routes being carried by people living in the vicinity, who give their personal attention to the carrying of the mails. This has resulted in better service. It has also increased somewhat the cost of the service.

Mr. CROMER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. MONDELL. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. CROMER. Are these routes now let to the individuals who carry the mail, or are they let to contractors here in Washington, who sublet to the men who do the carrying?

Mr. MONDELL. No bids are received for the carrying of mail on star routes unless the bidder submits with his bid a statement that he is a resident of the vicinity—I forget just the exact language, but this is what it amounts to—that he is a resident of the vicinity over which the star route runs or that he will move to the vicinity if he receives the contract, and will give the carrying of the mail his personal attention. This has resulted in breaking up very largely, almost entirely, the old syndicate system, which was certainly very objectionable.

Mr. CROMER. Does the gentleman know why it is that the committee, after reporting this bill, come in here and propose to reduce the appropriation $300,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I expect to explain that matter as soon as I get the floor.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the committee has no disposition to injure this service, and that the chairman of the committee understands that the service can be carried on under the reduced appropriation. Therefore I do not propose to object to the reduction.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KLUTTZ obtained the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] rise?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was seeking the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KLUTTZ] has been recognized.

Mr. KLUTTZ. Mr. Chairman, in reference to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], and in justice to the bureau of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, I want to say that the star-route box system was first tried as an experiment, as I recollect, in South Carolina about five years ago. It was done largely upon the initiative and the insistence of a gentleman now dead, who was then a faithful Representative of that State, Doctor Stokes, whom all of us who were then in the House well remember.

The system was tried there as an experiment, and it succeeded so well and gave such satisfaction to the public that since that time, in letting contracts in the different States (and they are let by divisions of the States every four years), the advertisements have been so written that the bidding for the star-route contracts has been with the distinct understanding that the persons performing the duty under these contracts should take the mail from the boxes and deliver it to the boxes of patrons of the route. In recent years, since that time, the star-route contracts which have been let ad interim in North Carolina have been let on that system, and it has given most excellent satisfaction to our people. The contracts in that State and the adjoining States have all been let to take effect on the 1st of July of this year upon that system. In remote sections of the country it has some advantages over the rural free-delivery system.

For instance, in the mountain section of my State, where the conditions of the roads and the unbridged streams and the paucity of the population do not justify in many instances the introduction of the rural free delivery, this star-route box system comes in and, to a great extent, performs the service which would be rendered by the free-delivery system. In some respects it has an advantage over that system, because the rural carrier travels over the route one way going and another way coming, while, as a rule, the star-route carrier goes and comes on the same route on the same day, so that letters can be received in the morning and answered in the afternoon by the patrons of the star route, the principal difference between the operation of the two systems being, in the first place, that the patron on the star route is not required to furnish any particular kind of box, but can put up any box that he chooses, and, in the second place, the star-route carrier is not required to sell postage stamps, money orders, or anything of that kind.

I merely say this in justice to the Department, which has been experimenting faithfully with this system, and now, I think, has it in such condition that it is likely to do great service to the country.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman has misunderstood the point I was trying to make. I was about to say that even in my State this contract business did not begin until last year.

Mr. KLUTTZ. That was the first four years' letting after the system was adopted.

Mr. MADDOX. My contention is that if there had been done what ought to have been done by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General—and there has been no change of the law—this system could have been adopted fifteen years ago just as well as recently.

Mr. KLUTTZ. If the gentleman from Georgia or myself or any other Member desiring the introduction of this system in his district had been as diligent as was Doctor Stokes, of South Carolina, in bringing the matter to the attention of the Department it would probably have been adopted long ago.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word in explanation of the amendment which proposes to reduce the amount of the appropriation carried in the bill. After the bill had been reported the committee learned, or rather I learned officially as chairman of the committee, that the bids for star routes in the southern section had very largely been opened and the prices for that service proved to be lower than the Department had expected.

I have a letter from the Acting Second Assistant Postmaster-General explaining that inasmuch as a large proportion of these bids have been opened, showing that they had overestimated, he recommends this reduction. This reduction is, therefore, not in conflict with any service now inaugurated, nor is it under the estimate of the Department revised in this letter concerning the southern section which has just been relet at an average increased cost of a little over 56 per cent of the last contract of four years ago.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the letter be read in my time in explanation of this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

STAR SERVICE.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, March 22, 1904.

SIR: Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of 21st instant, asking whether any reduction can be made in our original estimate for the transportation of mail by star routes by reason of the later information obtained in opening the bids for reletting of the four-year contracts in what is known as the "second contract section," including eight Southern States and Porto Rico; and also whether any further reduction can be made on account of probable discontinuance of star service as a result of the additional amount allowed for rural free-delivery service in the urgent deficiency bill.

In reply I have to say that in submitting the original figures for star routes for the next fiscal year it was estimated that in reletting the service in the southern section the cost would probably be increased from the old rate of 3½ cents per mile traveled to 6½ cents per mile traveled, owing to the new contracts providing for box delivery and collection service not included in the old contracts, and because of the higher rates now prevailing as compared with four years ago. This rate of increase was about 85 per cent.

We have not yet completed the reletting in the Southern States, but we have awarded 4,451 contracts at an average rate of 5.49 cents per mile traveled, an increase of about 57 per cent. We have not determined the exact number of routes yet to provide for in this section, but there will be approximately something over 400 such routes, and it is certain that the rate per mile for these routes will exceed the average of those already let, because on these routes no satisfactory bids were received under the first advertisement.

I would therefore now estimate that the rate per mile for service in the entire southern section under the new contracts will be 5.60 cents, or an increase of 60 per cent. On this basis I am now willing to say that the original estimate, $8,100,000, for star service may be reduced by $250,000, making the revised estimate for the next fiscal year $7,850,000. I believe it would not be safe to assume that there will be any larger rate of decrease in star service by reason of establishment of rural free-delivery service under the allowance made in the urgent deficiency bill than has obtained thus far during the current fiscal year, which rate of increase has been taken into consideration in these figures.

Very respectfully,
G. F. STONE,
Acting Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I now move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. RIXEY. I submit to the Chairman that I have an amendment that I desire to offer, and I would like to explain it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. This will not prevent the amendment from being offered and acted upon.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to explain it, which I will do in less than five minutes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I move that after five minutes all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RIXEY. I offer this amendment, to be acted upon as soon as the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "dollars," in line 11, the following:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for transportation on any star route which does not give as good service to the patrons along said route as is required to be furnished in rural free-delivery service."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I reserve the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose that it is necessary to discuss the point of order. If it is, I would like to be heard later on as to that. I want to give the reasons for the amendment first. As was stated a few moments ago, the star-route service can not be superseded in a great portion of the country by the rural free-delivery service. In the district I represent four of the ten counties have no rural free delivery, and the people do not seem to wish it. They are satisfied with the star-route service, but they wish to have the advantages and conveniences coming from the rural free deliveries. Now, the star-route service is much less expensive than rural free delivery; and why not give to the patrons of that service the same benefit, the same advantages, that the patrons of the rural free delivery have?

There are many objections in some cases to the free-delivery service. The carrier has to have 20 miles, and many of the patrons can not get their mail until late in the evening of the day in which the mail is delivered, whereas under the star-route service the people frequently get their mail hours before they would under the other service. Again, the star-route carrier travels each way over the same road. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is nothing but a reasonable concession to the people who are satisfied with the star-route service, which costs the Government so much less than the rural free delivery, to give them the best service that can be secured. Let the patrons on the star routes have the same conveniences as to delivery and collection of mail, sale of stamps, and registration of mail matter as now provided on the rural free-delivery routes, and still that service will cost the Government much less than the other.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Just a word. I think that the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order for the reason that this appropriation is for contracts already made, almost entirely. There would be a limited per cent of it used that would not go to contracts already made. The contracts already made contain no provision authorizing the star-route carrier to sell stamps, to sell money orders, or to receive and deliver registered mail. The rural-delivery carriers are Government employees who give bond for their services and exercise duties imposed by the Government. The regulations provide for the rural-delivery carrier to sell money orders and deliver registered mail and sell stamps.

If, therefore, this amendment should prevail, it would give authority to the many thousand star-route contractors now under contract to sell stamps, to sell money orders, to receive and deliver registered mail without any provision in their bond already given concerning those duties. That argument applies not only to the point of order, but equally well to the suggestion of the amendment itself upon its merits. Whatever may be done in the future concerning the enlargement of the privileges and authority of star-route contractors is a matter for more deliberate consideration than we can give to this amendment at this point, and it ought not to prevail in any event.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the paragraph and pending amendments is closed.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first put the question on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia. The Clerk will, without objection, again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Virginia on the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman from Indiana to rest his point of order largely upon the fact that a portion of this money was to be used on the route for which contract had already been let. I do not consider that that objection is a good reason for sustaining the point of order, but I would not care to offer an amendment which would not allow pay on the routes for which contracts have already been let, and I will therefore ask to modify the amendment by inserting after the words "star route" the words "contract for which shall be hereafter let."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment, and the Clerk will report the addition.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the words "star route" the words "the contract for which shall be hereafter let and;" so that it will read "used for transportation on any star route the contract for which shall be hereafter let, and which does not give as good service," etc.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I renew the point of order and suggest to the Chair that that is absolutely new law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail-messenger service, $1,200,000.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line —, after the word "dollars," insert the following:
"And for the performance of this service in the city of Chicago by underground electric cars, $100,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used unless the Postmaster-General shall so decide, after satisfactory preliminary trial, and the service can be performed at a cost not exceeding that of an efficient wagon service between the same points.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, as explanatory of the amendment, I desire to have two letters—one from the Postmaster-General, the other from the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General—reported by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letters in the time of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO TUNNEL SERVICE.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1904.

Hon. JESSE OVERSTREET,
Chairman Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I hand you herewith copy of letter from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, addressed to me, with reference to the conditions of the mail-transportation service in the city of Chicago, Ill., and recommending that Congress be asked to make provision, in connection with the appropriation for mail-messenger service in the pending post-office appropriation bill, for the authorization of service by the underground-tunnel system.

The recommendation as set forth in the letter referred to meets with my approval, and I have the honor to request that your committee incorporate in said bill a suitable provision to carry the same into effect.

Very respectfully,

H. C. PAYNE, Postmaster-General.

SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
DIVISION OF RAILWAY ADJUSTMENT,
Washington, February 24, 1904.

SIR: The conditions of the mail-transportation service in the city of Chicago, resulting from the magnitude of the mail matter arriving and departing at the several stations, in connection with the rapid growth of all other traffic, the limited platform space and narrow streets at most of the stations causing serious congestion and aggravating delays in handling mails, the busy thoroughfares around the new post-office building, and the limited facilities for approaching it and leaving it with heavy wagons, suggested a thorough investigation as to whether relief might be secured by certain proposed changes in the building and by the use of the underground-tunnel system, which is soon to be opened for public use, connecting all railway stations and intersecting many of the principal streets of the city, operating 40 feet beneath the surface, crossing under the bed of the river at several points, and proposing to compete with surface electric lines and with transfer companies in the carriage of merchandise and parcels.

The joint committee representing this office and the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, which you appointed at my request and which has visited Chicago, spending several days in conference with local post-office officials and with a representative of the Treasury Department, has submitted its report to the effect that the underground-tunnel system, by reason of the substantial character of the construction of the tunnels, the completeness of its equipment, its operation by the positive third-rail electric system, with a thorough block and signal apparatus soon to be provided, gives promise of a very satisfactory method of handling bulk mail and relieving the surface congestion, the committee stating further that its inquiries develop the fact that the tunnel company expects to do a business for the public at rates no greater than would necessarily be paid for like efficiency of service by other transfer companies.

The committee unanimously recommend, among other relief measures which meet my approval, that Congress be asked to incorporate in the pending post-office appropriation bill, in connection with the appropriation for mail-messenger service, a clause authorizing the Postmaster-General to arrange for a preliminary test of the tunnel system, and, in the event of such test demonstrating that the system can be satisfactorily used for mail purposes, to make a contract with the company operating the underground-tunnel system in the city of Chicago for the transportation of the mails between the several railway stations, and between the stations and the new city post-office, at a compensation deemed reasonable, not to exceed the probable cost of an efficient wagon service between the same points, covering the remainder of the contract term. To effectuate this purpose the messenger appropriation should be increased in the sum of $100,000.

Very respectfully,

W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

To the POSTMASTER-GENERAL.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, the hearings before the Post-Office Committee developed these facts—that a vast amount of mail in the city of Chicago is now being transferred between the several railroad stations and the main post-office and the substations by what is called the "screen-wagon" service. It also demonstrated the fact that of all the mail entering the city of Chicago 60 per cent of it is what is called "transit" mail and 40 per cent of it is local mail—that is, the 60 per cent called "transit" mail is mail destined to other points north, east, south, and west of the city of Chicago, and that 40 per cent of it is mail arriving and departing from Chicago and local mail. It demonstrated also that the present screen-wagon service of the city of Chicago is extremely inadequate for the purpose of transferring this mail. The result is that there is great loss of time and delay of mail, extending sometimes to as much as twenty-four hours' delay in the transfer of this through mail from the East to the West.

The hearings also developed this fact—that there has been constructed in the city of Chicago an underground tunnel system covering or underlying all of the business streets of the city of Chicago. It is an electric line commonly called the "third-rail" system, thoroughly equipped, as is reported upon by the Assistant Postmaster-General. This tunnel company have made a proposition to the Post-Office Department for the transfer of this mail at the city of Chicago. This matter was taken up before the Post-Office Committee, and after the facts that I have enumerated were developed a commission was appointed by the Postmaster-General, and after a full investigation, as the committee will see by the report just read to them, the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General have recommended that this appropriation be increased $100,000 for the purpose of permitting the Department to enter into a contract with this tunnel company if after a preliminary test the system shall be found sufficient for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois be allowed to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, I yield to a question from anyone who desires to ask one.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. SNAPP. Certainly.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understood the gentleman's amendment—I may not have heard it read correctly—it proposes an increase of $100,000 for this particular underground electric service. Am I correct in that?

Mr. SNAPP. Yes, sir.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, I would ask the gentleman this question: Will not the effect of his amendment increase the cost of the service at Chicago? Will not that be the effect of it?

Mr. SNAPP. Yes; the effect will be to increase the cost at Chicago; otherwise it would not be necessary to increase this appropriation.

Mr. FINLEY. The service, as I remember, is being performed for about $106,000.

Mr. SNAPP. It will result in decreasing the wagon service now in existence, although it will not do away with it wholly.

Mr. FINLEY. It will be necessary to perform part of the service by wagon?

Mr. SNAPP. It will be necessary to perform a small part of the service by the present screen-wagon service, but the most of it will be abolished.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. SNAPP. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. My colleague from Illinois has fully explained the situation, but I might say, partly in response to the question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], that under the appropriation law as it now stands the Post-Office Department is not authorized to let any contracts for tunnel service whatever. The purpose of the amendment, while it increases the appropriation somewhat, is more for the purpose of authorizing the Department to use this service in case it proves the most practical service. The proposition which has been submitted by the tunnel company was that the service shall be performed twice as quickly as it is now supposed to be performed by wagon service on the top of the street.

As I say, the tunnel company did not submit the proposition on its own motion, but it was urged upon them that they make a proposition. As a matter of fact, the wagon service is not only delayed more or less in the street, but the wagon service is delayed at the depots.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. Why should this new system cost so much more money than the present system?

Mr. MANN. The provision of the amendment is that no contract shall be let to the tunnel company at a greater cost than that of an efficient wagon service.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. What reduction will be made in the cost of the wagon service?

Mr. MANN. If this proposition is carried through, if it is let to the tunnel company, the wagon service will be done away with as far as the transfer of mail is concerned between the railway stations and the post-office and the railway stations.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. What will be the net additional cost to the Government by the installment of the new service?

Mr. MANN. The provision of the amendment is that there shall be no net increase of cost. Under the present law they can not let a contract to the tunnel company. Under the present law the tunnel company could not take a contract for experiment. The people who had the wagon service in Chicago were willing to have the tunnel company make the experiment at their cost if they could be paid what they are now receiving, but the Department held that an appropriation for a screen-wagon service could not be used for carrying mail by tunnel, although it might be carried twice as quick.

Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania. I understand that; but what I want to know is if this new system was installed and the old system put out what would be the net additional cost to the Government?

Mr. MANN. I will say frankly to the gentleman that I doubt very much whether, under the amendment, the tunnel service will ever be utilized. The amendment provides that the tunnel service shall cost no more than an efficient wagon service will cost and they must carry it twice as quickly. Whether it will ever be possible to get the tunnel company to carry the mails between the stations in one-half the time and do it for the same cost I do not know, but certainly there is no objection to trying the experiment.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I did not understand the situation. My impression was that the amendment offered was under the mail-messenger service. The gentleman must be wrong in stating that the provision in the bill is that there would be no more cost to this than to the screen-wagon service.

Mr. MANN. The provision in the amendment is that it shall cost no more.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Is that in the amendment?

Mr. MANN. That is the provision in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman a further question. Why not let the matter be considered under the clause provided in the bill, the clause below?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will permit me, I will explain that. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the present law the mails are carried from the stations in cities from railways and post-offices outside of the 80-rod limit, which Members are familiar with, under what is known as the "mail-messenger law," which gives authority to the Department to contract for carrying of the mail by messenger by screen-wagon transfer. There is absolutely no authority of law which would permit the carrying of mails between stations and post-offices by underground system of railroads. The Department and the committee have had their attention called to the congestion of mail in the city of Chicago. We had demonstrated here a few days ago the needs of the great city of New York, which we sought to remedy, and which was remedied in a different way, because the need was in a different way. In this instance the congestion comes in the transit of the mail across the city.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Do I understand that the gentleman favors the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Rather than the proviso, for the reason that when we put the proviso in under the screen-wagon service the commission, to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] referred, had not reported. After that proviso was put in the following section on the bottom of page 14, under the head of "Regulation screen-wagon service," this commission did report, and the letters from the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant, read from the Clerk's desk a few moments ago, were transmitted to me. That letter of the Postmaster-General calls attention to the investigation of this situation at Chicago and recommended an amendment which would give that relief. The letter of the Second Assistant calls attention to the advisability of the provision coming in under the mail-messenger service rather than the screen-wagon service.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that is what we want to know. What is the reason for that?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The reason of that is that it comes, according to a statement contained in the letter, which I think explains it, more properly under that item, because it is a system of transmission, while the regulation wagon service relates entirely to wagon service. This relief would be given by way of the underground system, whereas the wagon-service appropriation is specifically for wagon service.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then it is not contemplated to do away with the wagon service at all?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, it would do away with the wagon service if the Postmaster-General should effect proper negotiations—just as in the New York case, if they should succeed in the effort to contract with the New York Central Railroad at New York City it would do away with the renting of the present station and the use of the transmission of the mail between the station and the railroad.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I understand it might possibly do away in the administration, if that view were taken, but it would not do so by operation of law. You have the law left here providing for the wagon service. Is it the purpose of the chairman of the committee to move to strike out that provision of the law?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, certainly, that provision will have to be stricken out when it is reached. It is just in line directly with the effort made a few days ago to afford relief to a condition in the great city of New York of a different character. Here at Chicago, by reason of the lay of the land, and the lake, and the river, and the drawbridges, traffic in the streets is so congested that it interferes with the transit of mail across town. The underground service will avoid all of that congestion, and according to the statements made by the tunnel company itself and according to other information the purpose of it is to increase the speed of the delivery, as well as to avoid the interference of the congestion of the street.

Mr. FINLEY rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FINLEY. Will this amendment not have the effect of largely superseding this screen-wagon service performed by contract?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should think so.

Mr. FINLEY. Is not this true, that at present that service is being performed under contract, and the contractor having failed, this screen-wagon service is being performed by the sureties on the bond of the contractor, and at a loss? Is not that true?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know about that. It is being performed by a contractor.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it being performed by the sureties of the contractor?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That I do not know. I understand it is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I can answer the gentleman without hesitation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I say, Mr. Chairman, without question, so far as my information goes, and I think it goes far enough to make the statement, that the surety company carrying out the contract is carrying it out at a loss; but that is the only thing that could possibly operate against this proposition. That matter has been most carefully considered.

Mr. OVERSTREET. This has been considered purely on its merits as to an increase of benefits to the service.

Mr. FINLEY. At present the Government has a contract which is being carried out.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, exactly; just as the Government today has in regard to station H in New York City.

Mr. FINLEY. Is it not true that the contract with the Government calls for an efficient screen-wagon service?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not familiar with the law.

Mr. MANN. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that while the contract calls for that, under the present system it is impossible for the contractor to give efficient service because he can not get his wagons into the depots sometimes within an hour of the time they should go in on account of the congestion of the depots. He can not get the mail out of the depots without getting his wagons in, and it is an impossibility for him to perform that service. I do not think the contractor will get out of his contract without a loss by any proposition carried here.

Mr. SNAPP. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. FINLEY. There has been no debate in opposition to the amendment. I wish to be recognized on that side of the question.

Mr. SNAPP. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SNAPP] withdraws his motion; and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois should not prevail. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads went over this matter carefully and placed in the bill this provision:

For regulation, screen, or other wagon service, $1,133,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, contract for the performance of this service in the city of Chicago by underground electric cars and wagons at a sum not exceeding the present cost of this service in that city.

Mr. Chairman, the Government now has a contract, which has some time yet to run—more than two years, as I recollect—with a party, having a surety company on his bond, for the performance of this wagon service in the city of Chicago. The party having failed to perform the service, his sureties are now carrying out the contract at a very considerable loss. The effect of this amendment, if carried, will be to relieve the party now performing that service. Now, I ask the committee——

Mr. MADDOX. Does not the gentleman think that this amendment was subject to a point of order when it was offered?

Mr. FINLEY. I was not paying any attention to that.

Mr. MADDOX. We have a very diligent committee in making points of order upon amendments not coming from the committee. I am satisfied that this amendment was clearly out of order, but nobody rose to make the point.

Mr. COWHERD. Why did not the gentleman make it?

Mr. FINLEY. I do not wish my time taken up in this way.

Mr. MADDOX. I wish to say that the members of this committee are exceedingly diligent in making points of order on any amendment offered by a Member outside of the committee.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman knows, I presume, that this amendment is practically carried in the bill already.

Mr. MADDOX. I did not know anything of it myself until I heard it discussed; but gentlemen on the committee knew of it.

Mr. FINLEY. I am in favor of the provision as it appears in the bill, placed there by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, which provides that this service shall not cost the Government more than the existing service.

Now, this contract has two or three years yet to run. The contractor has failed; and the adoption of this amendment will have the effect of relieving his sureties of the burden and expense of carrying out this contract. The loss to the Government will exceed $30,000 annually. Now, is it right that they should be relieved? I know of my own knowledge that in my part of the country when star-route contractors fail their sureties are required to take up the contract and carry it out to the letter. The principle is the same in all cases; and the sureties of this Chicago contractor should be required to carry out the contract and to render efficient service.

Mr. SNAPP rose.

Mr. FINLEY. I can not yield. I have only five minutes, and my time will soon be out.

I repeat that the adoption of this amendment will relieve the sureties of the contractor from the performance of the service for the Government of the United States in the city of Chicago. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be voted down.

The question being taken on the amendment,

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 54, noes 26.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For regulation, screen, or other wagon service, $1,133,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, contract for the performance of this service in the city of Chicago by underground electric cars and wagons, at a sum not exceeding the present cost of this service in that city.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to amend by striking out the proviso embraced in this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail bags, cord fasteners, label cases, and for labor and material necessary for repairing equipment, $300,000.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the period in line 6, page 15, and substituting a colon, and adding thereafter the following:

"Provided, That none of this appropriation shall be used for mail bags made or repaired in prisons or by convict labor."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order, to allow me to explain the amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I think I am doing the committee a service in calling attention to the fact that mail bags are being manufactured by convict labor, and I had not the slightest doubt, and I have not now the slightest doubt, that when this committee realizes the fact that American mechanics are asked to compete with convicts in the State prison of New Jersey and elsewhere they will alter that state of affairs.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Postmaster-General in his report has called the attention of Congress to the existing state of affairs and has asked that it be remedied.

In the Committee on Labor we have had hearings on the convict-labor bill, and I am free to say that there has not been a single argument which I consider sound advanced in favor of continuing convict labor, especially for permitting convict labor to come into competition in the manufacture of goods used by the United States.

Many people express sympathy for the convict who is deprived of his liberty, and they think that an opportunity should be given him to put in his time in a reasonable way, giving him as much enjoyment as is compatible with the object for which he is incarcerated; but it seems to me that the American mechanic, the American laborer, is entitled to much more sympathy, much more consideration at the hands of Congress, than convict labor of any kind or description; and I sincerely hope, gentlemen, that this amendment, by virtue of which it is intended to prevent New York and other contractors from bidding for Government work and then going to the State prison and employing prisoners there to work upon it, will prevail. I ask the gentleman not to press the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14256. An act making appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building; and

H. R. 9777. An act granting to the city of Port Angeles, State of Washington, for park purposes, certain portions of the Government reserve in said city.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to joint resolution (S. R. 55) authorizing the reprinting of certain documents, to be sold by the Superintendent of Documents.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 57.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in the form such as is customary in the case of eulogies 12,000 copies of the proceedings and accompanying documents, with suitable process plates, to be bound therewith, upon the unveiling of the statue of Gen. William T. Sherman, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies, of which 200 copies shall be bound in full morocco, to be distributed under the direction of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library in such manner as, in his judgment, may be desirable.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4837. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a railway, street railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., approved February 13, 1891," and acts amendatory thereof, so as to extend the time for completion of said bridge until January 1, 1905; and

S. 2148. An act to provide for the enlargement and improvement of the public building at Tyler, Tex.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I shall not at this time discuss the point of order, although I do not believe that the amendment is subject to it.

If there is anything laughable in our public administration, it seems to me it is found in the fact that to-day the mail bags of the United States are largely being manufactured under a contract that is being executed in the New Jersey State prison, notwithstanding that in every prison that the United States has authorized it has specifically placed a provision that no manufacturing shall be carried on within it.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Let me suggest that the language is "where machinery is used."

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. It is specifically provided that in the prisons in the Indian reservations such manufacturing shall not be done; and, more than that, the United States has provided by statute that no United States prisoner in any State penitentiary shall be employed in manufacturing these articles by machinery. And yet, inconsistently enough, it has come about that the United States is contracting for and using the products of prison labor, made by the prisoners of the States in penitentiaries, side by side with United States prisoners who are not allowed to be employed on the same work. It is ridiculous, and it seems to me there is no question but that an amendment ought to go on this bill to put our legislation in some consistent shape. Why, the wardens themselves smile at us. Here are the national prisoners in one wing of a penitentiary, and here are the State prisoners. Here are articles being made for the Government by the State prisoners, while the national prisoners are forbidden to work upon it by national statute. I hope there will be no opposition to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the merits of the amendment which has been discussed by the gentleman who introduced it. The United States, as I understand it, has never by any statute limited the manner of the manufacture of any article which it buys. In other words, there is no limitation against the manufacture by convict labor. I have my own personal views against this labor, but I am addressing myself to-day to the law, as I presume we must all do. In the absence of any restrictions relative to the character of individuals who may be engaged in the labor of the manufacture of goods purchased by the United States, I take it that the usual rule of law pertaining to contracts would be enforced. There is but one contract for the manufacture of mail bags now in force. That contract was entered into between the Government and some individual who was unable to carry forward the contract and was obliged to surrender it to his bondsmen.

They are to-day carrying out the terms of that contract, as I understand. It is possibly true that a part—possibly all, I do not know, but certainly a part—of that contract is being performed by convict labor in the State of New Jersey. The contract, however, Mr. Chairman, will not expire by its terms during the period for which this appropriation is made. I take it that if this appropriation were stricken out entirely, it would not vitiate or impair the terms of the contract, and the parties who are entitled to the pay would come in for their pay under an appropriation in the urgent deficiency act. If the terms of the contract, therefore, can not be modified by striking out the appropriation, how can it be modified by any limitation on expenditures?

I believe that there ought not to be any contract of that character. We, however, find ourselves with one on our hands, and the limitation for the payment of that contract, I believe, would not be that degree of limitation which the House has recognized in the limitation on the expenditures.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Would the gentleman be satisfied with an amendment which exempts existing contracts?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I would rather take care at the time when more contracts will be made. I will say to the gentleman that no contracts are authorized in this bill or contemplated by the Department during the next fiscal year. I say that upon authority of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, who stated in the committee not only that the contract would not expire during the period for which the appropriation is made, but that the Department intended to see that no such contract for labor was indulged in in the future.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is there a provision in the bill prohibiting the Department from entering into any such contract as now exists?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should say not.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean to say that a contract has already been entered into for work to be done beyond the present fiscal year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, certainly. There are plenty of contracts that run longer than a year. My recollection is this contract will not expire for two years. I may not be exact about that by a few months.

Mr. MUDD. Does the gentleman contend that an amendment which limits the expenditure, which limits the money in this bill as appropriated, does not come in as a limitation?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is not this case.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to state whether he would make a point of order if the gentleman from New Jersey should change his amendment so as to provide that "hereafter" no contract should be entered into for prison-made goods?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not like to make an admission in advance of the offering of an amendment. Possibly when the time arrives I might not make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. In my judgment, if the gentleman does not make such a concession, this amendment will prevail.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think this amendment is clearly subject to the point of order, and the other might not be.

Mr. MANN. The amendment I suggest would be subject to the point of order; clearly this is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman be willing to consider this amendment as pending until I shall have an opportunity to submit an amendment such as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say to the gentleman that I will ask unanimous consent for the gentleman that the item be passed until after the next item has been concluded, and that in the meanwhile he can prepare his amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 15, be passed until after the reading of lines 7, 8, and 9 has been concluded, and then the committee return to the lines passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the paragraph contained in lines 4, 5, and 6, on page 15, be passed without prejudice until the completion of the paragraph in lines 7, 8, and 9. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mail locks and keys, chains, tools, and machinery, and for labor and material necessary for repairing same, $45,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will extend the request for unanimous consent for the remainder of page 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the paragraph to be amended may be postponed until after the reading of line 21 of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is impossible for me to hear the request of the gentleman from Indiana. I am also unable to hear the Clerk as to where we are reading.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have extended the unanimous consent down to line 21; then we would recur to where the gentleman from New Jersey wanted to offer his amendment. He does not seem to be ready.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent of building for a mail-bag repair shop and lock-repair shop, and for fuel, gas, watchmen and charwomen, oil, and repair of machinery for said shops, $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I desire to ask whether that includes the paragraph in line 21, and to know if that is also passed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is not passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the only paragraph which is passed without prejudice is the paragraph contained in lines 4, 5, and 6, and what was to be passed until the committee had disposed of the bill down to and including line 21.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation by railroad routes, of which a sum not exceeding $100,000 may be employed to pay freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes and stamped paper, mail equipment, and other supplies from the manufactories and depositories to the post-offices and depots of distribution, $39,698,000.

Mr. TAWNEY and Mr. BAKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 21, page 15——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Clerk has only completed the reading of line 19. Does the gentleman from New York wish to offer an amendment after line 19?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of stating that, in my judgment, and so far as my information goes, the prices paid for the transportation of mail by the railroads of the United States is most excessive. I am sorry that I have not been able to get in shape such data as, perhaps, would convince gentlemen on the other side who, in this bill as in previous bills, have shown such extreme solicitude for the interests of the men who control the great railroads of this country, as evidenced in this enormous appropriation. Yesterday I made repeated efforts, Mr. Chairman, to get a few minutes to say a few words upon another section of this bill. I desired to point out then, as I desire to point out now, that the gentlemen on the other side of the House are particularly lavish of the money of the United States Government when it comes to the demands of men who control the great special-privileged corporations of the United States, but when it comes to the question of recompensing the men who have nothing but their votes, who have no favors to give, who have no railroad passes to issue, who have no other form of favors to give; when it comes to those men, then the cry of "economy" must come up, and we are told that we must economize, that the United States Government can not afford to increase the salaries of these men.

You can vote upon this floor $97,000,000 for a big navy; you can vote $77,000,000 for a large army; you can vote $17,000,000, or thereabouts, for fortifications; you can vote—as you did, I am told, last session—$600,000 to make additions to the White House in order that its occupant may emulate European monarchs; you can appropriate millions upon millions to do all kinds of things except to see that the men who are doing the ordinary labor of this Government—the letter carriers, clerks, free-delivery carriers, etc.—shall get a recompense that shall be adequate to meet their needs, but which is not adequate because you gentlemen for years, particularly during the past two years, have been enacting legislation which has created "trusts" and has increased the cost of living to these very employees of the Government, as well as every other workingman in this country, 43 per cent, according to Dun's report.

Why, only within the last month the necessities of life, according to Dun's Review, have been increased 6 per cent, the cost of 350 articles being 103.615 on March 1, 1904, as against 102.028 on February 1, 1904, and as against 97.378 on October 1, 1903. When those men whose expenses of living have been increased 43 per cent as a result of Republican legislation, as the result of your legislation in the interest of special privileged corporations, as a result of your legislation through the iniquitous tariff system, which increases prices while reducing wages; when those men come here and exercise their right of petition; when they say that they can not meet the increased cost of living out of the meager wages they receive, you say you can not afford it; that the United States Government is "too poor;" that we must "economize." You do not, however, propose to economize on the $45,000,000 you are going to give the railroads; you do not propose to economize on any contract or on any deal with the special privileged corporations; you do not propose to economize when you are dealing with any man who has a favor that he can confer on Members of this House or any other member of the Government. But it is only the poor men, the men who have nothing but their votes, these men who are mere victims of your system of taxation. When those men come and ask for a slight increase in their wages, "economy" is the cry.

Gentlemen, you upon that side are responsible. Men have been working for $600 a year in the rural free-delivery service, and it has been shown upon this floor that their expenses for horses, wagon, sleigh, harness, for feed, and for repairs are something like $300 a year, and you who brag about your "prosperity," you who talk and tell us this is the most prosperous country upon the face of the earth, and that every man in the great State of Pennsylvania can get employment at $2 a day—$600 a year—yet you have these men begging for the opportunity of only getting from three hundred to three hundred and twenty-five dollars a year net, and then attempt to deny them opportunity to go to their Congressmen and ask that they shall be paid adequately——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed five minutes more.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BAKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. Tha motion is not in order on a pro forma amendment.

Mr. BAKER. It has been done before, Mr. Chairman, and I shall notice the fact in future.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For railway post-office car service, $5,736,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 21, page 15, insert:
"Provided, That no part of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended for the use of cars in the railway postal service that have been used in said service for a period of more than fifteen years."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think it will be admitted by every Member of this House that there is no part of the public service so dangerous, so hazardous to those engaged in it, as the railway postal service. During the last fiscal year there were 372 accidents. Twenty-two railway postal clerks, including one substitute and three weighers, were killed; 75 were seriously injured and 398 slightly injured.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Are not these cars regularly inspected?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know whether they are regularly inspected by the Government or not. They are, of course, inspected by the railroad car inspectors when they go into the service and thereafter by car inspectors, and doubtless when out of repair are sent back to the shop for repair. But I want to call to the attention of the committee this important fact.

Recently the Postmaster-General has made a report to this House showing the total number of cars in the service and the length of time that each car in the service has been in that service. From that report I find that there are 168 cars out of a total of a little over 1,000 that have been in the service from sixteen to thirty-three years. I find 75 cars in use to-day that have been in use twenty-two to thirty-three years.

Mr. LIND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Let me finish this. I find there are 10 cars in the service that have been in the service from thirty to thirty-three years. Now I will answer my colleague.

Mr. LIND. What rental is paid by the Government for these cars?

Mr. TAWNEY. The rental for last year, based on the number of cars in service, and the amount of the last annual appropriation, was $4,730.50.

Mr. LIND. Is not that almost the full value of the cars?

Mr. TAWNEY. I understand it is, although I can not say accurately what the cost of construction is. My information is that it costs between five and six thousand dollars.

Mr. LIND. I have been told that the Government pays as a rental virtually the value of a railway mail car every year.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is in line with the information that I have myself.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Minnesota yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. In the line of what the gentleman is speaking about I want to ask if there are any statistics that show how many of the accidents to which the gentleman has referred are fairly attributable to defects in the mail cars?

Mr. TAWNEY. The number of accidents that I have given to the committee has been taken from a report of the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service. I have given just what that report shows. I can not answer the gentleman's question any further than it is answered by the report of the superintendent of this service.

There is no information here to indicate how many of the accidents were caused by defects in the mail cars. I want to make this observation, however, and I think it will be borne out by the information which we all have, that you scarcely find a serious railway accident where the railway postal car is not the most seriously injured of any car in the train. If there is any car that is smashed all to pieces, it is sure to be the railway postal car, which in too many cases is more of a tinder box than a suitable place for a human being to be inclosed in as these clerks are.

Mr. MANN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota may or may not be aware that under existing law railroad companies are required to make a report to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the cause of every railway accident. I ask the gentleman whether he has examined this report to ascertain whether any of these accidents have been caused by poor postal cars?

Mr. TAWNEY. I have not examined it, and I do not think that report would give the information.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It might give the cause of the accident, but I do not claim that the cause of the accident is always or frequently attributable to the railway postal car. Now, fifteen years is the average life of a railway car——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota be extended for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. The cause of the accident would not throw any light on the question of whether or not this enormous death rate among the railway postal clerks is attributable to the imperfect railway postal car.

Here are cars that were manufactured and put into the service in 1871, and according to the report of the Postmaster-General they have been in continuous service ever since. In style of construction, kind, and quality of material the cars built in 1871 are entirely different from the car of to-day. These cars are very much lighter, as every man knows who has taken occasion to observe the manufacture and construction of cars, and that the postal cars that we see every day are the weakest and lightest in the train. The new cars are strong and heavy. One of the chief reasons, if not the sole one, for the complete destruction of so many railway postal cars in railroad wrecks is the fact that to-day our engines are so much heavier than they ever were before and the Pullman cars and coaches are so much heavier than formerly that when there is a head-on collision the invariable result is the crushing of the weakest car, and that car is always the railway postal car. Now, fifteen years is the average life of a car.

Mr. COWHERD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman has given the age of so many of those cars in the service, I will ask him if it is not a fact that that report shows that practically every one of those old cars have been in the shops and have been rebuilt?

Mr. TAWNEY. It shows they have been in the shops. It does not show whether they have been rebuilt or simply repainted or some other repairs made upon them.

Mr. COWHERD. It shows whether their condition is good or not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Of course they have not been in continuous service without repairs. No man would claim that a car could be in continuous service from 1871 down to the present time without getting out of repair. What I maintain, Mr. Chairman, is that when a car has been used the length of time found to be the average life of a car it should no longer remain in the service, especially when these cars are used continuously by railway postal clerks.

It is our duty to provide the safest conveniences and appliances we can obtain. Therefore these cars should be as strong and as secure and as safe as any other car in railway service. Now, if this amendment is adopted, it would eliminate only 168 cars out of 1,036 now employed in the service; and even if that number may be considered large, you must bear in mind that every car of that 168 has from two to four men employed in it every day and night, and I think, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is fair. It is not going to operate as a hardship at all on the railway companies. It will simply put out of service about 168 cars, some 70 of which have been in use for from twenty-two to thirty-three years. I ask for a vote.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, nobody would go further than I in agreeing to any provision in this or any other bill to protect railway mail employees or the lives of any other worthy persons. The difficulty about it is that the time a car has been in operation is no more an indication of its stability and safety than it is of a ship. The gentleman says that most of the cars, for illustration, that we see are comparatively new. I take it it is safe to assert that the gentleman is under an optical delusion, and that a very large number of the new cars which he sees are old cars which have been rebuilt. No railway company wants to run an inferior car in a fast train or in a train where such cars are dangerous. The age of a car is no measure whatever of its strength. These old cars that the gentleman talks about, upon a further inquiry, will be found to be almost universally in use on short lines, always running on accommodations and rarely at a speed in excess of 20 miles an hour.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I will say that this does not apply to the combination accommodation at all, but just applies to cars in the full railway post-office service.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. And they are on lines where accidents perhaps rarely happen. I repeat that if the gentleman will bring forward an amendment which goes to the inspection of cars, that goes to the ascertainment of the safety of a car, then I am with him; but the age of a car no more measures its strength than any other thing that has no relation whatever to it. The car may or may not have been thoroughly rebuilt in that time. It may or may not have had much of the timber substituted with steel. It may or may not have been most thoroughly braced in several respects. Now, it may be true, as the gentleman says—but his amendment will not remedy that—that in railroad accidents it is the railway mail car that kinks up, bends up, smashes up, more than the 60,000-pound passenger coaches in use to-day.

If the gentleman wants to revise the railway mail-car service, if he wants to provide that a railway mail car must be of given dimensions and that it must be constructed of steel and that its weight shall not be less than sixty or ninety thousand pounds, then he would raise another question.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that if this amendment is adopted, I intend to follow it up with an amendment along the lines suggested by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in that respect.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. In conclusion I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that here is an amendment that bases its entire merits on the age of a car, and the age of a car is no measure of its safety.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have read in my time a very able editorial, to be found in the Scientific American, under date of January 9, 1904, entitled "A call for stronger passenger cars."

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

A CALL FOR STRONGER PASSENGER CARS.

The Pullman Company recently made the very significant statement that during the year ending September 1, 1903, not a single passenger was killed or injured on a Pullman car in the State of New York. They also announced that although in the past three years the company had carried in all parts of the United States a total of 32,639,341 passengers, only six persons were killed (in two disastrous wrecks) and only four persons were seriously injured.

Compare these figures with the official statistics of railroad accidents in any given year, say for the year 1902, when 345 passengers where killed and 6,683 were injured. Of the thirty-two and a half million passengers that were carried in the three years in Pullman cars, only one in every three and a quarter million was killed or injured, but of the 640,000,000 passengers carried during the year 1902 in ordinary cars, over 7,000 passengers, or about one in every 92,000, were killed or injured. In other words, of two passengers who board a train together he who enters a Pullman car has thirty-six chances of reaching the end of his journey in safety against one chance of his fellow-passenger who enters an ordinary day coach.

Those of us who read between the lines in the accounts of railroad disasters, that appear with such shocking frequency in the columns of the morning papers, will not be at all surprised at these figures. The story of the smashup, if it be a collision, may vary in details, but the general features will have a marked similarity. Thus the mail clerks will be killed outright, and the occupants of the smoker and first day coach, which in all probability will telescope into each other, will divide up the list of casualties pretty evenly between killed and injured; unless, indeed, a broken steam pipe is accountable for the parboiling of the whole mass of unfortunates; while incidentally the account will mention that the Pullman cars, after expending their momentum in crushing up the lighter first-class coaches, smokers, baggage cars, etc., came to rest without any serious injury, and more often than not without even leaving the rails. Should they leave the rails and roll down an embankment, the passengers are pretty sure to escape with the conventional "bad shaking up."

Now, what do these results teach us? Just this, that if we can not make railway travel safe by installing the very best signal systems and by the careful selection of enginemen and train hands, switchmen, and operators; if we must forever go on having railway smashes, we can at least save the limb and the life of the passenger by building cars on the lines of the Pullman and rendering them practically accident proof.

The strength of the Pullman car lies in its very massive underframe, the heavy steel angles and plating that are worked into the vestibule ends, and the massive vertical vestibule frames, which prevent the platforms from riding one upon another and shearing their way through the structure of the adjoining car. There is no question that it would be possible greatly to increase the safety of ordinary passenger travel by constructing all railroad cars on the vestibule principle and building into the platforms that steel framing, which is largely answerable for the immunity from destruction in bad railroad wrecks of the present Pullman car.

The railroad companies will naturally raise the objection that to give to all cars the strength of Pullman construction would so greatly increase the weight of trains that the engines would be unable to cope with the service. But it is a fact that the strength and indestructibility of the Pullman car could be imparted to the ordinary first-class coach without any serious increase in the weight of the latter. The Pullman car is loaded down with a lot of unnecessary weight, both in its structure and in its embellishments, which could be got rid of in the proposed type of car. A considerable saving of weight might be made by building the underframe, the sides below the sills, the platforms, and the vestibules entirely of steel. This, indeed, has been done by the Illinois Central Railroad, to which too great credit can not be given for the advance that has been made in its new steel passenger cars.

The steel passenger car is not by any means a novelty. In fact, between thirty and forty years ago one of this type was constructed in this country and formed the subject of illustration in the columns of the Scientific American, while in Europe not only are the underframes of all cars built of steel, but there is a large number of freight cars of various types of metal construction that have proved their durable qualities by nearly half a century of service. In a railway collision it is always the weakest element that gives way. When telescoping occurs, it is the oldest car that is sliced in half by the platform of the adjoining car. With trains built entirely of steel cars, or cars with steel underframes, the injuries of a collision would be confined very largely to bruises and some broken limbs, due to the passengers being hurled violently forward under their own momentum. But the horrible dismemberment, the wholesale crushing out of life, now due to the telescoping of cars, would be of very rare occurrence. Indeed, with steel cars it is questionable whether telescoping would extend, even in the most severe collisions, much beyond the first 8 or 10 feet in the car.

In view of the shameful slaughter that has lately been going on upon our railroads in a series of accidents that is nothing short of a national disgrace, it becomes the duty of legislation to stipulate that for all new passenger cars a certain minimum standard strength and excellence of construction shall be specified. By the mandate of the Government we have the automatic coupler and the train brake. The time has now come for the Government to demand for every passenger on the railroad the same immunity from maiming and death as is shown by the Pullman Company in their statement of only ten persons killed or wounded out of thirty-two and a half million passengers.

Mr. LIVINGSTON (interrupting the reading). May I ask the gentleman from Michigan for what purpose this is being read?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. For the purpose of enforcing the demand for stronger passenger cars; and it is a very able article, too.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. A fine advertisement for the Pullman Car Company.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. No; an able article from the Scientific American of January 9.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. How much longer is it?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I think the reading will be finished in two or three minutes more.

The Clerk resumed the reading. Before the reading was concluded,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended, in order that the Clerk may read the few remaining lines of this article.

A MEMBER. Let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I accept the suggestion and ask that the whole article be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SIBLEY] desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. SIBLEY. I do.

Mr. Chairman, I think the Pullman Car Company owe a debt of gratitude to my friend from Michigan for the elaborate and expansive advertisement they have received this morning.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. How much do you think was paid to the Scientific American?

Mr. SIBLEY. The company ought to pay a good deal, and ought to honor you with free transportation in the Pullman cars to the end of your public career, which we all trust may be a prolonged one.

It seems to me that if our friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would follow the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey and secure fixed provisions as to the safety of the ordinary, cars he would command the assent of every gentleman on this floor. But you can not fix arbitrarily the life of a car by naming a given term of years. If you were to fix it at fifteen years, and provide that at the end of that term the car must go to the scrap heap, you may be pretty sure that the corporation would spend very little money toward the end of the fifteen years in repairing and strengthening the car and making the condition of its cars uniformly strong.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman pardon me a moment? Experience shows that the natural life of a car is fifteen years—that is, of other cars aside from the Pullman cars.

Mr. SIBLEY. I do not believe that either the gentleman from Minnesota or myself is sufficiently conversant with the technique of car construction to be able to determine a question of that kind.

Mr. TAWNEY. Reliable information has been obtained from those who know what the experience has been.

Mr. SIBLEY. I think there would be a wide difference of opinion among those who know or ought to know.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think that a car built in 1870, when the speed of railroad trains was not more than 25 miles an hour, could to-day be used in trains traveling at the rate of 60 or 70 miles an hour?

Mr. SIBLEY. Ah, but the railroad company must see that every car that it uses is properly equipped and in proper condition. Their own interests demand this. The gentleman might as well say that the usefulness of a Member on the floor of this body terminates when he reaches the age of 60 years. What a grand lot of men we would miss from this assembly if that rule were adopted. You can not, by defining a term of years, arbitrarily fix the standard of the usefulness of a car any more than you can fix such a standard with reference to a horse. You may say of a horse that the measure of his usefulness should be seven or ten or twelve years, but the horse may be a good one at eighteen years. This House should not attempt to legislate in this matter by fixing an age limit.

The article read at the desk speaks about the Pullman cars not being injured when railroad accidents occur. I think that the adequate way of protecting mail clerks would be to adopt just the reverse of the rule proposed. If a man who travels in a Pullman car has thirty-six chances for his safety against one chance of the man who travels in an ordinary passenger coach, then, inasmuch as so many people must travel in ordinary passenger coaches, because of their lack of ability to pay the difference in price, why not offer an amendment compelling the railroad company to put the Pullman car next to the locomotive, where they will receive the first shock of a collision? And then when you have the passenger cars back where the ordinary people now travel, and the mail cars away in the rear, I will guarantee that the mail cars will not get hurt very much in an ordinary head-on railway collision.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will suggest to the gentleman that the answer to that is that the Government of the United States is not paying a rental of $5,000 a year for the coaches in which the passengers ride.

Mr. SIBLEY. Let us look out for the passengers. We are here to legislate for all the people as much as we are for those employed in the Railway Mail Service; and if this sad state of affairs exists, and if everybody who rides in an ordinary passenger coach has only one chance in thirty-six as against the man who takes the Pullman, it would be just as suitable, it seems to me, for this Congress to attempt to regulate the position which the mail cars should occupy in the trains; and I hope the gentleman does not represent the spirit of this Congress in attempting to legislate.

I have seen only one bill this year that provides an adequate form of government which meets every description and condition of society, and that is the bill introduced by my friend from Brooklyn [Mr. BAKER]. I want to say that I am rather in favor of that bill. I am in favor of any bill or any measure or any man——

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIBLEY. I want to finish this. I am afraid my time will expire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SIBLEY. I am in favor of any man who believes that he has some great truth within his bosom that, if given to the world, will add to the sum total of human blessing, or some great theory of government that, if enacted into law, would better humanity and lift it onto a higher plane. Though I may not agree with him, I am glad that such a man is thinking great things, and it would seem if the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] and my friend from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] can get together that they can arrange a system of government and regulation which will adequately meet every condition in human affairs that they have in their minds.

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIBLEY. Yes.

Mr. BAKER. Let me suggest that instead of "the gentleman from New York" getting together with the gentleman from Minnesota that the gentleman from Minnesota ask the author and sponsor for the bill and not the mere introducer of it to get together with him. I merely introduced the bill "by request," as you all know.

Mr. SIBLEY. Do you disclaim——

Mr. BAKER. I disclaim sympathy with the paternalistic principles of the bill. I am not a paternalist, but an individualist.

Mr. SIBLEY. I am very glad to hear that, Mr. Chairman. In the gentleman's own time I should like to hear a description of what an individualist is. I think the whole House would be interested.

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume the gentleman from Pennsylvania will now modify his statement as to being in sympathy with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIBLEY. I do entirely. I withdraw the recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have time to answer one question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Will the chairman of the committee yield for one moment while I ask a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No.

Mr. Chairman. I reserved the point of order against this amendment, while the debate has run to the merits of it. I shall address myself briefly to the merits of the amendment.

I want to call the attention of the Chair first to a statute which I think would control relative to the point of order. It is the statute of March 3, 1879, to be found in the Postal Laws and Regulations, section 1177, which reads as follows:

All cars or parts of cars used by the Railway Mail Service shall be of such style, length, and character, and furnished in such manner as shall be required by the Postmaster-General, and shall be constructed, fitted up, maintained, heated, and lighted by and at the expense of the railroad company.

I submit to the Chair that under that statute the Department is now operating relative to the character and condition of cars, and while Congress clearly would have the right to legislate in a different way, making different directions, fixing limitations of length and size of the cars and the period of time in which they might be used, yet such legislation can not be had upon an appropriation bill. I direct that to the attention of the Chair.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to have the attention of the committee concerning the merits of this amendment.

There is now in vogue in the Department, under the law which I have just read, a practice of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General in the nature of an inspection of cars.

He requires the railroad companies to examine these cars and report; and these companies are compelled to make such changes in those cars as the Postmaster-General, through his Second Assistant, may direct. In the hearings before the committee on this point the Second Assistant Postmaster-General used this language:

The cars that are constructed now are constructed according to plans that are drawn up by a committee which was appointed by the Post-Office Department in 1891.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. They started out with that plan, and the different master car builders of the country passed upon that plan, and wherever they decided certain features were advisable they made suggestions and changes were made in accordance with those suggestions. These cars are directed to be changed whenever, under the inspection of the Department, such changes are advisable.

I call the attention of the committee to the report brought to Congress in response to a resolution offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], the author of this amendment. I read directly from a communication of the Department to our committee before that resolution was acted upon by the House. That same information is contained in both. I find that there is now one car in the service in good condition, under the inspection, which entered the service in 1869. Its number is No. 1. Another entry shows that seven were put in the service in 1870. Five of them were "reshopped" in 1903, and two are now in good condition.

Under the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota these cars, in however good condition to-day, would necessarily be excluded from the service. The cars are constantly inspected and changed according to the examinations made. According to the statements to the committee of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, they are improving the cars as rapidly as constructed under specifications fixed not only by the Department but on the suggestions of the master car builders of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the chairman of the committee think that a car constructed in 1871 will compare at all in strength with a car constructed to-day; I do not care how it is repaired?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I answer by the statement of the Department, that out of ten cars put into service in 1878 seven of them are now in good condition and three in fair condition.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not deny that statement.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I wish to say, further——

Mr. TAWNEY. A car built in 1869 or 1871 was not built for service in 1903, for use on a train running at the rate of 60 or 70 miles an hour. In however good condition it may be, the strength, the resisting power, of the car is not equal to the demand under the conditions that it must meet to-day.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not a master car builder, and I think it is no reflection upon the gentleman from Minnesota to say that he is not a car builder. I give to him and give this committee these facts, which are official. Here is a car put in the service in 1878. We have it here from the record, and if he can not disprove it he must admit it, because it is an official document.

Now, there were ten cars put in the service in 1878. Two of them were repaired, "shopped," as the Department calls it, in 1903, six in 1902, and two in 1901. All of these ten cars have virtually been rebuilt within that time to conform to the specifications not only of the Department but of the master car builders of this country, whose specifications are followed.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman does not mean to say to this committee that a car taken into a shop and "reshopped" or repaired is rebuilt? He knows that a car may be taken into a shop and have a new truck or a broken wheel replaced, or similar repairs, without being rebuilt.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But here is an official statement showing that they were in good condition on June 30 last, showing that there was reasonable repair to these cars.

I now move that all debate upon the item and upon the amendment be now closed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I did not hear the gentleman's request.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that all debate upon the pending amendment be now closed.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. It is upon the pending amendment, not the paragraph?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be reported. A number of Members do not know, I think, what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he withdrew the point of order in moving to close debate?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I did not; I still insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOUTELL). The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota is an amendment to the paragraph contained in lines 20 and 21 on page 15 of the bill. That paragraph is as follows:

For railway post-office car service, $5,736,000.

The amendment is as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended for the use of cars in the railway postal service that have been in said service for a period of more than fifteen years.

The Chair has not had his attention called to any provision in the statutes of which the language of this proviso would be a violation if it were a positive enactment, so, without raising the question, and merely the question of limitation, the Chair overrules the point of order. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAWNEY. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 42.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. TAWNEY.

The tellers having taken their places, the committee again divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 59.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Mississippi. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Not now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the last word of the amendment just adopted:
"Provided further, That the annual pay for the use of any postal car shall not exceed 50 per cent of the cost of manufacturing the same."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will argue the point of order then first. It is not subject to the point of order, because it is simply a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Indiana reserve the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, Mr. Chairman, I made the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is clearly contrary to existing law. It is new legislation.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will answer the point of order first. It is not contrary to any existing law. There is no existing law which requires that the rental paid for a postal car shall be over 50 per cent of the cost of constructing the postal car. Mr. Chairman, this is nothing but a limitation upon the expenditure of the appropriation made in the bill, and therefore comes within the rule. Now, Mr. Chairman, while the point of order is being reserved I want to——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I have not only reserved the point of order, but I have made it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has made the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Well, I would like to hear the gentleman from Indiana upon the point of order then.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I direct the Chairman's attention to the Revised Statutes, section 4004, being section 1176 of the Postal Laws, which reads as follows:

Additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars 40 feet in length, and $30 per mile per annum for 45-foot cars, and $40 per mile per annum for 50-foot cars, and $50 per mile per annum for 55 to 60 foot cars.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that law fixes the compensation to be paid, not for the rent of railway postal cars, as the gentleman incorrectly stated, but for the service of railway postal cars.

The price of the car does not enter into the fixing of the value of the compensation any more than the cost of a man's clothes determines the value of his services. Men misstate the facts relative to this item of appropriation when they continue to insist on reporting it as rent. It is not so considered by the Department, and it is not so considered by Congress. It is for the service, and that service is with reference to the cars of certain length and a certain mileage. The statute if amended as directed by the gentleman from Mississippi would fix the basis of that service according to the price of the car manufactured. Therefore it is clearly in violation of that statute.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the law which the gentleman has just read says that the rent or the service, I care not which you call it, paid by the Government shall not exceed a certain amount for a car 40 feet in length, and shall not exceed a certain amount for a car 60 feet in length. It does not fix it at so many dollars for a 40-foot car, nor so many dollars for a 60-foot car. What he read itself is a limitation on the appropriation, and this is but a further limitation upon the same appropriation.

Now, we have just heard an admission upon the floor, or a statement and admission, to the effect that we are paying annually for these cars, for their service or for their rent, it makes no difference, as that is a play upon words, for their use—and that term will include both—a sum nearly equal to the cost of construction of one of these cars, or approximately equal to the cost of the construction of one of them.

We have just heard that some of them have been in the service thirty years, many fifteen years, so that the Government during that time has paid out thirty times the cost of the construction of the car. In addition to that we are paying by weight for carrying the mails in the cars, so I think I am right even upon the mere verbal argument in calling it a rental, because it is a return for the use just as much as a rent for land is a return for its use. I care nothing about the word "rental." It is for the use of the car. It is a further limitation upon the appropriation, and, although the existing limitation is upon a different basis, this further one violates no existing law. It changes no existing law, because the existing law upon the other basis says that it shall not "exceed" certain figures. This says that the sum, wherever the law now says that the sum shall not "exceed" so much for a 40-foot car and shall not "exceed" so much for a 60-foot car, shall also and furthermore not exceed 50 per cent of the cost of the construction of those cars. I am willing to leave the point of order there.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is to follow the amendment which has just been adopted. This paragraph appropriates for the railway post-office car service $5,726,000. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi is as follows:

Provided further, That the annual rental paid for the use of any postal car shall not exceed 50 per cent of the cost of manufacturing the same.

The Chair will call special attention to the precise language of this amendment. It is not in the form of a limitation upon this annual appropriation, but is in the form of permanent limitation upon the discretion of the Postmaster-General. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 20, after the word "service," strike out all thereafter in lines 20 and 21 and insert "$4,048,000."

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, the question of railway mail service has been, is now, and will be for many years a most interesting as well as a most complex subject.

We should approach the discussion of this subject in a spirit of entire fairness as between the Government and all interested in carrying the mails, whether it is a corporation or a single individual.

More than 300 Members of this body represent districts which either in whole or in part enjoy the blessings of free rural delivery. If the amendment which I have offered shall be adopted, and later on there shall be struck out from the bill what is known as the "special-facility clause," commonly known as the "railroad subsidy," carrying an appropriation of $167,728, which I regard as little less than an outrage on the taxpayers of the country, and add these two amounts to the amount proposed in the bill we shall be able to give $800 of the $850 to the free rural-delivery carriers, which I think is but a fair and just compensation for their services, for I regard them as among the poorest-paid servants of the Government.

This clause which I have sought to amend with the eight lines which precede it ought to challenge the attention of every Member in the House. We are asked to appropriate for the carrying of the mails by the steam railways alone one-quarter, aye, sir, more than one-quarter, of the vast appropriation of almost $170,000,000 carried by this bill.

We are told by members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads on both sides of the Chamber that the revenues of the Government will not admit of paying the free rural-delivery carriers more than $720. Sir, I would that the committee had more carefully considered this matter when they were writing some of the provisions of this bill, especially the clause with reference to special facilities and others that I might mention.

I assume that every Member knows that we pay the steam railways for carrying the mail in apartment cars, and also in railway post-office cars, commonly known as "R. P. O. cars." "The apartment mail car, for which no extra pay is given, and the railway post-office car are essentially the same in character. They differ only in the quantity of space, quality of fixtures, etc., increased weight, costs, etc. The one is simply an evolution from the other."

If you will turn to page 4 of the report of the Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, you will find that the Government is paying for 1,116 railway post-office cars, and if you divide this proposed appropriation of $5,736,000 by 1,116, you will see that we are asked to pay for the annual use of these cars $5,140. Is not this a very large sum to pay for the mere use or rental of the cars, when you consider that the railway post-office cars earn what is regarded by many as an exorbitant amount under the law by weight?

Let us assume that a railway post-office car 60 feet long costs $6,000, which is giving the railroad the benefit of the doubt in this discussion, and let us assume that a 50-foot car costs $5,500 and a 40-foot car $5,000.

You will observe that for the annual rental of a 40-foot car we pay $140 more than it costs, and for a 50-foot car within $360 of its cost, and for a 60-foot car within $860 of its cost, and when you further know that the life of these cars, as shown by the recent hearings taken by the Committee on Post-Office and Post-Roads, is from ten to twenty and twenty-five years, you have some appreciation of their earning capacity, independent of what they earn by carrying the mail by weight.

The following is a schedule of rates for railway mail transportation, which shows what is paid for carrying the mail by weight as well as the rates allowable per mile per annum for use of railway post-office cars when authorized:

Schedule of rates for railway mail transportation.

Average weight of mails per day carried over whole length of route.	Pay per mile per annum. Rates allowable under act of March 3, 1873.	Rates allowable under acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878.	Rates allowable to land-grant railroads, being 80 per cent of allowance to other railroads, under act of July 12, 1876.	Intermediate weight warranting allowance of $1 per mile under the custom of the Department, subject to acts of July 12, 1876, and June 17, 1878.
				Pounds.
200 pounds	$50.00	$42.75	$34.20
200 pounds to 500 pounds				12
500 pounds	75.00	64.12	51.30
500 pounds to 1,000 pounds				20
1,000 pounds	100.00	85.50	68.40
1,000 pounds to 1,500 pounds				20
1,500 pounds	125.00	106.87	85.50
1,500 pounds to 2,000 pounds				20
2,000 pounds	150.00	128.25	102.60
2,000 pounds to 3,500 pounds				60
3,500 pounds	175.00	149.62	119.70
3,500 pounds to 5,000 pounds				60
5,000 pounds	200.00	171.00	136.80
For every additional 2,000 pounds	25.00	21.37	17.10
Over 5,000 pounds				80

No allowance is made for weights not justifying the addition of $1.

Rates allowable per mile per annum for use of R. P. O. cars when authorized.

Railway post-office cars:

40 feet	per daily line	$25
50 feet	do	40
55 to 60 feet	do	50

To constitute a "line" of railway post-office cars between given points, sufficient railway post-office cars must be provided and run to make a trip daily each way between those points.

In this connection I might state that under the law a railroad can carry 200 pounds of mail per annum and carry it in a pouch, which can be thrown into a baggage car, not requiring the use of an apartment car or of any part of an apartment car, and a road 100 miles long would earn for this service per annum $4,275. I submit that this seems too much. I know that in addition thereto in many cases the railroads are required to deliver the mail by messenger within a distance of 80 rods of the depot; but grant all this to be true, is there a railroad in the country that would not feel that they were being well paid if they could receive $4,275 for hauling over their lines each day of the year, say for 100 miles, or a greater distance if you choose, a trunk weighing 200 pounds, containing most valuable and costly articles, and in addition thereto deliver it, from some point on their line, each day a distance of 80 rods from the place of delivery?—for the trunk, like the mail pouch weighing 200 pounds, would only occupy a small part of the baggage car.

A railroad 100 miles long carrying from 3,500 to 5,000 pounds earns $17,100, and you will notice by the above schedule that for every additional 2,000 pounds over 5,000 pounds they receive $21.37 in addition to the rate for carrying 5,000 pounds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, just print that.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads asks me to print this, but I prefer to give the figures to the committee now.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I wish that this consent may be granted, and I would like to have ten minutes in which to reply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, from the hearings which were had before the last joint commission to investigate the postal service it will be seen that these railway post-office cars carry from 4,000 to 12,000 pounds, and in this connection I quote Hon. William H. Fleming, who was a member of the joint commission, which report was submitted January 14, 1901:

It is very important in this connection for us to know how much weight of mail matter the postal car can carry. Some witnesses give the average weight at 4,000 pounds, or 2 tons, but Professor Adams is not willing to accept these figures (Pt. II, p. 233). One witness gives this weight of mail matter as 10,000 pounds, or 5 tons (Pt. II, p. 710). Mr. Davis, of the Post-Office Department, says that 7,000 pounds, or 3½ tons, is "an easy load" (Pt. II, p. 234), while it was testified that the postal cars on the Pennsylvania Railroad carried as high as 12,000 pounds, or 6 tons.

In this connection I wish to call special attention to the report of Mr. Bradley, of the Post-Office Department, and his specific statement (on p. 158, Pt. II) that the average weight capacity for storage of letter mail on a 60-foot postal car on the New York and Pittsburg route was 8,000 pounds; on the New York and Washington route, 10,000 pounds; on the New York, Geneva, and Buffalo route, 7,000 pounds, and of a newspaper car on the New York and Pittsburg route, 12,000 pounds. It is important to observe, too, that these weights are carried in that portion of the postal car "not assigned to distributing furniture."

Besides that, many of the mail trains use storage cars in connection with postal cars, and in this way the amount of mail handled on each postal car is largely increased, without any additional cost except that attached to the storage car, which certainly ought to be placed in the class of a freight car in all essential respects except as to speed.

But, going beyond mere general considerations, Professor Adams (Pt. II, pp. 233 and 234) makes a specific calculation of the actual cost of carrying the mail in postal cars over the Pennsylvania route. Upon the basis that each car is loaded with 3½ tons (said to be an "easy load"), he shows that the road would expend for its mail service an annual sum per mile of $2,244, while the compensation for carrying the mail over that route is $3,422 per mile, an excess of compensation over the cost of $1,178 per mile. This amount might be considered as part of a reasonable profit but for the fact that in making his computation the professor has already included all operating expenses and, in addition thereto, 38 per cent for fixed charges and dividends, etc. So that the excess of $1,178 is earned by this road in addition to a full allowance for expenses and profits.

If it be true, as Mr. Bradley states, that the storage capacity of these cars for letters alone is as high as 8,000 pounds, and in some instances 10,000 pounds, it is evident that the earnings are greatly increased when the cars are properly loaded.

Let it be noted, also, that in making this calculation Professor Adams has taken the average cost per train mile as $1, though, as a matter of fact, it is given by the Interstate Commerce Commission as 95½ cents in 1898. Moreover, the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, which continues to assign its operating expenses between the passenger and freight service, gives its average cost per passenger train per mile as 71 cents, mail trains being classed with passenger trains. Whether the real cost of a mail train on the Pennsylvania Railroad is nearer 71 cents than 95½ cents is an open question. Besides that, Professor Adams's calculation makes no allowance for the decreased service on Sunday, but assumes that the same full service is rendered for the whole three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. So it will be seen that Professor Adams has given the road, in his calculation, the benefit of the most favorable conditions in each instance.

After a most careful and I think impartial consideration of this question I am forced to the conclusion that the present law makes overpayment to the railroads on the dense mail routes, and that the reduction recommended by Professor Adams, ranging from 1 to 12 per cent on weights beyond 5,000 pounds, is reasonable and just.

In presenting the foregoing views I have considered the regular railway mail pay and the extra postal car pay as one single item of compensation. If the reductions advocated by Professor Adams in the general rates are made, I would not advocate an additional reduction in postal car pay; but if those general reductions are rejected, I think there ought to be a reduction in the postal car pay.

In view of the foregoing statement, let us see what a railway post-office car, carrying 7,000 pounds, would earn in addition to its rental.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman desires to make any misstatements.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I certainly do not.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. The gentleman is calculating on 6 tons, in some instances less, of mail carried every day in the year?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Yes; I know that.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman not know that the postal commission and the men who have given the greatest study to this matter have determined that 4 tons is the maximum that can be carried in a postal car with the distributing going on?

Mr. OVERSTREET. And in most of them but 2 tons.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Opinions varied, as shown by the hearings.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. They have not only determined that to be the maximum, but that any calculation that is made on the average daily carrying of the mails has to take into consideration that to-day the mail will be twice as heavy as to-morrow, and that it is always true that outgoing mail from given points is twice as heavy as the incoming mail.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I can not agree with the gentleman's statement as a whole, but will refer him to the hearings before the Postal Commission, and will say that the hearings show that the mail going west is heavier than the mail coming east.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would suggest that a pound of western mail does not weigh any more than a pound of eastern mail.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That is quite true, but I am answering the gentleman's question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not know about that. I would not assent to that proposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. That may be true, and I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR]. We all know, for instance, that supposing 9,000 pounds of mail is placed upon a car bound from Detroit to Chicago the whole of that mail does not go all the way to Chicago.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. That suggestion is not in your figure.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I have not finished. I am undertaking to call the attention of the committee to what the average would be. If you put a given amount of mail matter in a railway post-office car, and keep distributing the same and taking on new mail as the car proceeds to its destination, and assuming that a railway post-office car carries 10,000 pounds, is it fair between the Government and the railway company?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman know of any well-informed man in the world who claims that he can take 12,000 pounds of mail matter in a car and still leave room for the handling of it?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I refer the gentleman to the hearings as to what can be put into a railway post-office car.

Over a road of, say, 285 miles, the distance from Detroit to Chicago, the computation shows it would annually earn $27,363.43, and add to this the annual rental of $5,140 and you have $32,503.43 as the total annual earnings of a railway post-office car, and if you will make the computation regarding a railway post-office car carrying 9,000 pounds you will observe it will earn annually on the same line $30,459.37. To this add $5,140, the annual rental, and you have as the total annual income for this car $35,599.37. Does not this seem like a large sum of money to pay for this service, when you consider that these railway post-office cars are only a part of the train which the road is daily hauling over its line, and that the road is not required to furnish an additional engineer or fireman, and that the only increase in cost is the coal for making the steam for drawing this car and its contents, and the daily care of the car in the way of seeing that it is well lighted, heated, and otherwise cared for, so as to be in running order? But let us see what is the net annual income to the railroads from a railway post-office car over a distance such as I have suggested.

In trying to get at the right of this matter I learned from an official source which is reliable that in determining what it is worth for the service of a car the price varies from 4 to 10 cents per running mile. The 10 cents per mile may be a fair price on a line like the Rio Grande in Colorado, or over other lines where they have such heavy grades, but I can not believe that even 4 cents per running mile is a fair price over a line like that of the Michigan Central between Detroit and Chicago. I think it is too much. But let us again give the railroads the benefit of the doubt, and by computation you will find that the annual cost for a car at 4 cents per running mile over a line 285 miles long for 365 days is $8,322.

I was also informed that $1,400 per year was a fair price for keeping one of these railway post-office cars in good condition—keeping it properly lighted, oiled, etc. I may add in this connection, however, that the hearings before the postal commission show that they can be cared for for an amount as low as $620, and by others that it is worth $2,000. I think I am fair in accepting $1,400.

Add this, if you please, to the $8,322, and you will find that the annual cost to the railroad is $9,722; deduct this from the annual earnings of a railway post-office car that carries 7,000 pounds, and you have a net annual earning to the railroad of $22,781.43, and from the car that carries 9,000 pounds, $25,877.37.

I desire to state that after making these figures I was not satisfied that I was correct, for I was astonished at the earning capacity of these cars, and so I submitted these figures to a gentleman for many years connected with the Railway Mail Service, who is perfectly competent to speak, and he assured me that they were correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Does the gentleman need so much time?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, on an appropriation bill carrying so large an amount as this does, it seems as though there ought to be no objection for a few moments of time in discussing a proposition which covers more than one-fourth of the entire amount.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman would confine himself to the amendment and not discuss portions of the bill already passed he would not consume so much time.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman please direct my attention to any part of my argument that does not refer to my amendment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman has been talking about the railway mail pay, when his amendment has reference to railway postal cars.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I am considering the two subjects together. I could have made my amendment apply to both clauses of the bill had I chosen to do so.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will not object to this request, but I will to any other.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I should like to inquire of the gentleman at this point how he expects this amendment to operate? He proposes to cut down arbitrarily the item by a large amount of money.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. If the amendment is adopted, it will reduce the service.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman expect that the rate of pay of which he is complaining will be reduced under the amendment or that the aggregate service will be reduced?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I hope, in view of what I have said and what I propose to say, that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will present a bill to the House reducing the pay for the rental or use of the railway post-office cars, or that they will suggest the appointment of a new commission for a further examination of this and kindred subjects.

Mr. MURDOCK. Do you contend that any car running between Detroit and Chicago carries 7,000 pounds?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I am using that for an illustration.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Why don't you make it 15,000 pounds?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I would only make the amount larger if I did that. I repeat that when you take the hearings it appeared to me that I was conservative in taking that amount.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have but a moment. I want to say that the commission did not agree. Two of the commission came to the conclusion that $2,000 or thereabouts was a fair price to pay per year for these cars.

Mr. HEDGE. Who were they?

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. One was Hon. William E. Chandler, for several years a Senator from New Hampshire and now president of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, and the other was Hon. William H. Fleming, then a Member of the House. Those were the gentlemen. If you were to pay for those cars an annual rental of $2,000 each, which in my judgment is a fair price when you take into consideration the amount paid in addition thereto for weight, you would pay for the use of the 1,116 railway post-office cars $2,232,000, and if such a provision were to be enacted into law we would save in comparison with the present proposed appropriation just in this one item of the bill $3,504,000.

Gentlemen, this law was passed in 1873, at the same time that the law was passed with reference to weights. You will notice that the law with reference to weights has twice been amended. I ask you in reason and judgment why should not this law also be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]? Mr. Fleming in his report calls attention to the fact that coal, pig iron, steel rails, and those things entering into the construction and operation of a railroad have been reduced in cost from 10 to 54 and 76 per cent. In 1873, when this law was passed, we were paying for steel rails $120 a ton. To-day we are paying about $20 a ton. [Prolonged applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I should like the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon this amendment to the bill. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to be able to secure a few moments more time so that I might direct the attention of the committee to some statements made in the report of the commission and make some comments thereon.

It is true that I might have had time during general debate upon this bill, but I am impressed that matters of this importance receive greater attention from Members during the reading of the bill than they otherwise would, and a forcible illustration of this fact was shown by the presence of not more than one-third of the Members of the House at the time of the delivery of two speeches during the last month by prominent Members who must have given weeks and months of time in study, thought, and reflection upon the subjects which they so ably presented to the committee.

I think matters of such grave importance should receive more time and attention at the hands of Members during the reading of the bill, for it is then that usually a greater number are present and more interest and attention is manifested than is ordinarily given in the discussion of these matters under general debate.

The commission use this language:

> We are of opinion that the true basis for payment to railroads for mail transportation should be such sums as will afford the railroads a fair compensation for the services rendered.

Certainly everyone will willingly subscribe to this doctrine, and it is evident to my mind, after reading their report, that they were not altogether satisfied with their conclusions, for they further say:

> The difficulty with which the Commission has been, and Congress will be, confronted in the consideration of this question is, however, not because of any disinclination to allow the railroads a fair and full compensation for the services rendered by them in the transportation of the mails, but because of the difficulty of determining what is a fair and reasonable compensation. This difficulty arises from the fact that the Railway Mail Service is largely sui generis. (Printed testimony, pt 2, p 152.) No other department or class of the business of railroad and transportation companies is sufficiently similar to afford a safe and certain standard by which to measure the compensation which ought to be paid for the transportation of the mails.

They also assert that the question of mail pay is not comparable with the express, with freight, or with passenger transportation, and in this connection they use this language:

An examination, then, of the three great departments of railroad transportation fails to disclose in either an adequate and reliable standard by which alone to determine the question of what is a reasonable compensation to the railroads for the transportation of the mails. Having thus failed to discover any gauge or measure by which the proper amount of the compensation to be paid for the transportation of the mails can be made a matter of mathematical demonstration, the Commission is forced to the conclusion, that, as said by Professor Adams and some of the other gentlemen whose testimony is preserved in the record, this question is one of "judgment" (printed testimony, pt. 2, p. 13), and to be determined from a full and careful consideration of the question in all its bearings upon and connection with the other branches of the railroad business and operation, by which method a conclusion may be reached whereby the railroads will receive adequate compensation for the services performed by them, and the Government protected against paying out an amount in excess of the value of the services received.

So that if it resolves itself into one of "judgment" you and I certainly have a right to express our opinions in the hope that we may be able to shed some light that will aid in the solution of this much-vexed question.

I never yet have been quite able in the light of all the facts and circumstances to comprehend this statement of the commission:

The state of facts, however, as disclosed by the evidence, is that the transportation of the mails is imposed upon several hundred different railroads, owned by different and distinct companies, operated under radically different circumstances and conditions of country, climate, population, and trade. The testimony also satisfises us that to a certain proportion of these railroads the transportation of the mails is unprofitable, and in some instances attended with positive loss; that to a smaller proportion of the railroads the expense of and receipts from the transportation of the mails substantially balance, the railroads in this class being large systems whose initial points are the great centers of business and population in the Middle West.

To the residue of the railroads, consisting of a very small percentage of the total number of railroads in the country, the transportation of the mails is a source of some actual profit; but the evidence is not sufficient to enable the commission to determine this definitely or the amount or percentage of such profit, if any. The evidence shows that the railroads which come in the class of thus deriving an actual profit from the transportation of the mails are mainly those one of whose termini is the city of New York, and operating over lines and through sections of the country where the "density" of the mail is the greatest.

If it be true that the railroads, taken as a whole, are not making any money for the carrying of the mails, then it must follow that they are losing money, and if they are losing money, how is it to be accounted for when we all know that there is not probably a railroad in the country that is not desirous of securing these mail contracts? The commission further say:

The Railway Mail Service as it is in operation to-day may be divided into two parts: First, that required of the railroads by law; second, that called for by the regulations of the Department.

This matter of regulations which we so often hear spoken of in connection with this matter is only an added proof to me of the fact that the railroads know that they are receiving compensation in excess of what they ought to receive, for if you will visit the Post-Office Department they will tell you of the various regulations that are being imposed upon the railroads, and the number is increasing rather than diminishing.

I am unable to account for the fact that the railroads submit to these continued regulations upon any other theory than that they are receiving excessive pay. If we accept the reasoning of the commission in connection with what the railroads are making, and also bear in mind the repeated regulations, which must add new burdens, and apply it to any other business transaction, I submit it would lead to but one conclusion, namely, that the individual or corporation would refuse to further continue the contract, for the reason that they were losing money and also for the further fact that regulations were being imposed which could not be fulfilled without causing a still greater loss; but, on the contrary, we learn that the railroads object mildly and keep right on letting the Post-Office Department impose these added regulations.

There were two members of the commission who frankly stated that they thought the pay ought to be reduced, and I quote from Mr. Fleming to show not only his opinion but the opinion of Professor Adams, of the University of Michigan.

At an early stage of our proceedings it became apparent that the Commission needed the assistance of some expert statistician acquainted with railway and transportation problems in order to reconcile, if possible, the conflicting testimony and ascertain with some degree of definiteness the proper data on which a just report could be based. Accordingly, Mr. Henry C. Adams, professor of political economy and finance at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich., and also statistician of the Interstate Commerce Commission, was employed to investigate the subject and report. Mr. Adams gave months of time to his investigation and was assisted in his work by a large force of clerks. He made his report to our Commission under date of February 1, 1900, and it will be found in part 2 of the testimony, at page 171. His conclusions were as follows:

First. It is proposed that the present rate of compensation on all routes shall be reduced by 5 per cent.

Second. It is proposed that all routes receiving in excess of 20 cents per ton per mile shall be subjected to a further reduction at a uniformly progressing rate, the rate of progression being indicated in the following table:

[a] On the basis of rates received under the present laws by which railway compensation is determined.

Professor Adams was subjected to a rigid examination, and his positions were assailed by various representatives of the railroads, but I do not see that his conclusions have been impaired, except, perhaps, in the matter of his comparison of mail rates with the express rates. Mr. Juller, of the American Express Company, seems to have shown that the 100-pound rate selected for comparison by Professor Adams was not a fair typical rate for that purpose.

Professor Adams revised his original statement in some minor particulars, and under pressure of oral examination made some conditional concessions, but as his final matured judgment in the premises he still holds to his recommendations of reduction. The majority of the commission state in their report that "this question (of mail pay) is one of judgment," but after making this admission they forthwith proceed to set aside the deliberate judgment of the best expert they could procure.

After the filing of his report and after his final examination, on April 7, 1900, with all the additional light he could obtain, Professor Adams makes the further statement that his proposed reduction of 5 per cent is "justified by a consideration of the economies in railway transportation not dependent on increase in the density of mail traffic." (Pt. II, p. 240.) I believe this recommendation of Professor Adams is entirely justified, unless it can be shown that the rate of pay established under the law of 1873 and the amendments of 1876 and 1878, including even the postal-car pay, was grossly inadequate at that time.

I think Professor Adams's recommendation for a general reduction of 5 per cent should be enacted into law.

I am also of the opinion that the second recommendation made by Professor Adams, that the form of progressive reduction provided for in the law of 1873, and which has never been changed, should be extended beyond the limit originally fixed of 5,000 pounds, is founded in justice and wisdom. His position on this point is even more unassailable than his other recommendation, for a 5 per cent horizontal reduction.

And I especially direct your attention to what Mr. Fleming has to say about the pay for railway post-office cars:

What, then, is the proper basis of pay for railway post-office cars? Clearly that basis is to be found in the differences which exist between the apartment car and the railway post-office car. The extra pay should be adjusted to the extra facilities; no more, no less. The distance the cars run per annum does not enter as a separate factor into the problem, because if the mail were carried in an apartment car that car would have to run just as many miles as the railway post-office car. In either case the same number of engineers, brakemen, etc., are required.

Efforts have been made to defend the heavy outlay for railway post-office cars on the ground that the regular compensation for mail transportation, as fixed by the law of 1873, was found to be inadequate, and therefore the pay for railway post-office cars was purposely placed higher than it should have been per se in order to make up the losses on the regular rates. But that plea loses much of its force when we consider that the railway post-office car pay was fixed in the same law of 1873 in which the regular mail transportation rates were fixed, and instead of those rates being found inadequate by subsequent Congresses, they were considered to be too high and were twice lowered, once in 1876, 10 per cent, and again in 1878, 5 per cent.

And, further, as to what he has to say about the proposed reduction jeopardizing the railroad interests of the country:

The moderate reductions suggested could not seriously jeopardize the railroad interests of the country, as the mail pay constituted in 1898 only 2.74 per cent of the total earnings of the roads (Pt. II, p. 239). Both reductions together would save to the Government about $3,000,000 per annum, according to Professor Adams's estimate. This sum would be less than one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the annual gross earnings of the roads.

We have, undoubtedly, a most excellent postal system, but we also have a most costly one. The total expenditures for the year ending June 30, 1901, as taken from the report of the Postmaster-General, were $107,249,295.13, of which $57,123,277.27 were expended for railway transportation.

And Mr. Fleming is sustained in his contention by Mr. Chandler, who uses the following language:

Does it follow, therefore, that the Government must go on for an indefinite period to pay the present rates for transporting the mails? The undersigned does not so conclude. The present rates per pound weights were first fixed in 1873, were reduced 10 per cent in 1876, and 5 per cent more in 1878. It is not proved that they were inadequate then, and it is not probable that it is unjust to require some reduction of rates when freight and passenger rates have been so largely reduced during the same period.

Accuracy of compensation being impossible, the best judgment of all persons having to deal with the subject must be exercised.

The commission, as authorized by Congress, employed a highly competent expert (Prof. Henry C. Adams), and he recommended a reduction of 5 per cent of the compensation on all routes, and a further reduction varying from 1 per cent to 12 per cent on the railroad routes where the traffic is the most dense, as being, in his judgment, below the percentage of reduction which could be justly demanded by reason of changed conditions. The undersigned joins with Representative Fleming in recommending the foregoing reductions and in the removal of the present limit of progressive reduction to 5,000 pounds, and also joins in Mr. Fleming's recommendation of $2,000 per annum "as ample special pay for railway post-office cars."

I yield to no one in my desire for the best postal service of any country, but I insist that we are paying too much for the transportation of the mails. What will the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads do to obtain relief? Will they bring in a bill during the present session of this Congress reducing the pay for the use of railway post-office cars, or will they favor the appointment of a commission to further investigate and report upon this whole matter?

Certainly no one ought to be satisfied with the report of the last commission. I doubt if the individual members of that commission are fully satisfied, for they were divided in their opinion, and they did not agree as to what their own expert recommended.

The railroads ought not to object, for if they are not being fairly paid for their services, as a part of the last commission assert, they should be, and no one speaking for the Government can oppose an honest effort to get at the right, whether it pertains to this or any other subject-matter, and in this way do equal and exact justice to all concerned. Let us see what the committee will propose and do.

May I be pardoned if I add a word to what I have already said regarding the free rural delivery carriers? During the closing hours of the last Congress some one asserted that the free rural delivery carriers were earning one-half as much as their salary by taking subscriptions for the newspapers, carrying parcels, etc. This may be true in a few instances, but not in the main.

In the district which I represent I have corresponded with all the carriers in this regard and also as to what their outfit cost them and what it costs them to live and what they could save. Many of these letters are very interesting, and clearly show that the carriers are not receiving a sufficient salary; but it is so universally conceded that they are not receiving adequate pay that I shall not discuss that proposition further.

Regarding their earnings outside of their salary, 138 carriers report as follows: 21 did not receive a penny; the lowest amount received by any carrier was 10 cents; the largest amount was $48.25; the average, $9.80.

For many years the farmers gave their subscriptions for newspapers to the fourth-class postmasters largely; since the coming of the rural free delivery they have given them in the main to the carriers, and I think that they would like this privilege continued. They also want the carriers to be permitted to do errands for them.

I quote a few lines from my friend Hon. Robert W. Malcolm, one of the leading farmers of the Sixth district of Michigan, under date of March 8, 1904:

> Yours received, and I want to ask you to do your best to keep Congress from stopping our mail carriers from doing errands for us farmers. Supposing I need a little repair for my binder or mower, I can send by Collard (the carrier) and he will bring what I want to my farm for 10 cents, and I can stay at home and tend to my crops. If I have to go to town I am out half a day besides what I have to spend for toll, etc. It can't hurt anyone to let things alone, and it helps the farmer.

These are the sentiments of the farmers throughout the Union wherever free rural delivery is enjoyed.

Now is the time to do our duty, and if we do the free rural delivery carriers will receive a salary commensurate with their services. [Loud applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the amendment in a form that I think will not be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I trust that the committee will be as generous with me as it was with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH], and if I should ask for an extension I will try not to occupy any more time than is necessary.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] has offered some very interesting figures and suggestions to the House. He will pardon me, I hope, if I say that he made one statement that does not do honor to his argument. He appeals to this House to strike out one appropriation in order that you may put it somewhere else where you may be especially interested.

Let me say to you, gentlemen, that each case which comes to you should be considered on its own merits. If this pay is too high, it ought to be reduced. If this pay is only fair, you ought not to take away from and cripple one branch of the service in order to give it somewhere else where you think possibly you are more interested.

Now, gentlemen, this question of railway mail pay is the most interesting and most difficult problem that the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads has to meet in the consideration of this bill. The trouble about it is that very few men will come to the consideration of it freed from prejudice for or against the railroads or freed from improper assumptions.

My friend from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] bases an entire argument upon this proposition—that the railway postal car earns so much carrying 7,000 pounds of mail, when the actual fact has been proven to be that the railway postal car does not carry that amount of mail. But the gentleman says if it carries more you earn so much more. The fact is that it does not carry that much, and does carry very much less, the average weight of mail carried being about two tons.

This commission that the gentleman has spoken of consisted of men who were among the ablest men in this House and the other.

I think you will all agree with me that it would have been hard to select a body of men fairer than those gentlemen. They investigated this subject for some time—something like two years. They employed the most eminent statistician in the United States to go through the testimony submitted and report to them upon it, and I want this House to remember this——

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Let me finish this statement.

I want the House to remember that only one gentleman, practically, reported in favor of reduction, and he only 5 per cent in a bill of over $40,000,000. The statistician on whose figures even that low estimate was made himself stated over and over again that he would not be in favor of any reduction unless you could introduce certain economies in the carrying of the mail, which consisted in the bunching of the mail on particular trains; instead of carrying it, for instance, from New York to Philadelphia on something like a hundred and forty trains, carrying it only on a few trains, which of course would result in much retarding of the mails to the people of the country, and which, I submit to you gentlemen, would result in such damage to the business interests of the country that you could not afford to support the proposition for a moment. Mind you, he said that unless you could put these economies into practice he would recommend no reduction; and all of these men reported—all, I think, excepting Mr. Fleming—after two years' investigation, that we ought not to reduce the price paid to the railroads for carrying the mails.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Did ex-Senator Chandler report that way?

Mr. COWHERD. As I remember it, all except Mr. Fleming.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Is it not also true that the chairman of the commission, after employing that able statistician, Prof. Henry Adams, did not follow his judgment?

Mr. COWHERD. Except upon this: Professor Adams thought if you could introduce this amendment in the service, that you could introduce economies by bunching the mail; that you would not send it out as you do now—practically every fast passenger train with a mail car—but instead that you would only send out one, two, or three cars between the great cities.

There is no gentleman sitting here as a Representative upon the floor of this House that would permit such a thing to be done where you have twenty or thirty trains a day—cut off the mail cars and give the people their mail but once or twice in a day—and you know it; and yet it was said that unless you could introduce these economies in the service the rate ought not to be reduced. Professor Adams himself said—and I have here the statement made by Secretary Moody upon this subject, in which he quotes Professor Adams's opinion—that unless you could introduce these economies, in his opinion, that the pay ought not to be reduced. Now, of course, gentlemen, it is a different proposition——

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Is it true, as has been stated, that the rate of pay for carrying the mail has been the same since 1873?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, I am coming to that. It is true, in fact, and yet that mere statement carries a false impression.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have as much time as the gentleman from Michigan had.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, will he yield to a question?

Mr. COWHERD. Well, yes; I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BAKER. The gentleman stated in his opening remarks that many men approached this question prejudiced against the railroads. Does the gentleman maintain that the men who have railroad passes in their pockets are not prejudiced in favor of the railroads? [Derisive laughter.]

Mr. COWHERD. "The gentleman" does not contend that, but "the gentleman from Missouri" is willing to risk before this House, on a record of seven years' service, whether or not he has been unduly prejudiced in favor of railroads [applause], and he is willing further——

Mr. BAKER. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. COWHERD. No; I do not yield. I am going on now. He is willing further——

Mr. BAKER. Nobody believes that the gentleman from Missouri can be thus influenced.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is out of order, and the gentleman has transgressed the rules of orderly procedure of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAKER. I want to call the attention——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is still out of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] has again transgressed the rules of orderly procedure of the House of Representatives. The gentleman from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. COWHERD. Now, gentlemen, this matter, as I stated, ought to be considered on its merits and not on a question of prejudice for or against the railroads. The gentleman from New Jersey has asked: "Was the statement of the gentleman from Michigan true that the law had not been changed reducing pay?" Now, the fact is that the law is self-operating. The law was passed in 1873, amended afterwards by a 10 per cent reduction, and afterwards 5 per cent, so there is 14½ per cent reduction. But the law provides that a railroad carrying an average of 200 pounds of mail over its entire length shall receive $42.75 per mile per annum. That railroad earns $1.17 per ton per mile for carrying the mails, but if the next year that railroad gets to a point where it carries a ton of mail every day over its line, that same railroad earns only 35 cents per ton per mile, and when it gets to the point where it carries 300,000 pounds of mail daily per mile, average weight, over its entire length, no matter how many trains it is carried on, it drops down to a point where it earns only 6 cents per ton per mile. So you see the law itself continually reduces the pay for carrying the mails.

So much has it reduced it that during the time that the gentleman speaks of, while the percentage of reduction of pay for carrying passengers is 21 per cent and the cost of carrying freight has been reduced 44 per cent, the cost of carrying the mails has been reduced 39 per cent. Now, of course the increase of mails has been more, as a matter of fact, than the increase in freight proportionately, but the fact is that as freight increases the economies in the carrying business increase also. The improvement in the service reduces the cost of carrying, but the improvements in the mail service are along the line of increase in the cost of carrying the mails. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] talked about the old cars in the service. To-day we are demanding in the mail service a car that weighs from 60,000 to 100,000 pounds. We put into that car an average load of only 2 tons—4,000 pounds. They put a freight car on that weighs 30,000 pounds and put 25,000 pounds of freight on it—1 pound of paying weight to 1⅕ of dead weight in the freight service, while in the mail service you have 20 of dead weight to 1 of paying weight.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Before getting away from that question——

Several MEMBERS. A little louder.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Before you get away from the question of the automatic reduction of the rate I would like to know if the law of 1873 or 1878 provided for that automatic reduction?

Mr. COWHERD. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Then there has never been any change in the law?

Mr. COWHERD. There has been no change in the law, but there has been a reduction in the rates of carrying the mail 39 per cent under that law itself. Mr. W. H. Moody, the present Secretary of the Navy, and who I believe the membership of this House will join with me in saying was not only an exceedingly able but a very impartial investigator and a man of unquestioned integrity, after investigating this question thoroughly, stated in the report as his judgment that the pay for the carrying of mails was less than the railroads were earning proportionately to the service rendered for carrying freight or for carrying passengers or for carrying express.

Now, gentlemen, I want to call your attention to another proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. COWHERD. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the gentleman leaves that point, I want to call his attention to the fact, which is true out in the West at least, that there is a great deal of strife between the railroads as to which one shall be allowed the mail-carrying contract. I would like to ask him how he reconciles that fact with the statement that the rate they receive for carrying the mails is less than the rate received on other kinds of goods?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Moody stated, and I believe it to be true—that is, it meets with my judgment—that if you absolutely refused to pay the railroads of the United States a dollar they would carry the mails anyhow, and would have to carry them. They would have to carry them because the business of the country could not go on without it; the freight business could not go on without it: the passenger business could not go on without it; the express business could not go on without it; and if you absolutely wiped out all pay, Mr. Moody says, in his judgment, and I agree with him, that the railroads of the United States would in some way have to carry the mails and get their pay for it out of the other business that they do. It would go back onto the people, and the only difference would be that you would not appropriate for it here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will not the gentleman answer the question? I am only asking for information.

Mr. COWHERD. I think I did answer the question. I said that the railroads are anxious for the service because it is necessary to their business. I will answer it further, although the gentleman knows that my time is restricted. It is a great advertisement to the railroads to carry through continental mail, the fast mail, and they compete for it. In addition to that, they are running a fast train anyhow, and this means only one other car that is to be put on. Considered in connection with their total receipts, this is not such a great matter to the railroads, constituting only about 3 per cent of their receipts. So if it is not a question of making fair pay, if it is not a question of giving a fair pay for a fair service rendered, but a question of how cheap you can get it, I admit that you can get it cheaper. In my opinion you can get it very much cheaper. But the question is, if the railroads now are carrying it at a fair price, and you put a price that is unfair, will they not put the burden back on the people anyhow by simply making up the deficit in some other branch of the service?

I was going to call the attention of the House to this proposition. The pay for a postal car is only a part of the pay for inland transportation on railroad routes. If this was all in one item, reading $45,000,000, it would be practically the same as it is in the different items, and I agree with the gentleman from Michigan in that contention. But I want to say, gentlemen, when you talk about pay for postal cars being the value of the car or half the value of it, it carries no meaning whatever. You do not pay for the postal car to carry the mails. You pay for a post-office set on wheels, equipped with everything possible to make comfortable and useful the service of the man therein, and you pay for transporting that car across the roads of the country at the fastest speed possible to steam under modern conditions. That is what you pay for; it is not for the car.

The railroads said in the hearing before the Commission that if you would let them carry the mails as they carry freight, and fast freight at that, they would carry it for 10 per cent of the amount in this bill. So I want to call your attention to the fact that of this $45,000,000 you are appropriating, practically $40,000,000 of it is for expedition of the mails. If you simply want the mails carried as freight, if you simply want them carried in a car, held until you get a car full, taken on a train running 15 or 20 miles an hour, you can get the service done for five or six million dollars; but we have developed a system, gentlemen, through the years which makes every one of these cars a traveling post-office.

Thirty or forty years ago you took the mail at New York and put it in a car, loaded it in, and it wasn't touched until it got to the next city, Albany or Buffalo, and there it was taken out and redistributed, loaded on again, and sent to Chicago and redistributed there, and at that rate it would take two or three weeks to get a letter to San Francisco. Now, from the minute the car starts from New York there are men handling the mail, which averages only about 2 tons, for they have to have the racks and bags and the cases for separating the mail, and they are handling it every minute and every hour from the time it leaves until it gets to San Francisco, and that is the service you are paying for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Would the gentleman like any further time?

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to answer the question that my friend has asked me.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has described what we pay for when we pay for a car. I will ask what we pay for when we pay for weight in addition thereto?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I have said to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH] that these two items added together constitute the railway mail pay, and that you must add them together in order to find out how much we pay for carrying the mails. I want to say that much of what I may have said was taken from the remarks of the gentleman from California, Mr. Loud, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Moody, in the argument of this question before the House a few years ago. Mr. Moody illustrated it remarkably well when he said that if you get in a car to go from here to Boston you can pay whatever the price may be of the ticket and take your seat in the car and go through; but if you want to sleep, or if you want to work, you rent a stateroom and pay two or three times as much for it. That is what we do in carrying the mails. We pay for space, although the measure of the pay is on a basis of weight.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in what the gentleman is saying, but he has made the remark here that the privilege of carrying the mails is of material benefit to the railroads. Now, can not that be fairly taken into consideration. In addition to that, as I understand it, a train is made up and this is simply an additional car that has to be taken into consideration.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I believe that has been taken into consideration.

Mr. STANLEY. There is one other question.

Mr. COWHERD. Let me answer that. As a matter of fact, this commission found that although express companies had been cited for years as carrying packages very much more cheaply and getting the service from the railroad very much more cheaply than the Government, it was found that express companies were paying more to the railroads than the Government, that they were paying from 40 to 50 per cent of their gross receipts and then doing a lot of reciprocal service besides.

We found in addition to that, as I have said, that the passenger rates, except in certain cases immediately contiguous to large cities, where there are commutation tickets and where the trains go out and come back just at certain hours and loaded down, were much higher than the mail rate paid by the Government. That commission reported that for the service rendered the Government obtained a better contract and a better bargain than the passenger, the shipper of freight, or the shipper of express, and that the Government also got a better bargain than did the people of other countries where the conditions were such as to admit of comparison.

Mr. STANLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman another question—not in the way of contention, but for information, because I am very much interested in the able speech that he has made. In making up the calculation as to what was a fair recompense to the railroads, was it made by a comparison of freight rates and passenger rates or by an estimated amount of capital invested and the amount of money earned on that investment?

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, no man has been able to say, either in the Government service or the railroad service or elsewhere, just what it costs the railroad to carry freight, what it costs the railroad to carry mail, or passengers, or express, and no man has been able to say what proportion of the cost of maintaining and operating a railroad should be charged up to any one of these items. For that reason nobody can say, either in the railroad service or out, exactly what the price ought to be for carrying any one particular part of the business. The comparison was made with all the business, and it was in comparison with that business, in comparison with the rates paid by foreign countries, that the commission, as I understand it, reported that the pay should not be reduced.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee is ready to vote down the amendment, and I move that all debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH) there were—ayes 43, noes 71.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the last amendment insert:

"Provided further, That none of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended unless the annual sum paid for the service of any postal car shall not exceed 50 per cent of the cost of manufacturing the same."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that for the same reasons that I stated a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] proposes to place a limitation upon the annual expenditures for this purpose in the bill. On reading the sections in the Revised Statutes—section 3397 to section 4005—it does not appear to the Chair that this amendment would be anything further than such a limitation as should be referred to the discretion of the committee. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] has just said that any compensation upon a percentage-of-cost rate is not founded upon a proper idea, because he says that these are not mere postal cars, but are "traveling post-offices." Now, I do not see what that has to do with this question. I do not care whether you call them traveling post-offices or postal cars. Here is a thing for the use of which the Government is paying; here is a thing which costs so much, whatever it may be; and, after all, there is this to be considered: "What is a fair return upon the investment?" Will 50 per cent pay for keeping the thing, whatever you call it, in repair and pay for depreciation and yield a fair return on the investment to the people who own the thing and rent it to the Government of the United States?

The gentleman says, and says very truly, too, that while the mail is in this car it does not go as freight does, but that it is being separated all the time. But the people who rent us this car are not separating the mail; we, through our officers, are separating it. All the labor cost falls on us.

The gentleman says that because the mail is to be separated there must be free space to work in, and less weight can be carried upon the car. That is absolutely true, but that does not go to this question at all. We pay the railroad company by weight outside of this postal-car rental. In addition to that we pay them for the use of this car. And after you are through with everything that can be said, this remains as the test of what you shall pay, what is a fair return to be paid to the people who give us the use of this car or traveling post-office, or whatever it may be, to keep it up and repair it, meet depreciation, and to pay a fair interest upon the thing itself?

Now, I say that 50 per cent of the cost of constructing the postal car will pay all that is necessary to repair it during the year, to keep it in running order, to work it, and pay all the balance of expenses, including depreciation, and at the same time will return something like 20—perhaps nearer 40—per cent per annum interest, dividend, net rent, or whatever you call it, perhaps more.

I had almost forgotten to refer to one other point. The gentleman says, and says truly, too—I agree with him and I agree with what Secretary Moody said when a Member of this House—that if these railroad companies were paid nothing for carrying the mail they would still be amply paid, because their pay would come in indirect benefit to them in their other carrying business—freight, express, and passenger. They could not carry on either without carrying on the business of carrying letters and other mail at that same time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, it would be quite an easy matter for Congress to withhold all appropriations for th se postal facilities. But if the service is to be properly administered and the public afforded the use of those facilities for the prompt dispatch and receipt of mail matter, then we should not be led astray too easily by the claim that some railroad company is receiving an exorbitant pay. A very able commission appointed by Congress in very recent years had before it this entire subject-matter, and after a very thorough and careful investigation made such a report upon it that Congress did not undertake to consider even the advisability of reducing these rates.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the personnel of that Commission. Such Senators as Senator ALLISON, Senator Wolcott, Senator Chandler, Senator MARTIN, and such Members of the House as Mr. Loud, Mr. Moody, Mr. Fleming, and Mr. Catchings composed that Commission, which, after many months of investigation, made a report to Congress in many volumes, and declared, with no dissenting voice except that of Mr. Fleming, that they would not recommend any reduction in these rates.

What is this appropriation now before the committee? It is, as my friend from Mississippi says, for the rent of post-office cars. Not at all. It is for the use of traveling post-offices—not cars costing a few thousand dollars, standing upon a lot, to be occupied by some individual——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi rose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will yield in a moment—but cars for the use of the Post-Office Department, cars traveling from one end of the line to the other, under the same protection of the laws, subject to the same rules, which govern our post-offices in this country. Now I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Is not an annual payment for the use of anything a rental of the thing, no matter what the thing is?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not necessarily, by any means.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. What would you call it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not want to discuss the definition of the word "rental." I am quite content that Members should understand, as I believe they do, what this appropriation is for. Now, what does it amount to? It amounts in round numbers to about 4 cents per mile traveled for the use of these cars. These cars not only carry that mail for which they are paid by weight, but they carry the equipment, the opportunities for the services of the post-office clerks, and the railroad companies keep all the equipment and the cars in repair.

Gentlemen, does the Pullman Car Company pay railroads for hauling its cars? Not at all. The railroad companies pay the Pullman Company at the rate of about 2 cents a mile traveled for the privilege of hauling its cars for the accommodation of the public, and the Pullman Car Company maintains its own repairs to cars. Under this appropriation you pay just about what is equal to double pay by weight for the post-office cars. That is to say, mail carried upon a full railway postal car, such as is provided for in this appropriation, pays about twice as much as mail not carried in a railway postal car, because the accommodations which the company give to the railway postal clerks, the equipment which they provide for the quick distribution of the mail in transit in order that it may be quickly delivered to the persons to whom it is sent, require more care and more space than the cars where there is not a full crew for distribution, as there is in a railway postal car.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move to close debate upon the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to close debate on the pending amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi) there were—ayes 46, noes 71.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 80.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment following the amendment which was adopted a short time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment already adopted the following:

"And provided further, That no part of said appropriation shall be expended after January 1, 1905, for the use of any new cars in the railway postal service that have not been constructed wholly from steel, or steel and wood, and constructed under rules and regulations prescribed by the Postmaster-General."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to know what effect this amendment will have upon the amendment last adopted. If this amendment should be voted down, will it carry out of the bill the other amendment which was offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, or will it affect it in any way? It seems in part to modify the former amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Not in the least. This relates to cars to be hereafter employed—new cars; the other relates to cars now in the service.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, we should like to have that amendment reported again.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment of Mr. TAWNEY was again read.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order.

Mr. COWHERD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. Would it not be better to amend that amendment by striking out the words "steel, or steel and wood?" There may be some material better than either; and I am informed that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General now has before him some plans lately prepared by some of the master builders.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General informed me this week that they now have in course of construction two steel cars. The master builders, however, who recently met in Chicago for the purpose of considering this matter of car construction, especially with reference to the Railway Mail Service, were of the opinion that possibly, on account of the noise incident to steel construction, that kind of car might not be adapted to the service, and that they could build a car of steel and wood that would give it the requisite strength and at the same time afford every facility for the railway postal clerk to perform his duties without the annoyance of the noise incident to a solid steel car.

I notice in his report to Congress he makes substantially the same suggestion. Now, the purpose of this amendment is simply to fortify the Department in what it is now doing, and relates wholly to new cars put into the service after January 1.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I want to inquire of the gentleman from Minnesota if he believes that should his amendment prevail that the cost of the construction of cars of steel, and steel and wood, in line with his amendment, would not necessarily be increased because of the larger cost of construction?

Mr TAWNEY. I do not know whether or not it would be used by the railroad companies as a reason for demanding a higher rate of pay for the use of the cars handling the mail. I do know this, the Department now has under construction, or they have adopted plans and the cars are in process of construction, two steel cars. I take it that this matter of cost——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Who has them under construction?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department has approved the plans and they are being constructed by some car company.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I thought you said the Government was having them constructed?

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, no.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It would no doubt result in certain changes of the regulations relative to the cars if they were to be built only of steel or steel and wood.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that, under my amendment, they are to be built under rules and regulations prescribed by the Department.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. How many of these postal cars does the Government now use?

Mr. TAWNEY. About 1,000.

Mr. LACEY. It would require the Department to entirely replaces the cars now in the service between now and the 1st of January.

Mr. TAWNEY. It does not replace a single car that is in the service to-day; the amendment relates only to new cars hereafter used in the service.

Mr. LACEY. It is only the new cars?

Mr. TAWNEY. It only applies to the new cars.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, from our experience as legislators here, does not the gentleman think that it would only result in the railroad people coming to Congress and demanding an increased rental?

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I do not know whether they would demand increased rental or not, but if they do is that any reason why we should not insist upon the best cars?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Give us your opinion.

Mr. TAWNEY. Well, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi my own opinion is that a car built partially of steel and partially of wood will not cost a great deal more than the same character of cars that are now being built.

Mr. CLARK. I want to ask the gentleman a question with respect to these cars that have been ordered to be constructed. Is there any use to be made of the Pullman patent in that matter?

Mr. TAWNEY. That I can not answer, but I imagine not.

Mr. CLARK. If they advise the steel postal cars, is their construction to be left open to all the car builders of the country?

Mr. TAWNEY. I presume so, just as it is now. I will read what the Second Assistant Postmaster-General said:

In order that a more thorough investigation as to the latest and best construction, approved by master car builders and others, might be made, I directed the General Superintendent Railway Mail Service to secure, through the several division superintendents, the latest information and suggestions obtainable, with a view to still further improvements in the line of construction. The question as to whether all-steel cars would be preferable to cars constructed of wood and steel is being considered. Thus far the consensus of opinion is in favor of the combination wood and steel as against the all-steel construction. I refer to this subject only to show that this office is giving the matter the most careful consideration possible.

This amendment is for the purpose of fortifying the Department and giving the railroad companies to understand what the sentiment of Congress is in respect to the matter of better construction and strength of the car on which the postal clerks are employed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should be glad to have a ruling on the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman desires to discuss the point of order——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Chairman, admits that if this amendment should prevail it would necessitate changes in the regulations of the Department in order to conform to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I now ask to return to lines 4, 5, and 6, in order that the gentleman from New Jersey may offer an amendment which he had not prepared at that time. That was to be done when line 21 was passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now return to the paragraph ending at line 6, page 15, to permit the gentleman from New Jersey to offer an amendment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand the gentleman will wish to withdraw his former amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I withdraw it with the understanding that the point of order would not be raised to the amendment that I am to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New Jersey will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I withdraw the former amendment, and offer the amendment here as an amendment in lieu of that which I have withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 15, line 6, insert:

"Provided, That hereafter no contract shall be entered into by the Post-Office Department for purchase of material or supplies to be manufactured by convict labor."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no objection to that.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mail Service: One general superintendent, at $4,000; 1 assistant general superintendent, at $3,500; 1 chief clerk, office of general superintendent, at $2,000; 1 assistant chief clerk, office of general superintendent, at $1,800; 11 division superintendents, at $3,000 each; 11 assistant division superintendents, at $1,800 each; 5 assistant superintendents, at $1,800 each; 23 assistant superintendents, at $1,600 each; 125 chief clerks, at $1,600 each; 247 clerks, class 6, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 1,216 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 517 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 1,691 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 1,518 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 4,131 clerks, class 3, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 1,983 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $900 each; 789 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; in all, $12,951,210. And the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of eliciting some information from the chairman of the committee in regard to this section now under consideration, I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read in my time, an editorial from the Atlanta News.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to have read in his time——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not ask unanimous consent. I ask it in my right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves to strike out the last word and asks to have a newspaper article read in his time in the debate on that motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

RAILWAY MAIL FACILITIES.

On yesterday a dozen railway postal clerks might have been seen busily engaged assorting a carload of delayed mail under the Whitehall viaduct, which by right should have been on its way throughout Georgia, Alabama, and other Southern States at least twenty-four hours before.

These men were working with energy, but were making a futile fight against time. The people along the lines of railroads where this mail should have been many hours earlier were waiting impatiently, but in vain.

We are informed that many of these clerks had just reached the city after a hard and severe journey, and by reason of this accumulated mail were compelled to work at least five or six hours overtime.

The only excuse for this condition of affairs, it seems, is the totally inadequate number of railway mail clerks employed to carry on the vast volume of business committed to their charge. Not only newspapers, but letters in great numbers were congested at this point, and subscribers were compelled to wait until their papers were a day old before getting the news, while their letters were causelessly delayed for twenty-four hours.

We have no desire to be captious and critical in the matter, but it does seem that when the limited facilities for handling the mails are confessedly the cause of this congestion and delay, which has occurred not only once, but many times, it is plainly the duty of the Railway Mail Service to increase its force of postal clerks and give the people the service they demand and to which they are justly entitled. It is vexatious and embarrassing in the highest degree to be forced thus to wait for hours, and, as in this instance, a full day, longer than necessary to get one's mail. It is not only productive of impatience, but frequently results in actual monetary loss.

This great and growing center of distribution is entitled to an up-to-date service in everything. Surely the Government of the United States, least of all, should not be behindhand, and it is hoped, in the interest of the overworked clerks and the disappointed public, that these facilities will be promptly and adequately increased.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, if I can secure his attention for a moment, if there is any provision in this bill for increase of railway mail clerks?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, yes, about 1,000 increase.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, will that avoid a congestion similar to the one we have just heard read?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, we hope that it will. Of course we can not foresee what congestions in the mail by reason of the increased volume in business that year will be. We have asked for a thousand, undertaking with reasonable accuracy to meet that condition.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. One other question. May that congestion occur for the want of proper distribution of these clerks on different lines of roads, and can the fault be found in the Post-Office Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, that I do not know. I am inclined to think that the administration of the Railway Mail Service is very able.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Then there is a desperate want that ought to be met.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know anything about that particular instance. I do not know the locality of it and I do not know what the conditions are. These things arise occasionally. We have provided in this bill for a temporary service. It is a new item and I think will in a large measure meet the situation. The gentleman will appreciate how difficult it is——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I understand it.

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). To distribute the clerks according to grades. We, therefore, suggest for the first time an appropriation of $50,000 for temporary clerks which may be used, or, in other words, an appropriation which may be drawn, to meet a temporary emergency which sometimes occurs most unexpectedly.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Now, then, do I understand that temporary clerks go out, for instance, from a city like Chicago and meet trains——

Mr. OVERSTREET. In any way to meet emergencies that may arise.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, to strike out the last word, and I would like to ask——

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MANN. You can not withdraw it without consent, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws the amendment——

Mr. MANN. I object. I oppose it. May I ask the gentleman if the last sentence of this paragraph is a new proposition or has it been in the appropriation bill heretofore?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; for this reason, as I will explain. It has been in other bills, and the purpose of it is this: The appropriation for the various numbers of clerks of respective grades which the committee has just heard read is for use during the year. All of them would not be appointed on the 1st day of July. The appropriation would not be sufficient to appoint all of the clerks suggested in this bill on the 1st day of July for service during the entire twelve months.

Mr. MANN. That sentence does not help that out.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That sentence helps it out to this extent, that the clerks designated thereunder shall be made during the fiscal year so as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum. For example——

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman claim that under that sentence the Department could employ more clerks of a particular class than the appropriation itself authorized?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; it does not.

Mr. MANN. Then how does it help it out?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It helps in this way: They may need, for instance, a larger number of clerks of the nine-hundred, ten-hundred, or eleven-hundred dollar grades throughout a greater portion of the year than they will need clerks of twelve hundred dollars, fourteen hundred dollars, or sixteen hundred dollars.

Mr. MANN. Then they can not appoint any more of the twelve-hundred-dollar-grade clerks than are carried in the act.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; but if the gentleman will take his pencil and paper and calculate the exact number of all the clerks of all these grades for all the year, it will make a larger amount than is carried in the item, and the purpose of the closing language of that section is simply to guard against a larger expenditure during the entire year than the total appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman knows that they have no authority under the law to spend any more money than is appropriated.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I fear I fail to make myself clear.

Mr. MANN. No; I understand what the gentleman says.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not if you are in doubt about it, because I am not in doubt about it.

Mr. MANN. Well, it may be a difference in judgment.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it is a difference of understanding of the facts. What I mean is this: That the bill carries authority for the use of so many clerks of so many grades, and they can not use any more clerks of the respective grades than we provide in the bill; but because all of the clerks of all of the grades will not be used for all of the year, they make a less appropriation than would be the case if all of the clerks were used all of the year.

Mr. MANN. But they can not use all of the clerks for all of the year.

Mr. OVERSTREET. No; they can not, and that is what I mean.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Georgia just gave an instance. There is not a single Department of the Government that does not come in with a deficiency item and get a deficiency appropriation. Here is a branch of the service that is growing. The fourth-class postmasters get a deficiency, the rural free delivery has always got a deficiency appropriation since it started, and most all other branches of the service get a deficiency appropriation. Here is a provision that no matter how fast the postal service grows you can not have a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. How many railway postal clerks does the Department recommend?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Department recommended about fifteen hundred, and at the same time asked of the Appropriations Committee of the House for authority to employ during the present fiscal year 300. They asked that 300 be distributed through certain grades, but Congress ultimately granted authority for them to employ an additional 300 during the present fiscal year of the lower grades. They stated they had money enough. Now, if you take the 300 which have been authorized since their recommendation of fifteen hundred from their estimate, it leaves about twelve hundred, and the committee gives them 912.

Mr. TAWNEY. The figures furnished me by those familiar with the service shows that the clerks asked for for the fiscal year 1904–5 were 12,740. Those allowed by the pending bill amount to 12,098; so, according to that, you have given the railway postal service 642 less clerks than the Department has asked for.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I repudiate that information. We get our information from General Shallenberger and Mr. Stone, his efficient chief clerk.

Mr. TAWNEY. The Department makes the same analysis of the pending bill and recommendations I have just stated, that the committee has given to the railway postal service about 640 men less than the Department asked for.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For acting clerks, in place of clerks injured while on duty, and to enable the Postmaster-General to pay the sum of $1,000, which shall be exempt from the payment of debts of the deceased, to the legal representatives of any railway postal clerk or substitute railway postal clerk who shall be killed while on duty or who, being injured while on duty, shall die within one year thereafter as the result of such injury, $110,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "deceased," in line 14, page 17, insert the following: "to the widow and children of the deceased, and in case there is no surviving widow or children, then."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that.

Mr. TAWNEY. The point of order, if one would lie at all, would lie to the whole paragraph.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman wants to take it all out, take it out.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is too late to take it out now. I would say, Mr. Chairman, the amendment proposes to give this benefit of $1,000 directly to the widow and children of the deceased railway postal clerk. As the bill is drawn, that $1,000 goes to the legal representatives of the deceased clerk, exempt from the payment of debts or liabilities he may have at the time of his death.

Every man knows that a postal clerk killed in the service, or if he dies from injuries received in the service within the limit of time fixed by this bill, who leaves a widow and children, are necessarily the very ones that the Congress of the United States intended should be the beneficiaries of the appropriation, and not the legal representatives. It would go in this case to the executor or administrator in the first instance, and would then be distributed to the widow and children, if there are any.

Mr. OVERSTREET. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I made a point of order, and I hope the gentleman will address his remarks to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman made the point of order.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know on what ground the gentleman from Indiana bases his point of order, but I will say that the amendment which I proposed is merely to make more definite and certain the intention of the proposition which is contained in the bill.

It is not new legislation; it does not change existing law; it merely makes definite and certain that the amount which we propose as a benefit to the widow and children of the railway postal clerks shall go to them rather than to the legal representatives of the deceased, and in the event of there being no widow or children, then it goes as the committee here proposes. Now, it is merely an interpretation of what the committee itself proposes and is construing the real intent of the committee, which is vague and indefinite under the language of the committee. In other words the amendment perfects this paragraph of the bill. I do not know upon what ground the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] makes his point of order, but it seems to me that in view of the fact that it is a mere interpretation of the paragraph a mere carrying out or making definite and certain that which the Congress of the United States intends, it is not and can not be subject to a point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am afraid that if the point of order should be sustained, it would necessarily be sustained as to the whole paragraph, and I confess that I do not want to make so strong a point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that there is no danger of that contingency arising, because the paragraph having been passed by unanimous consent, even though it were originally subject to the point of order, is now before the committee for perfection, and the Chair finds a long line of unanimous decisions to that effect. It does not become necessary for the Chairman to pass upon whether the amendment would have been obnoxious to the point of order if it had been made under other circumstances. The paragraph is before the committee for perfection. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY].

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I suggest for the information of the committee that the Clerk again report the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] if he will accept the language "legal heirs?" That covers the mother, wife, and children.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know what the gentleman means by "legal heirs."

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I do not know what the gentleman means when he says "legal representatives."

Mr. OVERSTREET. The term "legal representatives" is different from the term "legal heirs."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to strike out the words "legal representatives" and let the appropriation or benefit go to the widow and children alone, and if there is no widow or children, then the Government would not have anything to pay.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, this method of providing an appropriation of about $1,000 to railway postal clerks who lose their lives while on duty is an absolute gratuity on the part of the Government. It is in the nature of an insurance; it is in the nature of a gift, an extra amount in view of the hazardous condition of the service which they perform. The Government last year and the year before expended a limited sum in this method of expenditure. I am not questioning the wisdom nor the propriety of such an appropriation, but gentlemen must remember that the Government is entitled to some kind of a safeguard as to the manner of its expenditure. Are we, Mr. Chairman, in the expenditure of this sum to permit the governmental officers to pay the thousand dollars to the first individual who asks for payment? The method of payment to the legal representatives is simply for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the Government and guaranteeing to the Government that it has paid the thousand dollars to somebody who is within reasonable touch of the representatives and the heirs of the deceased postal clerk.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. THAYER. Would it not be far easier for one to ascertain who was the widow and children of a deceased man than to find who were his legal representatives?

Mr. OVERSTREET. How are we to determine that? Who is to decide who is the widow and the children—the Postmaster-General? Is he to organize a court of inquiry? We simply provide here, as the law has always provided, that upon presentation of letters of administration showing some officer of a court entitled to receive the money, that then the money will be paid to him, and then the identification of the widow or of the heirs of the deceased will be made. The State courts determine the heirship. They may identify in their own way who is the widow. The gentleman, I think, will agree with me that it is an unfair burden to put upon the Department to have it decide between contending claims of heirs. Different States have different laws regulating the method of identification and of heirship. Now, we seek to pay this money over to the nearest possible representatives of the deceased clerks, providing that it shall not be liable for their individual debts.

Therefore we simply limit it to the legal representatives. If the clerk has made a will under any State law and it has been filed or entered for probate, the money would be paid to the executor named in the will. If there is an administrator, it will be paid to him. The law of the State would control as to its distribution.

Mr. THAYER. If the deceased left only brothers or sisters, would you give the $1,000 to them?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If there were a dependent brother or sister or mother or father, I would say "yes." The very fact that we are making a gratuity here is enough to show that we are going to a considerable length and are taking some chances.

The only instance that has been called to my attention individually in the way of finding fault with this language was in a case where they did not want the money to go to the widow of the deceased clerk because he had been separated from her on account of the moral character of the woman. They did not want her to have the money. But is the Postmaster-General to sit in judgment as between the widow of a clerk who has been separated from him without divorce and the dependent sister or the dependent mother?

Gentlemen will see the many difficulties, and to what extent these difficulties will pile up. When you come to analyze the matter, the only safe or fair way is to pay the money to some legal representative.

Mr. TAWNEY. Suppose you paid the money to some legal representative, then if the deceased clerk leaves a widow (I care not how immoral she may be or whether she is living with him or not) would not that legal representative be obliged, under your own bill, when the estate of the deceased clerk is settled, to pay the money over to her?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The same thing is true under the language of the gentleman's own amendment. There is no difference.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment in the shape offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] would lead to serious trouble. In almost all cases the legal administrator would divide the estate between the widow and the children. But the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota merely says that the money shall be paid to the widow and children. In what proportion? Is the widow to get it all, or are the children to come in for a share? If we are to make provision for the payment of this $1,000, we must make it in proper legal shape.

I think the gentleman from Minnesota will agree with me that under the amendment in the shape in which he has offered it there is no certainty as to how this money shall go or how it will be divided. It is to be paid to the widow and children. In what proportion? In what manner? Who is to decide that question? What shall be done with respect to the minor children? Certainly the bill as offered by the committee, which sends the money to the legal representative, is in far better shape to accomplish even what the gentleman from Minnesota desires.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Indiana, in ascertaining who the widow is, is answered entirely by the practice of the Pension Bureau of the Department of the Interior in the administration of the pension laws. When a pensioner dies the accrued pension is paid to the widow. There is never any difficulty about ascertaining who the widow is. Or, if there is a doubt about that, then in the settlement of the estate there is an adjudication as to who the widow and lawful heirs of the deceased are.

Now, it may be that the postal clerk leaves no estate whatever to be settled; it may be there is nothing except the $1,000 gratuity which the Government pays him. Are you going to deprive the widow and children of so much of this gratuity as may be necessary to administer the estate and pay the expenses of the probate court? The amendment I have offered would authorize the Postmaster-General to pay the amount to the widow and to the children direct.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Who would pay the expense on the part of the Government in ascertaining who the widow and the children were?

Mr. TAWNEY. Who pays the expense on the part of the Government in ascertaining who the widow of a deceased soldier is?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Government pays it. Does the gentleman look upon this item as a civil-pension arrangement?

Mr. TAWNEY. It is practically upon the same line.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Practically on the same line. What else is it but a gratuity?

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment ought to be adopted; otherwise there will be an expense incurred in the administration of the estate. The widow may have two or three or four small children. Is this sum of $1,000 to be distributed among the minor children so that she gets no benefit from it, although she may be obliged to maintain and provide for those children until they are able to provide for themselves? The money in that case is paid over to the guardian of the children, and only the income derived from that money can be used for maintaining the children during the time of their minority.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending item and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman does that, will he permit me to say a word on this subject?

Mr. OVERSTREET. On which side?

Mr. BREAZEALE. In favor of that proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I think we had better go on. [Laughter.]

Mr. BREAZEALE. No one has said anything on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves that all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. GRIGGS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that all debate be closed in three minutes.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. My colleague [Mr. KLINE] desires to speak. I ask him to make the time six minutes instead of three.

Mr. GRIGGS. Make it six.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that in six minutes the debate on this paragraph and the amendments be closed, three minutes to go to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BREAZEALE], two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINE], and I will reserve one minute to myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate be closed in six minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREAZEALE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that under the civil law as it obtains in several of the States, and especially under the law of Louisiana, and as I am told by one of my friends here under the law of Texas also, under the present provisions of this bill this $1,000 would go to the forced heirs of the deceased clerk, and his widow would get nothing. His children, his mother, or his father, and in default of them his collateral relations, would get it all and the widow would get nothing.

Mr. LACEY. Why don't you amend the laws of Texas and Louisiana, then?

Mr. BREAZEALE. I am speaking of the civil law of Louisiana and other States.

Mr. LACEY. I say, why don't you amend the laws of Louisiana?

Mr. BREAZEALE. We can not do that now. Hence I say the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] should be agreed to, because it provides that some of this fund, which, as he says, is an insurance for the life of the postal clerk, shall go to the widow. That is all I have to say, and that is why I am in favor of this amendment.

Mr. KLINE. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the verbiage of the section in this bill between lines 11 and 18, both inclusive, on page 17, without an amendment. I am not opposed to the gratuity intended to be granted to the family of those who may be so unfortunate as to lose their lives in the performance of their duties while in the Railway Mail Service. Construing this section technically and legally, the gratuity can be transmitted no further than to the legal representative of such unfortunate decedent. This section contains no transmission or succession of this gratuitous fund out of the hands or custody of the legal representatives of such decedent. The intention must be inferred. The beneficiaries contemplated by this section may be the widow and children of the decedent, but not sufficient is contained in the section to legally make them beneficiaries of this gratuity.

If the section could be construed for anything, to that extent the legal representatives of the decedent would be required to pay and distribute such gratuity to the legal heirs of such decedent, and should he die without widow or children, the same would, under such interpretation, descend to his collateral heirs, which certainly is not contemplated by this section. The beneficiaries intended to be benefited by this section are the surviving and dependent widow and children of such decedent. Sufficient is not contained therein to make them beneficiaries.

Every lawyer knows what is meant by legal representatives. It means no more than the executor or executors, administrator or administrators of the decedent, or those acting in a representative capacity for the decedent. It is true that in the construction of wills the courts have held that the testator when using the words "legal representatives" intended to use the words "legal heirs," and in many instances it has been held that when the testator bequeathed property to legal representatives he intended to give his estate to legal heirs, and the same was distributed to those standing in the relation of legal heirs.

But we are not distributing an estate under a will containing ambiguous terms, where we are asked to ascertain the beneficiaries of a testator's bounty, when he nominally makes "the legal representatives" his legatee or legatees. Under this section, as before stated, the gratuity passes into the hands of the legal representatives of such decedent. Under objection, the same could not pass out of his hands or custody. As I understand the intention of this section, under a most violent construction, this money is to pass, descend, or is to be paid to the surviving widow or children of a decedent. This could not be done. It would at best have to be paid to the legal heirs of decedent by his legal representatives. When such decedent dies without widow or children, as before stated, it is not intended that collateral heirs should have the benefit of this bounty or gratuity.

The Government does not intend to hunt up the widow or children of a decedent or his legal heirs, and thus this death fund may be properly payable to decedent's legal representatives (who is or are under bond faithfully to appropriate all moneys that may come into his or their hands belonging to the decedent's estate), who can then pay said gratuity unto the parties intended to be the beneficiaries under this section.

In order that the provisions of this section may be clear and that the proper persons intended to be benefited may, without doubt or ambiguity, receive the fund contemplated in case of the death of a railway postal clerk while in the service, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, by adding the following words after the word "dollars," in line 18, on page 17 of this bill:

And such legal representatives shall pay and distribute the money thus received unto the surviving widow and children of such decedent in accordance with the intestate laws of the Commonwealth in which such decedent resided at the time of his death.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the pending amendment, which he will please send to the desk to be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment the following:
"And such legal representatives shall pay the sum received unto the surviving widow and children, in accordance with the interstate laws of the State in which such decedent may reside."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how many lawyers there are in this body, but I will submit that if we refer this question to the lawyers who are Members of this body, there would be as many different propositions brought in here as there are lawyers. Now, the distribution of this fund has been working very well under the present law. There is no difficulty at all now, and there is no complaint that has been called to the attention of Congress. It is working in a fair and feasible manner. If, therefore, you undertake now to change the phraseology, you will not satisfy anybody except the person offering the amendment. This is the language which has been in the law since it was first authorized, except the provision which we make that it shall be exempt from the payment of debts.

I now ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLINE].

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. KLINE demanded a division.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment may be reported again. It has never been heard.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For the purpose of putting a question to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has ceased under general order of the committee. The only question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was put; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 82.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars, $750,000: Provided, That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the rate now paid to companies performing said service.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert in line 16, page 18, after the syllable "ceed," the following: "by more than 33⅓ per cent."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WANGER. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will reserve it.

Mr. WANGER. Let me explain to the committee that this amendment is recommended by the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have never heard of it. No such recommendation has ever come to Congress or to the committee.

Mr. WANGER. I understood him to say that it had.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not unless it came to-day.

Mr. WANGER. I am speaking of a conversation possibly a week since. I understand that in his presentation of the needs of his bureaus for this service the Second Assistant Postmaster-General stated that the practicability of getting the companies generally which operate electric cars to carry the mail has been hampered and limited by reason of the inadequate compensation which the Department was permitted to grant. When this matter first came before the Department, and the proposition was made to carry the mails by electric street-railway cars, a certain rate of compensation, as I understand it, was agreed upon between the Department and the street-railway companies. Then, in some way or other a limitation was arbitrarily put upon the appropriation for the then current year, cutting it down one-fourth.

Thereupon some of the companies were willing, notwithstanding the reduction in compensation, to carry the mail. Many of them have grown weary. Many of them are willing to continue temporarily to carry the mail, because it has been suggested to them that some reasonable rate of compensation would be given them. Many of them have declined to carry the mail; and along many of the star routes there are electric railway cars going at high rates of speed which could accelerate the mail service to many suburban communities, but those communities are denied the benefit of the service simply because the companies decline to bother with the mails at the inadequate compensation which is fixed by reason of the limitation upon this particular appropriation.

Now, it seems to me, especially if I am right in supposing that the Department has stated this situation to the committee and has recommended that this limitation be taken off, that if the compensation is increased by 33⅓ per cent, which is in accordance with that suggestion, and the reason for naming 33⅓ per cent is that it will be just the same (if Members will consider that the existing compensation is reduced one-fourth of the compensation originally agreed upon), that we will thereby be materially aiding the service. The simple restoring of the rate of compensation to what was originally believed to be proper would now enable the Post-Office Department to secure the very valuable assistance of these electric railway cars in expediting the delivery of the mails where it is now denied, and in many instances where it will in the near future be still further denied if this greater but reasonable compensation is not permitted to be made.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is clearly subject to the point of order. The item which is carried in this bill in lines 14, 15, and 16 on page 18 is in just the same words exactly as when the bill passed last year, the year before, and the year before that. So that the proviso that the rate of compensation per mile shall not exceed the rate now paid—that is, at the time that the bill became law—would be existing law. That rate is based upon the rate fixed a number of years ago.

Mr. WANGER. Only by way of limitation upon a particular appropriation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That may be.

Mr. WANGER. Upon each particular appropriation.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But, nevertheless, the law to-day in the bill passed for the fiscal year 1904 contains the provision,

That the rate of compensation to be paid per mile shall not exceed the rate now paid to companies performing said service.

That is the law now. If, therefore, in this bill, which seeks to make appropriations for the fiscal year 1905, a limitation is offered which will increase that rate, it is necessarily in violation of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that the proviso in lines 14 to 16, inclusive, applies only to this bill, and if this same language was in the last bill it applied only to that bill. If the word "hereafter" had been used after the word "that," so as to read "Provided, That hereafter the rate of compensation," etc., the Chair would be inclined to think that that language being included in the last appropriation bill would make it statute law, but the Chair thinks that the present proviso applies only to this bill, and that the point of order might have been made against the proviso, but the paragraph having been passed unanimously without the point of order having been made any amendment which is germane in perfecting the paragraph the Chair thinks would be in order, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, just a word on the merits of the amendment. I ask that the amendment be read again for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not quite understand that. May I have that amendment? The purpose of this amendment is to authorize a rate of payment for transportation by electric and cable cars of 33⅓ per cent more than the present rate. Mr. Chairman, the present rate, I think, is reasonable, and I doubt the propriety of authorizing 33⅓ per cent increase for this purpose.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is the present rate?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is about 5 cents a mile, on the average, I think, for the electric and cable car service. This is a service within the large cities and suburban service for the transportation of mail by the cable and electric car service. The Government pays these city railway companies a certain per cent for the privilege of carrying their mail back and forth over certain routes within the city limits and for suburban purposes. That service is in connection with their regular passenger service. It is either performed by the regular equipped city street-railway postal cars or what is known as the platform service, where the mail bags are thrown upon the platforms of the cars and the conductor or motorman takes the bags off at their destination and puts other mail bags on the platform and carries them to the post-office or railway stations. This regulation has been fixed after a very careful investigation on the part of the Department, and this amendment would only give these city street-railway companies 33⅓ per cent increase of pay over what they are now receiving.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. I simply want to ask a question. The gentleman who offers the amendment stated it was his information that the Department was not able now to secure the service that it desired for the cities by reason of not being able, under the law, to offer enough compensation. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any information to that effect officially from the Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not. The gentleman stated he understood that information was given. I merely state that information has not been given to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and in the hearings before the committee, when Mr. Shallenberger was interrogated relative to this item, there was no suggestion made by him with reference to an increase of the rates.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the lines 17 to 23, inclusive, on page 18, being the section just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18 strike out the paragraph from lines 17 to 23, inclusive.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I will ask the chairman of the committee if any arrangement has been made about debate on this question? I understand some gentlemen desire to debate it. I do not, if others do not.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Why, there has been no special arrangement made about debate. I suppose the usual practice under the five-minute rule will be followed.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Then let us have a vote without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRUMPACKER) there were—ayes 65, noes 80.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. OVERSTREET and Mr. MOON of Tennessee as tellers.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WYNN. I will ask, if it is not too late, to have the amendment again read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 80, noes 88.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "service," line 23, page 18, the words "and if the Postmaster-General shall expend said amount, or any part thereof, he shall state his reasons for the necessity of such expenditure in his next annual report."

Mr. OVERSTREET. I make the point of order against that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina, it seems to the Chair, changes existing law, in that it alters the discretion now vested in the Postmaster-General, and also the provision of existing law in reference to his annual report. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Chair wherein it affects the discretion of the Postmaster-General: it only asks him to give the reasons for the expenditure authorized in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the paragraph beginning with line 24, page 18, and ending with line 5, page 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana) there were—ayes 65, noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For transportation of foreign mails, $2,650,000, including additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamer sailing from San Francisco to Tahiti; all mails made up in the United States destined for the island of Tahiti, $45,000: Provided, That the sum paid the said Oceanic Steamship Company shall not exceed $1 per mile, as authorized by act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce:" And provided further, That hereafter the Postmaster-General shall be authorized to expend such sums as may be necessary, not exceeding $55,000, to cover one-half of the cost of transportation, compensation, and expense of clerks to be employed in assorting and pouching mails in transit on steamships between the United States and other postal administrations in the International Postal Union, and not exceeding $40,000 for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in New York Bay to the several steamship and railway piers, and between the steamship piers in New York City and Jersey City and the post-office and railroad stations, and for transferring the foreign mail from incoming steamships in San Francisco Bay to the piers.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on that section. I will reserve it if the gentleman desires.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think it will be well to dispose of the point of order first.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman with reference to the subsidy of $45,000 for the Tahiti ship line.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can explain that, if that is the purpose of the gentleman in making the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I would like to know when the appropriation was first made?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The item relative to the Tahiti appropriation first appeared in the appropriation bill for post-office purposes for the year beginning July 1, 1902. Each succeeding bill has contained the same language that the first bill contained, and there is no different language here.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Did the appropriation originate in the House of Representatives?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know; I presume it did.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Is there any reference in any hearings before any committee which the gentleman is advised of?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have not gone into the history of legislation to determine where it originated. Let me say briefly in answer to the gentleman's inquiry that this appropriation is authorized under what is known as the "ocean mail subsidy act of 1891." That law provided for an ocean mail subsidy, the payment for service of from $1 to $4 a mile, according to the size and speed of the boat. The Tahiti trade, as well as in other trades which was not reached by boat which made the speed and carried the tonnage defined in the act of 1891, necessarily had to be brought within the provisions of that act by special appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. What is the population of Tahiti?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will permit, I will explain the item in answer to his inquiry. Tahiti is the largest of the group of islands in the South Pacific Ocean known as the Society Islands. It is about thirty-six hundred miles from San Francisco and the same distance from Australia. It has about 500 square miles of territory and between ten and fifteen thousand population, and is under French government. Prior to 1902, when this item first appeared in the post-office appropriation bill, there was no direct mail connection between the United States and that group of islands. Australia, under the English Government, about that time was seeking the trade of Tahiti and offered a bonus of about $40,000 for mail facilities between Australia and the capital of the island of Tahiti—Papecte.

A line of boats operating from Vancouver, flying the English flag, was also operating between Vancouver and Tahiti, and there was an effort on the part of the English Government to obtain trade relations with the island of Tahiti, so that mail facilities with the island of Tahiti were sought for not only by Australia but by British Columbia as well. Prior to 1902, and under the act of 1891, the Government was paying a subsidy of $80,000 for an American line of boats operating between San Francisco and Australia by the way of Honolulu and the Caledonian Islands. About the year 1900 or 1901 that steamship company put into service a line of boats which complied as to tonnage and speed with the provisions of the ocean mail subsidy act, and the subsidy of $80,000 was discontinued.

Mr. Chairman, the Tahitians have taken advantage of this law of the United States to give them direct mail facilities by greatly increasing the trade between that little island and the United States. During the past fiscal year, ending June 30, 1903, about $800,000 worth of business was transacted between Tahiti and the United States, about equally divided between the island and the United States. We shipped into that little island during that fiscal year $75,000 worth of breadstuffs, $100,000 worth of lumber, $25,000 in value of products of steel and other manufactures——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to his colleague?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman is mistaken in his statement, as shown by the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance, which gives the commerce of this island at $369,000.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of State which shows that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, the trade between that country and the United States——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then this is not a postal subsidy, but a commercial subsidy, is it not?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The law of 1891 was an ocean mail subsidy for the purpose of promoting trade and commerce.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and if I can be recognized I will offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read. It was carefully prepared and handed to me by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SNOOK].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out in lines 6 and 7, page 19, the words "two million six hundred and fifty thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two million six hundred and five thousand dollars;" and also strike out the following words in lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11: "including additional compensation to the Oceanic Steamship Company for transporting the mails by its steamers sailing from San Francisco to Tahiti; all mails made up in the United States destined for the island of Tahiti, $45,000."

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, my colleague has the floor, and I will ask the privilege of the floor in order that I may at this time move that the committee rise, and we can take this matter up to-morrow.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 13521, the post-office appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MILLER, for three days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. RIDER, for ten days, on account of sickness.

UNANIMOUS CONSENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has on his desk a memorandum of three or four cases to submit to the House for unanimous consent. Unless the House indicates otherwise, the Chair will recognize gentlemen. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] is recognized.

LANDS OF FORT WALLA WALLA (WASH.) MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12685) for the reappraisement and sale of the undisposed lands within the Fort Walla Walla Military Reservation, in the State of Washington.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 14256. An act making an appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4837. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act authorizing the construction of a railway, street-railway, motor, wagon, and pedestrian bridge over the Missouri River near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., approved February 13, 1891," and acts amendatory thereof, so as to extend the time for completion of said bridge until January 1, 1905—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

An act (S. 2148) to provide for the enlargement and improvement of the public building at Tyler, Tex.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Senate concurrent resolution No. 57:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound, in the form such as is customary in the case of eulogies, 12,000 copies of the proceedings and accompanying documents, with suitable process plates to be bound therewith, upon the unveiling of the statue of Gen. William T. Sherman, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies, of which 200 copies shall be bound in full morocco, to be distributed under the direction of the chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, in such manner as in his judgment may be desirable—

to the Committee on Printing.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR APPROVAL.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 7279. An act granting a pension to Lydia M. Hill;

H. R. 3903. An act granting an increase of pension to George C. Sherman;

H. R. 892. An act granting an increase of pension to Abram H. Hunt;

H. R. 3776. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred I. Judy;

H. R. 958. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred H. Rogers;

H. R. 468. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Christy;

H. R. 5176. An act granting an increase of pension to Alonzo Dutch;

H. R. 6022. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Travis;

H. R. 199. An act for the relief of John H. McLaughlin;

H. R. 10058. An act for the relief of Kirby Thomas;

H. R. 6494. An act to approve and ratify act No. 73 of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona.

H. R. 9319. An act providing for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at Fargo, N. Dak.; and

H. R. 14256. An act making an appropriation for fuel for the south wing of the Capitol building.

ELECTRIC LIGHTS ON ISLAND OF OAHU, HAWAII.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7266) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize and provide for the manufacture, distribution, and supply of electric light and power on the island of Oahu, Territory of Hawaii.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MADDOX. Reserving the right to object, I should like to hear something about the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Perhaps the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] would prefer to hear a brief statement.

Mr. MADDOX. The bill has to be read anyway.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I thought a statement might facilitate the matter.

The bill was read.

Mr. MADDOX. I rise to object to that bill. It is impossible for anybody to find out anything about the bill at this late hour.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made by the gentleman from Georgia.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 4640) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," approved February 28, 1903.

Mr. COWHERD. A bill identical with this has been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. I ask that this bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," be, and the same is hereby, so supplemented and amended as to extend the time for the commencement of the construction of the bridge and approaches by said act authorized until the 28th day of August, 1904, and to extend the time for the completion of said bridge to February 28, 1907.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COWHERD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the corresponding House bill (H. R. 13164) was ordered to lie on the table.

ALLEGHENY COLLEGE, MEADVILLE, PA.

Mr. BATES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill (H. R. 10208) for the relief of Allegheny College, at Meadville, Pa., was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BAKER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, March 24, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on the request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

THOMAS J. HOBBS.

Mr. LODGE. The Senate yesterday passed the bill (H. R. 3256) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass. My attention has been called by the Treasury Department to the fact that there is a verbal error in the bill that ought to be corrected. I move that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be necessary to get the bill back from the House.

Mr. LODGE. The bill is here. It has not been sent to the House.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "him" and inserting "Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department;" so that it will read:

Issued by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I send to the desk the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, which may be printed.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 24, 1904.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to say that it appears from the RECORD that the Senate yesterday passed a bill for the issuance of a duplicate check to Crane & Co. See page 3547.

The bill as passed contains an error which will make it ineffective. It authorizes the Secretary to cause to be issued a duplicate of an original check issued by "him." The check was issued by "Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department." If Mr. Hobbs's name and title were inserted in the bill in lieu of the word "him" the error would be corrected.

Respectfully, yours,

C. H. KEEP, Assistant Secretary.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PORTO RICAN COFFEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a joint resolution adopted by the legislative assembly of Porto Rico requesting Congress to consider favorably a petition presented by the Ponce section of the Chamber of Commerce for the protection of Porto Rican coffee; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4640) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, and to establish it as a post-road," approved February 28, 1903.

The message also announced that the House had passed with amendments the joint resolution (S. R. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1903, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3401) for the relief of Florence Lambert, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3168) making an appropriation for the improvement and beautification of the grounds within the Presidio Military Reservation, at San Francisco, Cal., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FULTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1422) for the relief of the Omaha National Bank, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. QUARLES, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2950) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James B. Boyd, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

COINAGE LAWS.

Mr. PLATT of New York, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there shall be printed in pamphlet form 10,000 copies of the coinage laws of the United States, 5,000 for the use of the Director of the Mint, 3,500 for the House of Representatives, and 1,500 for the Senate.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 55) providing for the publication of the reports of the Board of Managers and Inspectors of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that there shall be printed of the report of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, in addition to the usual number, for the use of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, 500 copies of the report proper, bound in cloth; 200 copies of the report of the inspection of the State Homes, bound in paper, and 200 copies of the record of members, bound in cloth; and that hereafter the additional number of copies herein named of future annual reports of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, bound in the same manner as above described, shall be printed for the use of the National Homes.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUREAU OF AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) providing that the bulletins of the Bureau of American Ethnology be printed in octavo, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that hereafter the bulletins issued by the Bureau of American Ethnology shall be in octavo size instead of royal octavo.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 113) for the printing of 5,000 copies, with accompanying maps and illustrations, of the report of the governor of New Mexico to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, and the printing of 1,000 copies of the latest map of said Territory, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that there shall be printed 5,000 copies of the report of the governor of the Territory of New Mexico, with accompanying maps and illustrations, to the Secretary of the Interior for the year ending June 30, 1903, 500 thereof for the use of the Delegate in Congress and 4,500 thereof for the use of the governor, and also that there shall be printed 1,000 copies of the latest map of the Territory of New Mexico for the use of the Delegate in Congress from the Territory.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRINITY RIVER (TEXAS) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. CLAY. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5092) to amend an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 13, 1902, making appropriation for improving Trinity River, Texas, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is a short bill and rather urgent. I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend the provision, as provided in an act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, approved June 13, 1902, making appropriation for improving Trinity River, Texas, so as to authorize the Secretary of War to expend so much as may be necessary of the funds appropriated and pledged in the construction of one lock and dam on the river between the mouth and section 1, and, in his discretion, to modify the plans of locks and dams described in House Document No. 409, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, in such manner as in his judgment will be most suitable and beneficial to the interests of navigation.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4622) to amend section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon.

The bill is a short one. It proposes simply to extend the right of a soldier or marine so as to give him credit for the time he served in the Army or Navy in taking up an additional quantity of land to complete his homestead entry. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by adding at the end of the section the following:

And the provisions of this section shall apply to such additional quantity of land as said person may enter, sufficient to make, with the previous entry, 160 acres, so that the deduction on account of time spent in the service shall apply to all the land which such person is entitled to under the homestead law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHOCTAWHATCHEE BAY (FLORIDA) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by him on the 21st instant, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar at the entrance of Alaqua Bayou, on Choctawhatchee Bay, in the State of Florida, with a view to securing a depth of 6 feet of water across said bar.

POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 65) providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C., to report it favorably without amendment; and I submit a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is a matter of some urgency, and I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. It will take but a moment.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the highway bridge across the Potomac River authorized by section 12 of the act of Congress approved February 12, 1901, entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad Company, in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," as amended by the District of Columbia appropriation act approved July 1, 1902, be, and is hereby, extended to February 12, 1906.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BACON. If in order, before consenting to the consideration of the joint resolution, I should like to have the Senator from New Hampshire give us some idea of the present status and as to the particular locality of the bridge. I do not recognize it by name.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is the new highway bridge, in close proximity to the new railroad bridge that is being built to replace the old Long Bridge.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 4, after the word "bridge," I move to insert "and approaches."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution providing for an extension of time for completing the highway bridge and approaches across the Potomac River at Washington, D. C."

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11449) to authorize the counties of Sherburne and Wright, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000,000 for the acquisition of a site for a post-office building in the city of New York, such site to be subject to the right of the Pennsylvania, New York and Long Island Railroad Company to use for platforms and trackage under a plane 20 feet below the curb line of the adjoining streets, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the post-office appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF THE LATE SENATOR POOLE.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to John Poole, Mrs. Lela Poole Sessford, and to Mrs. Mary Poole Danforth, the heirs of the late John Poole, formerly a Senator from the State of North Carolina, the sum of $6,543.38, due him as a Senator of the United States in the Fortieth Congress from the 4th of March, 1867, to the 24th of June, 1868, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

INDEX TO GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to bind in two volumes, instead of one, the comprehensive index to Government publications, 1881 to 1893, the preparation of which is authorized by joint resolution of March 3, 1897.

MAP OF THE UNITED STATES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1903, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose.

The amendments were, on page 2, line 2, to strike out "three" and to insert "four."

On page 2, line 11, to strike out "three" and insert "four."

And to amend the title so as to read: "A joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1904, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose."

Mr. PLATT of New York. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

REPEAL OF DESERT-LAND ACT, ETC.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I desire to call up the bill which received its second reading yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill on which the Senator from Montana desires to address the Senate.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5168) to repeal the desert-land act and the commutation provision of the homestead act.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, in the remarks I shall submit, advocating the repeal of certain land laws, I shall include the timber and stone act, for although a bill repealing this measure has already passed the Senate it has not yet become a law.

I regret that I have not the ability to properly place before the Senate the dangers that menace our public-land interests, and to point out in language sufficiently strong and clear the urgent need at this time of a radical departure from our present methods of dealing with this subject. Believing that nothing of greater value to the nation can engage the attention of our lawmakers than the preservation of the public domain for the people who will make homes upon it, I contend that our remaining nonmineral lands and timber lands, the soil of which is suitable for agriculture, should be held exclusively for actual settlers, and that the timber belonging to the nation should be properly cared for and should be sold, as required, at its true value. This reform can only be accomplished by an absolute repeal of the desert-land act and the commutation clause of the homestead act and the timber and stone act and by a refusal on the part of the Government to further issue land scrip for any purpose whatever. We would then have upon the statute book a homestead act that would entitle any head of a family or citizen of the United States who had arrived at the age of 21 years to become the owner of a tract of land not exceeding 160 acres by establishing and maintaining residence thereon and improving and cultivating it for the period of five years.

It is well before proceeding further with this subject to refer briefly to the different acts of Congress under which individuals and companies have acquired the public lands of the United States during the last sixty years, not including acts creating land scrip, which in various forms and for different considerations has been issued from time to time, and also not including the acts granting lands for railroads, State institutions, and other purposes. The preemption act, passed September 4, 1841, enabled a person qualified under its provisions to obtain title to 160 acres of unoffered land after six months and before thirty-three months, by becoming an actual settler upon it, and by the payment of $1.25 an acre for it. But following the passage of this act there were men in Congress of national reputation who contended that the object of the Government in the disposal of the agricultural public lands should not be to derive revenue but to furnish free homes for its people. The most notable among the advocates of this policy was Mr. Benton, who said:

> I do not know how old I was, or rather how young I was, when I first took up the notion that sales of lands by the Government to its own citizens and to the highest bidder was false policy, and that gratuitous grants to actual settlers was the true policy and their labor the true way of extracting national wealth from the soil.

As a result of this contention, which rapidly gained ground not only in Congress but throughout the land, the homestead bill became a law May 20, 1862, and was based upon the well-known declaration that "the public lands belong to the people and should not be sold to individuals nor be granted to corporations, but should be held as a sacred trust for the benefit of the people and should be granted in limited quantities, free of cost, to landless settlers." Under this act the settler was required to live upon the land and cultivate it for five years, at the end of which time he could make final proof and obtain title.

Thomas Donaldson, in his History of the Public Domain, said:

> The homestead act stands as the concentrated wisdom of legislation for the settlement of the public lands. It protects the Government, it fills the State with homes, it builds up communities, and lessens the chances of social and civil disorder by giving ownership of the soil, in small tracts, to the occupants thereof. It was copied from no other nation's system. It was originally and distinctively American, and remains a monument to its originators.

But, unfortunately, as time has fully shown, a provision taken from the preemption act and known as the "commutation clause" was incorporated into the homestead act, which enabled the entryman to acquire title to his claim at the expiration of six months by the payment of $1.25 an acre, and although the time when the claimant could commute his homestead was, by act of March 3, 1891, extended to fourteen months, this clause has ever been a fruitful and widespread source of fraud and perjury, in that it has enabled the speculator and the land monopolist to acquire large bodies of public land by employing men to file upon them, under the homestead act, who, at the expiration of six months or fourteen months, could commute to cash and deed the lands over to their principals. But notwithstanding a citizen of the United States could, for three years prior to 1876, obtain title to or file upon 480 acres of public land under the preemption, homestead, and timber-culture acts, a demand for more land and increased facilities for obtaining it was insisted upon.

This resulted in the passage of the desert-land act, March 3, 1877, which was soon made applicable to all arid and semiarid States and Territories and entitled the locator to acquire under it 640 acres of land. On June 3, 1878, fifteen months later, the timber and stone act was passed by Congress. It will thus be seen that we had upon the statute books from June 3, 1878, to March 3, 1891—a period of thirteen years—the preemption act, the homestead act, the timber-culture act, the desert-land act, and the timber and stone act. But so constant and so urgent had been the demands made upon Congress by Presidents and Secretaries of the Interior during the ten years prior to 1890 for the repeal of all of these land acts except the homestead act that on March 3, 1891, a measure was adopted repealing the preemption and timber-culture acts and reducing the area that could be taken by a single individual under the desert-land act from 640 acres to 320 acres.

President Cleveland, in his first annual message, December 8, 1885, stated:

Laws which were intended for the common benefit have been perverted so that large quantities of land are resting in single ownership. It is not for the common benefit of the United States that a large area of the public lands should be acquired directly or through fraud by a single individual.

While the repealing act of March 3, 1891, was the result of earnest declarations like the foregoing and was a move in the right direction, it was but a partial compliance with the pressing recommendations of the able men who stood at the head of the land department, and of men throughout the nation who believed the public land should be held for actual settlers, for it still left upon the statute books the desert-land act, the timber and stone act, and the commutation clause of the homestead act, measures clearly in the interest of large landowners and speculators. It will not be wondered at, therefore, that the maintenance of these acts was adhered to with a tenacity never surpassed in the history of public-lands legislation.

These land laws have been in full force for twelve years since the desert-land act was amended, and have been measures that have made possible the fraudulent acquisition of public land on an immense scale, and by means of them much of the habitable trans-Mississippi domain has become the property of landlords instead of homemakers.

Mr. President, the discussions which preceded the enactment of the homestead law clearly show that the patriotic men who framed it intended that the public domain should be held for those who would go upon it and establish homes, and for no one else. The act was admirably safeguarded against speculative use through the provision requiring five years' residence and cultivation of the soil before title could be granted; but the commutation clause incorporated in the act has too often converted this beneficent measure into an effective instrument for fraudulently obtaining land in large bodies which otherwise would have been converted into homes of 160-acre tracts.

Much was claimed in the interest of reform, under the land repealing act of March 3, 1891, when in fact but little was accomplished toward lessening the opportunities for fraudulently obtaining public land. While this act repealed the preemption act and the timber-culture act it left upon the statute book ample measures for single individuals and companies to acquire public lands in large bodies. The repeal of the preemption act and the cutting down of the desert-land claim from 640 to 320 acres only compelled the man seeking to acquire large tracts of country to employ more people to use their land rights in his interest. The opportunity to plunder the public domain was still at his command and had been carefully safeguarded by retaining upon the statute book the desert-land act and the commutation clause of the homestead act and the timber and stone act.

COMMUTATION CLAUSE.

Mr. President, in considering the commutation clause of the homestead act I will refer briefly to some of the opinions of eminent men connected with the National Government, and particularly with the Public Land Department, for it is well known that for twenty-five years past many of our Presidents and Secretaries of the Interior, as well as Commissioners of the General Land Office, have recommended to Congress the repeal of this clause of the homestead act. Notwithstanding its repeal has been urgently demanded, I am satisfied it was retained upon the statute book when the land laws were revised in 1891 because of the determined efforts made by speculators to continue it in force. It was an adjunct too valuable to the large landowner to be lost sight of, and it retained its place in the homestead law under the pretext that the settler needed it to enable him to mortgage his farm at the end of fourteen months, which could only be done by obtaining complete title to the land. Thus it has ever been that all bad land laws have found a place on the statute book under the plea that they were in the interest of the farmer or poor settler.

The Secretary of the Interior, in his annual report for 1883, stated as follows:

Public lands suitable for agriculture should be disposed of only to the actual settlers under the homestead law. A strict compliance with the law should be required in all cases. No greater calamity can befall a country than to have the land owned by a few, and thus compel the masses of the people to become the tenants of such landowners.

In his report for 1884–85, after still greater familiarity with the operation of the land laws, he said:

The public lands ought to be reserved for actual settlers, and should be conveyed only when the settler has shown his good faith by a residence on the land for the period provided for by the homestead law. No commutation of homesteads should be allowed.

In the same report the Secretary also quoted, in connection with this, from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office as follows:

It is my opinion that the time has fully arrived when the wastefulness in the disposal of public lands should cease, and that the portion still remaining should be economized for the use of actual settlers only. An act reserving the public lands, except mineral lands and timber reserves, for entry exclusively under the homestead laws, and amending the homestead laws so as to prevent the present easy evasion of wise restrictions and essential requirements, would be a measure meeting this end and answering a pronounced public demand.

In 1884 the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in calling attention to the immense number of fraudulent entries made upon the public lands, stated:

The repeal of the preemption and timber-culture laws, which I have heretofore recommended, is one of the first essential steps in this direction. It is not possible by any administrative action to close the doors open to abuses under these laws.

This may equally be said in reference to the timber-land and desert-land laws and the commutation features of the homestead laws, and also of the provisions allowing the filing of soldiers' homestead declarations by attorney, which latter provision is used to defraud both the soldier and the Government.

If all laws for the disposal of public lands, except the homestead law, were repealed, and the latter amended as heretofore suggested, the great bulk of misappropriations would disappear from future entries.

In another part of his report he states:

If it is the legislative purpose to adhere to the policy of preserving the remaining public lands for actual settlers and to prevent the acquisition of great bodies of land in fraud of law by single individuals and corporations, American or foreign, sufficient means should be placed at the disposal of the Land Department to prevent the vast and widespread violations of law which have been brought to the knowledge of this Department and the notice of Congress.

Secretary Lamar in 1888, in his annual report, stated:

What is needed, in my opinion, is an entire reformation of existing laws, retaining an absolute homestead law and obsoleting all other forms of disposal of agricultural lands. Actual residence, improvement, and cultivation for the homestead period of five years should be the exclusive condition of acquiring title to such lands.

And he further stated:

That the principle of commuted homesteads is the same as the preemption, and its uses are the same. The difference between the two is that commuted homesteads are the more universally fraudulent. * * * If public lands are to be kept for actual inhabitancy, the commutation feature of the homestead law should be abolished.

In looking over the reports of the Public Lands Commissioner I find many instances that fully illustrate the value of the commuted homestead in obtaining large bodies of land in the arid States. One instance is given in Colorado, where fifty-seven homestead entries were made upon 8,000 acres of coal land, and in another section of that State mention is made of thirty entries covering 4,800 acres of grazing land along water courses, which entries were made to control a large adjacent territory; also another case in New Mexico, where forty-five entries were made upon 7,000 acres of land extending 15 or 20 miles along a river; another in New Mexico, embracing 6,500 acres; also one of 14,500 acres made for the benefit of a cattle company. These lands lie along the Rio Grande River and control the water right for 15 or 20 miles.

In San Miguel County, N. Mex., eighty-four entries of 160 acres each were made in the interest of a cattle company. These lands were along canyons, and were so located as to control the water and all available lands in a large district.

Mr. President, I need not state that acquiring land on an extensive scale by speculators and cattle companies could never take place under the homestead act without the commutation clause. Under our homestead law, which enables the settler to obtain title to 160 acres of land at the expiration of fourteen months, speculators have acquired vast tracts of coal lands beyond the Mississippi River at $1.25 an acre, when the minimum price of such land is $10 an acre.

The commutation clause of the homestead act has enabled lumbermen to gain possession of large bodies of the best pine-timber lands of the nation for the paltry sum of $1.25 an acre, and although the work of homestead commuting on pine-timber tracts has been largely transferred to the far West States, it is being carried on at the present time with unabated energy. This commutation attachment of the homestead act is one of the most effective means in many of the arid States for obtaining lands adjacent to rivers, ponds, and springs, the acquisition of which enables the pastoral stock grower to control vast stretches of adjacent country. The fraudulent use of the homestead act made possible by the commutation clause is far greater as we leave the humid and subhumid parts of the public domain and enter the semiarid section, owing to the tendency of a few men to own and control large tracts of Government land for pastoral stock growing and not for agriculture.

If the repeal of the commutation clause of the homestead act was demanded twenty years ago in the interest of honest settlement, how much greater is the demand for its repeal to-day, when the population of our country has passed the 80,000,000 mark and when the area of our available public domain is decreasing at the rate of 65,000 acres every day?

THE DESERT-LAND ACT.

Let us now refer to the desert-land act, a measure whose provisions are entirely subversive of the principles embodied in the homestead act. While this law was placed on our statute book ostensibly for the purpose of reclaiming arid lands, it was in fact enacted for the benefit of capitalists and men and companies seeking to obtain from the nation large bodies of land without the obligation of home making. That this act is chiefly in the interest of wealthy landowners and corporations becomes evident from the determination of its capitalist beneficiaries to prevent its repeal.

The desert-land act had scarcely been in force one year before its repeal was recommended by officials in the Interior Department, whose duty it was to note the operations of our land laws. As is well known, this act requires no settlement on the land and practically no cultivation. It provides an easy means for the employment of men and women, each to take up 320 acres of nonmineral public land and assign it to the capitalist, thus enabling him to acquire large bodies of agricultural land from the nation. It creates an opportunity for a man of wealth or a company to appropriate the water of streams and to conduct it upon large tracts of land, thus shutting out farmers who, having filed their homestead rights upon irrigable land claims, can, as associations, construct the necessary irrigation works. While its provisions appear ample to prevent fraud, they are capable of the broadest construction and have rarely accomplished the object intended by the Government.

Water that is used to-day for reclamation, or to enable the witness by a stretch of conscience or the imagination to swear that lands have been reclaimed, has been too often after final proof diverted to another claim and in due time to still another claim. This is done in numerous instances by men and companies who desire to control a large tract of land for pastoral purposes and not for agriculture. But immense bodies of land have been acquired under this act upon which there has never been a semblance of reclamation, and investigations recently made by the Interior Department confirm this allegation. The desert-land act should be repealed because it is in the interest of the landlord and does not contribute to the establishment of independent homes. Although this can be illustrated by thousands of instances throughout the arid States, it is only necessary at this time to refer to a few extracts from the official reports on public lands to show how the provisions of the desert-land act have been employed in the interest of land monopoly.

On page 34, volume 12, of Land Decisions, reference is made to J. B. Haggin, for whose benefit 151 desert-land entries were made in April, 1877, in the Visalia, Cal., land office, covering 34,958 acres, and I am informed that desert-land entries for the benefit of Mr. Haggin and his associates were made in this district until the lands so taken exceeded 300,000 acres. It is a significant fact that the 151 entries referred to were made in April, 1877, although the act was passed only one month prior to that time. This well-matured plan for taking up this immense body of land goes far to verify the oft-repeated statement that the desert-land act was the creation of California capitalists to aid them in gaining possession of extensive tracts of public lands.

According to the official reports of 1888—

Seventy-eight desert-land entries, embracing 48,000 acres, were entered in the Cheyenne district, Wyoming, and transferred immediately after proof to a land and ditch company, which had been previously organized for the purpose of acquiring title to said lands. Most of the entrymen lived in the Eastern States and had never seen the land, nor did they make any expenditure thereon. The purchase money and all other expenses were paid by the company, who evidently used the names of the entrymen in making the entries.

It is well to note at this point that under the law of March 3, 1877, desert-land entries, before final proof, were not assignable.

Another lot of fifty-five desert-land entries were reported at that time. These entries covered 35,000 acres and the final proofs were made alleging the reclamation of the tracts, which was found not to be true. These entrymen all lived in Eastern States and were never in Wyoming, and had no interest in the lands and took no part in making the entries, except to sign their names to the entry papers.

In Montana a large number of desert-land entries were discovered to have been made on good agricultural lands. Thirty-three entries of the kind, embracing 21,000 acres, were in one locality. In another place ten entries, upon 6,000 acres, were found to have been made in the interest of a land and cattle company.

Mr President, the desert-land act should be repealed because it has been the instrument of fraud and perjury on a large scale and will continue to be such so long as our present system of dealing with the public domain shall continue.

Poorly paid and much tempted land inspectors will not prevent it, and officers of local land districts can not prevent it so long as their official capacity is measured by party loyalty. As Presidents, Secretaries of the Interior, and Commissioners of the General Land Office during the last twenty-five years have met with feeble success in the curtailment of fraud committed under the desert-land act, what right have we to assume that public officials in the future will prove abler and more efficient? I know it is claimed that if the desert-land act should be so amended as to prevent the assignment of claims after entry and before final proof violations of this act would practically come to an end; but such will not be the case, for before the assignment clause was adopted, March 3, 1891, frauds on an extensive scale, as I have just shown, were committed under this act as originally adopted. The assignment clause somewhat simplified the process of obtaining land under the desert-land act and was a measure purely in aid of the capitalist, who could thus exercise less care in the selection of persons to file upon lands in his interest. The repeal of the assignment clause of this act, as recommended by the recently appointed Public Lands Commission is only a modification of one of its many bad features.

No amendments can cure the defects concealed beneath the provisions of the desert-land act except those that require residence upon the land five years and actual cultivation of the soil. I desire to quote briefly the views of some of our public men whose attention by virtue of their official positions has been called to the operations of the desert-land law.

In his message to Congress December 3, 1888, President Cleveland said:

Nor should our vast tracts of so-called desert lands be yielded up to the monopoly of corporations or grasping individuals, as appears to be much the tendency under the existing statute. These lands require but the supply of water to become fertile and productive. I can not but think it perilous to suffer either these lands or the source of their irrigation to fall into the hands of monopolies, which by such means may exercise lordship over the areas dependent on their treatment for productiveness.

President Roosevelt, in his second annual message to Congress, December 2, 1902, made this clear statement:

So far as they are available for agriculture, and to whatever extent they may be reclaimed under the national irrigation law, the remaining public lands should be held rigidly for the home builder, the settler who lives on his land, and for no one else. In their actual use the desert-land law, the timber and stone law, and the commutation clause of the homestead law have been so perverted from the intention with which they were enacted as to permit the acquisition of large areas of the public domain for other than actual settlers and the consequent prevention of settlement.

I quote from the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for 1883, nineteen years prior to the foregoing statement of President Roosevelt:

It has been represented that desert-land entries have largely been made for speculative purposes, in violation of the restrictions of the act, and in many instances upon land naturally productive, and the lands are held fraudulently under the entry without attempt or intention of reclamation, but are occupied or leased for grazing and other purposes. Investigations so far made of alleged illegal entry under the desert-land act tend to confirm these allegations.

The theory of the desert-land law is that the encouragement of irrigation required the disposal of land in larger quantities than 160 acres. This theory has not been sustained, as general systems of irrigation are adopted for the distribution of water, which are equally available to the owners of small tracts as of large ones. The practical operation of the desert-land law has heretofore been to enable land to be purchased without settlement and in quantities in excess of the limit established by the settlement laws, thus resulting in the encouragement of monopoly rather than the encouragement of reclamation.

In his report for 1884 the Commissioner of the General Land Office stated:

Lands and valleys along water courses are appropriated ostensibly for reclamation, but actually for the purpose of controlling ranges dependent upon the water supply and to prevent settlements interfering with such control. If the public lands are to be preserved for actual settlement, and unlawful appropriations of great areas are to be prevented, the desert-land act should be repealed.

Mr. Lamar, while Secretary of the Interior, said of the desert-land act:

The repeal of this act, in my judgment, is demanded by the most obvious considerations of a public policy looking to the protection of the public domain and the interest of honest settlement.

He also used the following words in his report for 1886:

I renew the recommendation in my previous report for the repeal of the desert-land law.

And in the same report he refers to the abuse of the desert-land act and other acts as follows:

But certain individuals want great areas; they want the signal control of great herds of cattle; and hence it is that this concentrated combination, with its dominion over the waters of that country and its audacious seizure of its public lands, turns back the tide of immigration, absorbs all existing settlements, and repels from its borders the advancing progress of development.

Secretary Vilas referred to the desert-land act as follows:

Avail has been made of this law more, perhaps, by persons who seek to procure large holdings for cattle ranges than for any very efficient purpose of reclamation.

The Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, in his annual report for 1901 makes the following declaration:

While all the land laws were doubtless intended to benefit settlers, they have in practice in the arid region too often benefited speculators. Hundreds of filings made under the desert, preemption, homestead, and timber-culture acts have been made by people who never were farmers and never expected to become farmers. It is to such filings that scores of meritorious irrigation enterprises owe their failure. The repeal of the preemption and timber-culture acts and cutting down desert-land entries from 640 to 320 acres have improved the situation, but it can be still further improved by an entire repeal of the desert-land act and by requiring settlers on homesteads to cultivate as well as to live on their farms. The desert-land act was an economic mistake.

While in some of the arid States lands in vast bodies were taken up for individuals and companies under the desert-land act, immediately following its adoption in 1877, upon which no evidence of reclamation whatever can be found to-day, the same fraudulent acquiring of land on a still larger scale has been continued since the act was amended in 1891, and in my opinion it will continue so long as this act so indispensable to land monopoly remains on the statute book.

When we object to the desert-land act because it enables wealthy individuals and companies to acquire large bodies of public land, and without settlement, we are met with the assertion that after a while these lands will be subdivided and sold to farmers. It is true that some of these large holdings will be subdivided, but they will be sold at prices beyond the reach of immigrant farmers generally, the advantage to be derived from free homes under the homestead act having been appropriated by speculators under the desert-land act. In fact, this act is in all its phases at war with the principles embodied in the homestead act. At this point I wish to again assert that the work of reclaiming the lands of the arid States can best be done by the National Government and by cooperative associations of farmers availing themselves of the homestead act.

THE TIMBER AND STONE ACT.

Mr. President, I will now pass to the timber and stone act, another measure chiefly employed in the interest of monopoly, and one which, if maintained a few years longer, will result in the transfer of the best of all our timber land not included in reservations from national ownership to the possession of a few men. Although this act has been in force twenty-five years, during which time the attention of Congress has been repeatedly called in the most urgent manner to the unlawful disposition of the public timber lands made possible by it, the act still stands on the statute book a monument to the wastefulness and the injustice of our national land policy. Since the enactment of the timber and stone law there has never been a time when the officials of the land department have not looked upon it as a measure in the interest of speculation and monopoly. As long ago as 1883 the Commissioner of the General Land Office stated in a communication to Hon. Thomas Ryan, then a Member of Congress from Kansas:

That the provisions of the law were widely evaded; that it is understood that large operators cause their employees and other persons to make the necessary affidavit, enter the lands, and then convey to their employers or principals.

In this manner large tracts of timber lands in California, Nevada, Oregon, and Washington Territories are controlled by single persons and firms contrary to the intendment of the statute.

The Commissioner also stated, in his report for 1883, that—

The restrictions and limitations of the act are flagrantly violated. Information is in my possession that much of the most valuable timber land remaining in the possession of the Government on the Pacific coast is being taken up by home and foreign companies and capitalists through the medium of entries made by persons hired for that purpose.

Coming down to the present time the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, in his official reports has placed before Congress some of the gigantic frauds that are constantly being committed under this act, and has urged its repeal in the strongest language. I quote from his report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903:

During the fiscal year ended June 30, 1902, there were 4,022 entries under the timber and stone act, embracing 545,253.98 acres, while during the last fiscal year there were 12,249 such entries, embracing 1,765,222.43 acres, an increase over the previous year of 8,227 entries and 1,219,968.45 acres. The increase in the activity of this class of entries affords food for serious reflection.

* * * * * * *

Notwithstanding the extreme care exercised by this Department to protect the public timbered lands from unlawful acquisition under this act, the entries thereunder have, nevertheless, as stated, increased vastly in number.

The act, when legitimately observed and followed, affords such facilities for the acquisition by individuals and corporations of vast bodies of the public timbered lands that it is one of the greatest menaces on the statute books to-day against the avowed policy of the Government to preserve the remaining public lands for homes for actual settlers.

* * * * * * *

The rapidity with which the unreserved and unappropriated public timbered lands are being denuded of their timber under the acts above mentioned, and the opportunity offered under the timber and stone act for the fraudulent acquisition of title to public timbered lands at the uniform price of $2.50 per acre when they are in many instances worth forty times that, has been heretofore set forth in the pages of my annual reports and those of my predecessors.

He also states:

The reports of the special agents of this Department in the field show that at some of the local land offices carloads of entrymen arrive at a time, every one of whom makes entry under the timber and stone act. The cost of 160 acres of land under that act, and the accompanying commissions, is $415. As many as five members of a family, who, it can be readily shown, never had $2,075 in their lives, walk up cheerfully and pay the price of the land and the commissions. Under such circumstances there is only one conclusion to be drawn, and that is that where a whole carload of such people make entry under that act the unanimity of sentiment and the cash to exploit it must have originated in some source other than themselves.

Mr. President, if the fraudulent appropriation of public timber and its disposal at nominal prices during the last half century in the States of the upper Mississippi Valley, bordering Lakes Superior and Michigan, could be correctly published, the statement would astonish the people of the United States. Had the nation's interest in the pine timber of that vast region been faithfully protected, sufficient money would have been saved to construct two Panama tide-water canals, besides reclaiming all the irrigable arid lands beyond the Mississippi River. But forty or fifty years ago the value of pine timber was not appreciated as it is to-day. Now, however, when in the light of present conditions we can fully realize the worth of such lands and the importance of holding them at their value, it becomes nothing less than a crime to maintain upon the statute book an act under which these valuable timber lands can be acquired in unlimited areas at $2.50 per acre. The nation's ownership in the pine lands of the upper Mississippi Valley has practically come to an end, and this will soon be said of the timber lands of the far West if we continue in force the timber and stone act and the forest lieu land act.

Mr. President, the rapidly increasing rate from year to year at which the best of the public lands are passing out of Government control is shown by the following table:

Public lands disposed of in six years ending June 30, 1903.

	Acres.
1898	8,453,896.92
1899	9,182,413.16
1900	13,453,887.96
1901	15,502,796.30
1902	19,488,535.30
1903	22,824,299.00
Total	88,905,828.64

Should the annual increase in public-land absorption continue as appears in the foregoing table, the year ending June 30, 1904, will show a further segregation from the public domain of 26,000,000 acres. It should be borne constantly in mind that this present absorption of 2,000,000 acres of Government land every thirty days embraces the very best farm lands and the most valuable timber lands at the disposal of the nation.

Assuming that the public domain at this time, not including the lands of Alaska, comprises 450,000,000 acres, we must deduct fully 250,000,000 acres for mountain ranges and lands so broken or so deprived of fertile soil as to be unfit for agriculture, thus leaving approximately 200,000,000 acres of irrigable and nonirrigable farming land and pastoral land, some of which is woodland and timber land. At the present rate of public-land absorption it will be seen plainly that in a very short time all of our agricultural Government lands will be taken under the various land acts now in force, and I firmly believe that by means of our existing public-land policy, and the efforts of men and companies occupying large tracts of land for stock raising to prevent the settlement of the Rocky Mountain States, not one acre in forty of all the land of those States suitable for agriculture will be taken by home makers.

I should state at this point that conditions in the far West States which enable men to maintain large herds and flocks throughout the year upon native grasses at a profit have greatly retarded settlement there. The man or company whose herd of 10,000 cattle grazes upon 400,000 or 500,000 acres of the public domain naturally views with alarm the settlement of farmers upon the land which he is occupying, and at the same time the farmer or small settler hesitates to file his homestead claim upon land so occupied. While the immigrant going to Minnesota or the Dakotas to make a home upon the public land has been cordially welcomed by the citizens of those States, it is very different in the States farther west, where pastoral stock raising is the leading industry, for there influences have been constantly at work to prevent the incoming of settlers. It is mainly because of this that citizens of the United States by the thousands have crossed the border during the last two years and established homes in Canada upon land in no respect superior to that of our Rocky Mountain States.

The rapid increase in our population, together with the enactment of the national irrigation measure, have the last two or three years greatly stimulated the taking up of our choicest public lands in large tracts in the arid and semiarid States, and consequently agricultural lands, whether irrigable or nonirrigable, have in that time rapidly advanced in value. These facts should lead the Government to prompt action in repealing the desert-land act and the commutation clause of the homestead act, as well as the forest reserve lieu land act, if it would save the remaining public land for inhabitancy. Our present system of land laws is all that could be desired if it is the part of wisdom to give the ownership and control of the land in eight or ten States of the Union to a few men and companies, who will use them for cattle ranges, rather than hold them for millions of homeless American citizens. Under pastoral stock raising there will never be large numbers of cattle in the Rocky Mountain States, but if farmers can occupy that country, which will surely be the case under a wise and just national policy, its live-stock interests after a while will assume immense proportions. In proof of this I have only to state that according to the last census Iowa, a farming State, having 55,000 square miles, had 500,000 more cattle than Montana, Wyoming, Idaho, Washington, Utah, Nevada, Arizona, and New Mexico, States and Territories covering an area of 821,000 square miles.

Mr. President, the continuance of our present system of land laws will result in the ownership by landlords of the principal part of the arid States, whereas if held subject to a homestead act that can not be commuted the public domain still remaining will become the property of millions of freeholders. Nor should we forget that this opportunity afforded by the Government to capitalists for obtaining title to vast bodies of public land is a very great menace to the strength and endurance of the nation, for we are reminded by constantly increasing disturbances between capitalists and the industrial classes in our cities and manufacturing centers that our hold upon liberty and good government will largely depend in the future upon the occupation by a farming population of the great States west of the Mississippi River.

Alexander Hamilton said:

> The freeholder is the natural supporter of good government, and it should be the policy of republics to multiply their freeholders, as it is the policy of monarchies to multiply tenants. We are a republic and we wish to continue so; then multiply the class of freeholders; pass the public lands easily and cheaply into the hands of the people; sell for a reasonable price to those who are able to pay, and give without price to those who are not. I say give without price to those who are not able to pay; and that which is so given, I consider sold for the best of the price; for a price above gold and silver; a price which can not be carried away by delinquent officers, nor lost in failing banks, nor stolen by thieves, nor squandered by an improvident and extravagant administration. It brings a price above rubies—a race of virtuous and independent farmers, the true supporters of their country, and the stock from which its best defenders must be drawn.

The preservation of the public lands for settlers has held an important place in almost every Presidential platform for fifty years past, and yet when each quadrennial struggle for party supremacy has ended Congress, instead of adopting measures to preserve the public domain for settlers and to protect the nation's interests in its timber lands, has been willing to enact laws by which they have been turned over in large bodies to capitalists.

The time is not far distant when millions of our people seeking homes upon the land will hold the Government responsible for its present extavagant and unwise land policy. The people have been many times deceived by high-sounding resolutions adopted in national conventions. Will they be deceived much longer?

But it is asserted that not more than 50,000,000 acres of land in the arid and semiarid States can be reclaimed and that the possibilities of agriculture there will be confined within these limits. Against the correctness of this assertion I stoutly protest. The man or association does not exist at this time that can fix the boundaries of the irrigable and nonirrigable farm lands embraced in the public domain between the one hundredth degree of longitude and the Pacific Ocean. This determination must be gradually reached by the home-teader and by the National Government as it pushes forward from one irrigating enterprise to another. There will be constant surprises in the future as to the extent of agricultural land in that region, as there have been in the past few years. Large areas of nonirrigable highland or table-land country adjacent to the Rocky Mountains, where the soil is less impregnated with alkali and the rainfall is greater than upon the lower lands, have already been found to be excellent agricultural lands and capable of producing by ordinary cultivation, one year with another, much more wheat to the acre than is harvested in the great wheat-producing State of Minnesota.

J. W Powell, in an article written for the National Magazine, stated as follows:

> Nearly all of the wheat of Oregon, Washington, and California is produced by dry farming, and even in as dry a country as Utah the area of winter wheat not irrigated is rapidly increasing.

Mr. President, twenty-five or thirty years hence, when the population of the United States will be 135,000,000 or even 150,000,000, every acre of this highland country will be required to meet the demand of our own people for this important cereal. Better cultivation of the soil and new methods of preserving the moisture that falls upon it during the rainy season will year by year narrow the limits of our nonagricultural land. It is a well-known fact, also, that water brought by the irrigating ditch upon a given tract of land in quantity only sufficient to reclaim it will after a few years so saturate the ground that it can be employed upon adjacent lands. Water that will primarily reclaim only 1,000 acres will, after a while, often be found sufficient to reclaim still another 1,000 acres.

This has been well illustrated in California and some other States where irrigation has been practiced for a long time. As but little attention in the arid States has yet been given to water that lies beneath the surface of the ground, who can tell to what extent it may be employed in the future as a factor in the land-reclamation problem? In several localities in my own State subterranean water has recently been discovered so near to the surface of the ground as to render large tracts of land valuable for the growth of alfalfa and for general farming. In solving the problem of agriculture in the far West we have a right to predicate much upon the excellent work that is being done by the Department of Agriculture in the introduction into the arid States of grains and forage plants from the dry steppes of eastern Europe and from Asia. Not only is the Department of Agriculture conferring great benefits in this respect upon the arid West, but its experiment work there in soil culture for certain crops will render productive vast areas of nonirrigable and, at present, unproductive land.

In view of the foregoing facts I assert that in considering the question of preserving the public lands for home seekers no line of demarcation should at present be drawn between the so-called "irrigable" and "nonirrigable" lands, but all should be held open for settlers under the homestead act without the commutation clause, and the National Government should shield them and protect them in their rights everywhere in the arid States, as they have ever been protected when establishing their homes upon the public lands east of the one hundredth degree of longitude.

Mr. President, as millions of acres of public lands are now inclosed by barbed-wire fences, and as the men who control these lands are opposed to their subdivision into 160-acre farms, is it surprising that thousands of our own people, as I have stated, are crossing the northern boundary line and are establishing their homes under the British flag, where they are received with the same hospitality that has always been accorded to settlers in the upper Mississippi Valley?

Illegal fencing of public land should either be stopped or the Government should frankly announce its inability to enforce the law. While the public domain should everywhere be open to settlers, owners of cattle and sheep should be accorded the privilege that has ever been granted to them of pasturing their herds and flocks upon the public domain as long as it shall be unoccupied and unreserved. Believing the policy of holding all the agricultural and pastoral lands open for settlement is wise and beneficent, I would not support a leasing bill, however carefully it might be prepared, nor would I support any measure that would give the exclusive use of a given tract of public land to any man or company, for no leasing measure can ever be enacted that will render equal justice to the wealthy, influential cattle owner and the immigrant who settles upon the prairie with few resources other than his energy and his strong arms.

As it would be impossible with our present knowledge of the arid domain to properly classify the agricultural lands and the grazing lands, we should find, if a leasing bill were now adopted, that vast areas of farming lands would be turned over for an indefinite time to individuals and companies, who would use them in large tracts for grazing purposes. The opinion of a land-leasing measure was well expressed in one of the planks in the platform of one of the national political parties in 1900, as follows:

> We declare our opposition to the leasing of the public lands of the United States whereby corporations and syndicates will be able to secure control thereof, and thus monopolize the public domain, the heritage of the people.

The adoption of a measure under which the so-called "grazing lands" may be leased would contribute immensely to the advantage of the landlord, while it would everywhere throughout the arid States lessen the opportunities of homemaking.

We are told that these land acts, if repealed, will very greatly impair the national irrigation fund, and this is strongly urged as a reason why they should be maintained, notwithstanding their unwise and unjust provisions. As well might we assert that highway robbery should be tolerated whenever the property taken is appropriated to charitable purposes. But I am one of those who do not believe that the great national work of reclaiming our arid lands, now begun, will cease or be materially delayed if we take the steps required to save the public lands for home makers. There is now in the Treasury approximately $20,000,000 to the credit of the fund. Should the desert-land act and the commutation clause of the homestead act and the timber and stone act be repealed at this session of Congress, the lands already filed upon would probably increase the fund to $30,000,000, and thereafter the sales of mineral lands, including coal land and the sales of timber would go to the credit of the irrigation fund. As every dollar invested in irrigation work by the Interior Department will be returned again to the Treasury as fast as the reclaimed lands are sold, I can not see that we shall fail to obtain the results sought for in the national irrigation act.

The great reclamation work, now so well begun by our Government, will never cease until every acre of arid public land that can be irrigated is converted into thickly settled farming communities. Not only will it be unnecessary to maintain these odious land laws on our statute books, in order to keep alive this most important national irrigation work, but to continue them when we now know they are employed in the interest of speculation and land monopoly would be unworthy of this great and progressive nation. As a matter of fact, the repeal of these land acts should have preceded the passage of the national irrigation act, as the disposition to acquire Government land for speculative purposes has been greatly stimulated since the irrigation bill became a law.

Mr. President, our country's growth has been so remarkable, owing to virgin soil and the agricultural possibilties of the Middle West, that we seem to have taken no time to consider what the condition of the nation will be when the middle of the present century shall be reached. The population of the United States in 1850 was 23,000,000. In 1950 it should be 200,000,000, unless the nation shall be torn to pieces by internal dissensions or by wars with foreign nations. Is it not therefore the part of wisdom and patriotism to resolve now that what is remaining of the public domain shall be held sacredly for our people who will make homes upon it? Jefferson, Hamilton, Jackson, Benton, Lincoln, and Cleveland—in fact, all the great men of our country for the past one hundred years—have impressed upon the nation the dangers of landlordism and the supreme importance of preserving the public domain for home makers, and yet we maintain land acts in the interest of the landlord and not in the interest of the freeholder. Is there no danger to the future of this country when we make laws that enable capitalists and foreigners to acquire vast bodies of public land upon which a system of tenantry is being established as absolute as any that can be found in Europe?

Under land acts created in the interest of capital and not in the interest of the settler vast bodies of land are owned by individuals even in such States as Illinois, Minnesota, and the Dakotas, and these lands are cultivated by tenants, the most of whom will never become freeholders. But by far the largest land holdings by single individuals and companies are found in the arid States. These have been acquired to a great extent directly from the States or the nation, and the work of monopolizing the public lands is still going on at an appalling rate. Single individuals and single foreign companies are said each to own from 1,000,000 acres to 4,500,000 acres of land in some of the arid States, while it is a common occurrence for one man or a company to acquire directly from our Government, under our present land laws, tracts of land from 10,000 acres to 200,000 acres, and upon many of these great ranches it is an unwritten law that the plow shall not be used, the owners of these pastoral estates preferring to hold them in the same condition as the Indian and the buffalo left them.

We should not forget that we are living in an era of unparalleled concentration of capital in many of the industrial pursuits of life, and that the inclination and the ability to own and control vast bodies of public land were never as great as at the present time. The figures that I have presented showing the rapid decrease in the public domain from year to year during the past six years clearly proves my assertion. The repeal of the desert-land act and the commutation clause of the homestead act and the timber and stone act, and a fixed policy on the part of the Government never to issue another acre of land scrip or to endow any institution with land, will practically preserve the remaining public land for actual settlers, for it must be apparent to all that a homestead act that requires five years' residence and cultivation of the soil will seldom be used by the speculator.

I am aware that the most determined efforts are being employed to prevent the repeal of these land acts, but I submit that such efforts are inspired chiefly by men who are employing millions of dollars in acquiring directly from the nation large holdings of timber lands, agricultural lands, and pastoral lands.

If the nation will hold the public lands (except nonagricultural timber lands and mineral lands) subject only to our present homestead act, deprived of its commutation provision, it will confer an inestimable benefit upon its people. In preserving this rich agricultural domain for home makers we shall not simply contribute to the development of the far West States, but we shall add immeasurably to the strength and stability of the whole nation

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, with appropriation bills pressing as they are, I do not feel that I should occupy any considerable time now in discussing the matter presented by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON], further than to say that there are two sides, and, in fact, many sides, to this case. There is much that I should like to say and very much I would like to hear said on the subject. I will take time to say now, however, that I dissent from very much that has been proposed in argument by the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON] and that I will ask to take the matter up at some other time.

I want to inquire now what is the parliamentary condition of the subject. Is it in the form of a resolution or a bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a bill, and it is on its second reading. The bill will be read the second time to-day and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask, if it is agreeable to the mover, and if it is proper in a parliamentary way, that the bill lie on the table, so that it can be taken up at a future time and some further remarks submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the bill can be read the second time and still lie on the table.

Mr. WARREN. Then I ask that that may be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that this bill, having been read a second time, may lie on the table for the present.

Mr. GIBSON. I am willing that it should lie on the table, but I think there should be a limit fixed. It would not be agreeable to me to have the bill remain on the table very long. I should like to have it referred.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that I do not ask this for the purpose of delay, but in order that the bill may be discussed at another time before it finally goes to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator limit the time during which he asks that it lie on the table?

Mr. WARREN. I hardly think I would be warranted in doing that, because I presume there are others who wish to speak. I simply prefer the request, and if it is not agreeable to the Senator from Montana——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Montana to object to the bill lying on the table indefinitely.

Mr. WARREN. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read the second time and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEWART. I hope we may now proceed with the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I hope no hasty action will be taken about referring the bill to the committee. The matter has been before the committee for over a year. The committee is thoroughly familiar with it. The Senate is not familiar with it. I think if the bill were allowed to lie on the table for a few days, even a week or ten days, no harm would come to the cause which my friend the Senator from Montana espouses, because there are other Senators here who desire to speak on this subject. Of course we can talk on any bill that may be before the Senate, but it would be in better order if we were to speak to a measure of this kind, taking it from the table for that purpose.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I will agree that the bill shall lie on the table until next Tuesday, so that it may be referred to the Committee on Public Lands on that day, as the Committee hold a session on Wednesday.

I wish to say that although this bill, in connection with the timber and stone act, has been before the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate during this session, we have been unable to have it reported to this body. We should like to have it acted on at this session. Hence I would not want to consent to any extended delay in referring it.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Montana consider, when he limits it to next Tuesday, the condition in which we are in the Senate with respect to appropriation bills? We have the Indian appropriation bill now under consideration, which is liable to consume the day, and then we have the District appropriation bill, which will immediately follow. I do not seek to delay the pending bill, but of course we would not have the opportunity to discuss this matter, unless we did it on appropriation bills, which is hardly the proper way, if we should confine it quite as closely as next Tuesday. Would the Senator be willing to leave it until the following Monday—say a week from Monday?

Mr. DUBOIS. Mr. President, I desire to say, speaking for Idaho, that I dissent almost entirely from the conclusions of the Senator from Montana [Mr. GIBSON]. The condition which he describes certainly does not exist in my State, and I think it will be found that few Senators representing arid States will agree with his conclusions. Of course I would not like to talk to nothing, and inasmuch as the subject has been brought up, I see no objection to allowing the bill to lie on the table so that Senators representing arid States can be heard if they desire.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that this bill may lie on the table until one week from next Tuesday. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I want to say, since Senators from other arid States have expressed themselves very briefly about this matter, that I am in pretty warm sympathy with the Senator from Montana in the views he has expressed about the operation of the law which he seeks to have repealed. It is not a new view with me, for when I was in the House in 1877, when the arid-land law was passed, I insisted that Colorado should be omitted from the operation of the law, because I was convinced that it would be utilized in the main for the purpose of taking the public lands away from the real settler and turning them over in vast tracts to the speculator and to what we out West love to term "the cattle baron." Very shortly after I left Congress the law was extended so as to take in Colorado and, I believe, all the other arid States and Territories.

I have never seen any reason to change my views about the very, very bad policy of giving such unlimited opportunities to those who seek to take up the public lands to do so under these laws, and, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to have the question debated. I think it ought to be debated. I believe the Senate ought at the earliest possible time to be put in possession of both sides of this question, because most undeniably it is a matter that it will be called upon to pass on before very long, when the future policy of Congress in dealing with the remaining public lands will be determined.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the act of 1877, the desert-land act, provided for the appropriation of 640 acres. That was objected to by representatives from Colorado both in the Senate and in the House. Ten years later the act was changed, and the amount was cut down to 320 acres, and then the law was applied to some other States as well as to those to which it had theretofore been applied.

I have had some opportunity to observe the effects of the desert-land act. I do not believe it can be charged with having been the means of aggregating any considerable amount of land in the hands of speculators. The strictness with which the Department has enforced the law as to putting water upon the land has prevented speculators from getting it. The land became entirely too valuable by the time they put on the water for cattlemen to own it.

I believe myself it would be a step backward to repeal that provision of the law. It may be that its repeal would add greatly to the value of some lands already entered, and I venture to say that from a certain section of the country there has been a large pressure brought in favor of this movement, in order to enhance the value of land now held and not settled on, title secured under railroad grants and some of it held in large tracts by purchase from railroads. That class of people are exceedingly anxious just now and very sensitive about the public land being stolen, and that influence has been, in my judgment, much more potent than anything else in pressing this legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that this bill may lie on the table until a week from next Monday.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest that it be Tuesday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until a week from next Tuesday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will lie on the table until a week from next Tuesday.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Let us finish it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN].

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. STEWART. What for?

Mr. GAMBLE. To ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a very short bill.

Mr. STEWART. There are about a dozen such requests.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. STEWART. I think I had better decline in all cases.

Mr. QUARLES. I hope the Senator will not do that. I have a measure which it is of extreme importance should be passed. It is a very short bill, for which I will ask consideration after the Senator from South Dakota gets through. If I could have an opportunity to explain it to the Senator from Nevada, I know he would yield.

Mr. STEWART. I will yield to these two Senators if there is not a word said.

Mr. GAMBLE. All right.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well.

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to have my amendment disposed of, as I have an engagement. It will take but a moment.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator from Mississippi objects, I will not yield.

Mr. GAMBLE. This will not take more than a moment. It is a brief bill, and one of great importance.

Mr. McLAURIN. Very well.

SOUTH DAKOTA INDEMNITY LANDS.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 56) to authorize the State of South Dakota to select school and indemnity lands in the ceded portion of the Great Sioux Reservation, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERMANENT CENSUS OFFICE.

Mr. QUARLES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3292) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Census with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That there shall be a collection of the statistics of the births and deaths in registration areas for the year 1902, and annually thereafter, the date for which shall be obtained only from and restricted to such registration records of such States and municipalities as in the discretion of the Director possess records affording satisfactory data in necessary detail, the compensation for the transcription of which shall not exceed 4 cents for each birth or death reported; or a minimum compensation of $25 may be allowed, in the discretion of the Director, in States or cities registering less than 500 deaths or 500 births during the preceding year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 2, insert:

Any full-blood Mississippi Choctaw heretofore identified or entitled to identification under any application heretofore filed who has removed or shall remove to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within six months from the passage of this act shall be entitled to all the rights of a full-blood Mississippi Choctaw.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. That strikes me as a very peculiar provision. I may be mistaken about it, but it looks as if it made them citizens without any adjudication of the court, simply by operation of law. I understand a great many of them filed applications which when considered and adjudicated upon were rejected.

Mr. McLAURIN. I do not think so, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. It provides, as I understand it, if one has filed an application, whether there is the slightest foundation for it or not, and if he removes he is entitled to the same rights as if the application had been adjudicated in his favor.

Mr. McLAURIN. If he is a full-blood Mississippi Choctaw, he would have just the right of any other Mississippi full-blood Choctaw when he removes within six months from the passage of the act.

The purpose of the amendment is to permit a lot of full-blood Indians in Mississippi—there are not many of them—who were prevented from going to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country within the time limited by law for the reason that, being tenants, not landholders themselves—because there are very few of them who are landholders, but a great many of them farming on the shares—they were unable to leave their farms and their crops at the time required for them to leave. This gives them an extension of six months from the passage of this act, if the amendment becomes a law.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. Do I understand that it is the purpose of the amendment to permit these Indians, who have lived in Mississippi during all these years, now to remove to the Indian Territory and participate in the benefits that are to be derived from the various treaty arrangements with the Choctaw Indians who have been in that Territory since 1832, or whatever time it was?

Mr. McLAURIN. The purpose of it is to give them whatever benefit will pertain to a full-blood Choctaw Indian. They have let the time lapse for going to the Choctaw-Chickasaw country, and this will merely extend it for six months after the passage of the act.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the time for removal lapsed many years ago, did it not? When did the time lapse?

Mr. MCLAURIN. I am not advised as to when the time did lapse.

Mr. ALLISON. I should think that it lapsed at least forty years ago. I do not know, but I should think the Choctaw Indians now in the Indian Territory would certainly object to this participation. The Senators upon the Committee on Indian Affairs will know better than I can know respecting it. I hope some member of the committee will inform us.

Mr. STEWART. The Choctaws in the Indian Territory do object to it.

Mr. MCLAURIN. There is no doubt that the Choctaw Indians already in the Choctaw Nation object to anything that will make the division of their proceeds longer. It is natural that they should object to it. These Indians, illiterate and ignorant—many of them are not able to speak a word of English—know nothing about the necessity of removing to the Choctaw country, in the Indian Territory, and they ought not to be cut out simply because some others of their tribe should object to their participating in whatever belongs to their tribe.

I have not talked to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs about it, but I am told by a Representative from Mississippi, Judge BYRD, in whose district nearly all the Indians in the State of Mississippi live, that the amendment which I have offered was agreed to by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I think practically dictated by him. It was given to me by Judge BYRD to be introduced, and I have introduced it as coming from the Indian Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MITCHELL. On page 70, line 23, after the word "pupils," I move to insert "including Alaska Indians." It relates to the Indian school at Chemawa, Oreg., and the proposed amendment provides that that school may receive Indians from Alaska as well as from other places.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 70, line 23, after the word "pupils," insert the words "including Alaska Indians;" so that if amended it will read:

For support and education of 600 pupils, including Alaska Indians, at the Indian school, Salem, Oreg., etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend further by inserting after the words "Salem, Oreg.," on the twenty-third line of page 70, the words:

For transportation of pupils to and from said school.

This does not increase the appropriation at all.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What is the object of the amendment?

Mr. MITCHELL. The object is to enable the superintendent of this school to pay out of the general appropriation which has been made—it does not increase the appropriation—the transportation of pupils to and from school.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. From where?

Mr. MITCHELL. From any place.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. In the United States or Alaska?

Mr. MITCHELL. Any place, just the same as the provision is inserted in reference to the Carlisle school.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Exactly; but is this to be another Carlisle school? That has not been the understanding of the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know whether it is to be a Carlisle school or not. I know it to be a very excellent and progressive school.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Heretofore it has been held by the Department that under existing law this school was not entitled to receive Indians from Alaska, and yet the Carlisle school every year is receiving Indians from Alaska and pays as much as $50 a head to transport them from Seattle to Carlisle.

Now, there is every reason in the world, it seems to me, why the Chemawa school, which is so much nearer to Alaska, should be permitted to take the Indian pupils from Alaska. Of course their transportation has to be paid to and from the schools.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. This proposes an entire change. I do not say it is not a good change, but it is one which was never presented to the committee, I understand.

Mr. STEWART. It was not before the committee.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Nor has there been any recommendation for it at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is, as I think the Senator knows, a general fund out of which transportation is allowed.

Mr. STEWART. Under certain regulations.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under certain regulations.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. But that does not apply to this school and schools of similar character. That is for the Carlisle school.

Mr. STEWART. It is for the Carlisle school.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the difference, may I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut, between the two schools?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Carlisle school was established for the very purpose of bringing pupils from a distance to be educated there. This school at Salem, Oreg., I understand, was instituted for educating the Indians in the immediate vicinity; and this amendment proposes to change the whole purpose of the school, or adds an entirely different feature to it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Chemawa school has been receiving Indians from all over the Pacific Northwest, except from Alaska. There are very few Indians in Oregon that could be provided for at school, and, as a matter of fact, very few Indians are in this school from Oregon. They come from Washington, Idaho, Montana, and from all the Pacific Northwest States and Territories. Their transportation must be paid.

Mr. STEWART. It may be that it would be good policy to have a special arrangement to bring Indian children from Alaska to this school, but it is a matter which has not been considered by the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the amendment may be allowed to go into the bill, and the conference committee can consider it and determine whether it is right or not.

Mr. ALLISON. If the amendment of the Senator from Oregon goes in—and I am not sure that he is not right about it—it certainly should then be applied to all the other schools that are provided for under these various special provisions, and I shall ask that a similar amendment shall be applied to a little school in Iowa, which is a very excellent one in its way, because if transportation is paid to and from one of these schools it certainly should apply to all of them, so that they may properly compete with each other.

Mr. CULLOM. Let me inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether there is any difference in the kind of education received at Carlisle and at these other schools? Is not the Carlisle school of a higher grade than the ordinary Indian schools throughout the country?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think it is. The school at Salem, Oreg., is a most excellent and progressive industrial school. Indian pupils are taught almost all branches of industrial work there.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me, if the Senator will allow me, that he is entirely right in desiring a school for Alaska Indians in that part of the country on the same basis as the Carlisle school, so as to avoid the transportation unnecessarily of Indian boys and girls clear across the country. But I should rather think that the better course would be to advise the committee of the importance of establishing a Carlisle kind of a school somewhere in the western country in the next bill that comes before them. This provision is for what is a local school in a large degree, and it would be a little difficult to fit it for that kind of work unless the committee that has charge of the subject should investigate it.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There are very fine schools up in Washington which are a little nearer to Alaska than the Oregon school. I do not know that I would object to this matter if it had been thoroughly considered, but it comes in here without having had any consideration that I know of, as a new question entirely. I do not think that we ought to amend the bill in that way.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Oregon," in line 23 on page 70, insert the words "for transportation of pupils to and from said school."

Mr. ALLISON. Let it read "for transporting pupils from Alaska." I move to insert "from Alaska."

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to the amendment, limiting it to Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon amends his proposed amendment as follows.

The SECRETARY. As amended it will read:

For transportation of pupils from Alaska to and from said school.

Mr. MITCHELL. I accept that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting, on page 71, after the word "dollars" where it first occurs, in line 3, the following:

For the construction of an assembly hall, $18,000.

Mr. STEWART. Is that recommended?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is recommended by the superintendent very strongly as a great necessity, and I know it to be a necessity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 3, page 71, insert the words:

For the construction of an assembly hall, $18,000.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to ask the Senator whether there has been any action of the committee or the Department after examining this item?

Mr. MITCHELL. No; I think not, Mr. President, but the superintendent of the school recommends it very strongly, and I do not think there is any objection to it from the Department from conversations I have had with them. There were some other matters that they were very anxious to get in, which they preferred to have in, and therefore they did not recommend this item.

I visited that school last summer. I am very familiar with it. It is a most excellent school. They have literary societies there and a Sunday school class. Last year they had a large class. There were enrolled at that school 748 pupils, and there was an average attendance of 595.

It is one of the largest and one of the best Indian schools in the United States to-day, and, as I said, there are literary societies in the school. They have a Sunday school and they have a large number of pupils, and no large assembly hall. They must go from their little rooms to their studies and to their meals, and when they all wish to assemble together they have no place to go. The amendment provides for a school hall for the children, where they can meet together and have their little societies and their musicals. They have a fine band composed of Indian boys. Really, it is a very fine Indian society. It is conducted in the very best manner by the very able superintendent and his corps of assistants who are in charge. I hope the amendment will be permitted to go in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I was called out. I should like to know what the amendment is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "dollars," where it first occurs in line 3, page 71:

For the construction of an assembly hall, $18,000.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think perhaps this is a good opportunity for me to make some remarks that have been suggesting themselves to me about Indian schools and school buildings, and the method of education and the extent of education. I have long been of the opinion that we were very extravagant in the matter of Indian schools, their construction, and their management, and the education which goes on there.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut will suspend one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not believe——

Mr. STEWART. I suppose the amendment is subject to a point of order. It has not been examined.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like about three minutes to conclude my remarks.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not believe it is for the benefit of the Indians to give them what is called "higher education" in these days. I do not believe it is for their benefit to fit up palatial schoolhouses with assembly halls and music and dancing halls, with porcelain bath tubs, and everything of the highest type of luxury which prevails in these schools as we have appropriated for them. I believe the whole tendency of it is bad for the Indians and bad for the Government. I think that the education of Indians should be directed almost exclusively to what in my early days were called the "common branches," the three "R's," if you please, reading, writing, and arithmetic, and outside of that manual, and more especially industrial, training. It is not necessary, Mr. President, and it is not advisable, that a child taken from an Indian home, from a tepee, very possibly, should be educated in one of these remarkably fitted up schools of the present day.

I have struggled in the Committee on Indian Affairs against this, but it is almost impossible to prevent it. Indian schoolhouses are appropriated for very much in the line of the appropriations for public buildings. Senators and Representatives think there ought to be an Indian school, a new one, in their locality, and it goes, as a public building goes, because it is called for by the locality. I think it is quite time to call a halt.

Now, we have heard nothing about this particular amendment before. There has been no recommendation about it from the Department. The bill has gone through the House; it has gone almost through the Senate, and here for the first time we are confronted with the proposition to build a public hall for amusements, a meeting place for all manner of societies and associations connected with the school.

If we will go on with this matter we shall have our Indian children educated in nothing that will be of the least use to them. I think that our machinery of education with regard to our own children has got so perfect that the spirit of the old system of education has been very largely eliminated, and that there is more machinery to our present system of education than there is real value resulting from it, compared with the expenditure. If we are going to apply that idea to the Indian child, when it goes out of the school it will simply have a little smattering of some branches of education which are of no use whatever to it when it grows up to take its place in the business of life. I am not saying anything new. On the Indian Affairs Committee I have been representing this view of mine for years, but there seems to be no stopping it.

Mr. STEWART. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to amend further by inserting, after the word "dollars," in line 10 on page 71, the following:

That the appropriations for hospital employees' buildings and barn are hereby made immediately available.

Mr. STEWART. There is no objection to that.

Mr. MITCHELL. The object of the amendment is that the work may be done before the rainy season commences.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," line 10, page 71, insert:

That the appropriations for hospital employees' buildings and barn are hereby made immediately available.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Does that apply to one particular school or to the whole system? Where does the amendment come in?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On page 71, line 10, after the word "dollars."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I beg the indulgence of the Senate until I can find it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The bill provides for the construction of an employees' building and also for a barn. My amendment makes it immediately available.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Secretary read the amendment once more?

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President——

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I have one more amendment to offer.

I find, in an examination of the record, that the superintendents of all the Indian schools where more than 600 pupils are accommodated receive as a salary from $2,250 to $2,500, several of them $2,500. The superintendent of this school receives only $2,000. I think he ought to have $2,200, and I move to amend by inserting after the word "thousand," in the first line, page 71, the words "two hundred."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after the word "thousand," in line 1, page 71, the words "two hundred;" so as to read:

For pay of superintendent at said school, $2,200.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MITCHELL. I believe that is all.

Mr. QUARLES. On page 4, line 6, after the word "officer," I move to insert the words "on the active list;" so as to read:

Provided, That the foregoing appropriations shall not take effect nor become available in any case for or during the time in which any officer on the active list of the Army of the United States shall be engaged in the performance of the duties of Indian agent at any of the agencies above named.

Mr. STEWART. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the sum of $50,000, appropriated in the act of March 3, 1901, "making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated and made available for erecting, constructing, and completing suitable school buildings for an Indian industrial school at or near the city of Bismarck, in the State of North Dakota, upon lands donated to the Government for that purpose and accepted by the Secretary of the Interior, upon plans and specifications to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I should like to inquire whether that appropriation was suffered to lapse?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. In the Indian appropriation act of 1901 a provision was inserted appropriating $50,000 and giving authority for the construction of an Indian school at or near the city of Mandan, on the west side of the Missouri River. Under the authority of the provision the Secretary of the Interior proceeded to ask for proposals with a view to securing a site. The law provided that the citizens of Mandan should furnish a site for the school, and they proposed two sites upon which to erect the school. At the same time the city of Bismarck, N. Dak., which is located on the east side of the river directly opposite Mandan, also offered a site for the school.

It transpired, as I am informed, that the site proposed by the people of Bismarck was nearer the city of Mandan than the most suitable site which had been proposed by the people of Mandan. So the citizens of Bismarck thought they came within the law which located the school "at or near Mandan." The Secretary of the Interior sent a trusted special agent to the scene, who reported against the two sites offered by Mandan and in favor of the site offered by Bismarck. The Secretary of the Interior accepted the Bismarck site; but before announcing his decision he submitted the matter to the Attorney-General for the Interior Department. The Attorney-General for the Interior Department has decided that they can not accept the site at Bismarck, because the law says the school shall be located at or near Mandan, and that they can not accept the sites at Mandan because they are unsuitable. So we are left in that dilemma. This merely reappropriates the money and directs the Secretary of the Interior to go to Bismarck, where he has already accepted the site for the school.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, since the original appropriation for the building of a school at Mandan we have established another school in North Dakota, an agricultural school, and I think I am justified in saying that when the committee recommended the establishment of that school we supposed that the Mandan school project was abandoned.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, I hardly think the Senator from Connecticut wants to be understood as making that statement. This money, when it was appropriated, had not been covered into the Treasury, the law was still in force, and the Department was still attempting to make the location. It was only within the last month or two months, I think, that the Bismarck site has been accepted by the Department: and but for the fact that the Attorney-General for the Interior Department has discovered that he can not locate the school at Bismarck because the law requires that it shall be located at or near Mandan we would not be here with this matter at all, and the Secretary of the Interior would be proceeding with the construction of the school at this time. So I do not think the Senator from Connecticut is quite justified in his statement.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I do not know that I can refer to anything that has been said by the Senators from North Dakota, or either of them, to give us that impression; but I think the committee did get the impression when we established an agricultural school somewhere in North Dakota—I do not now remember where—that the Mandan appropriation had lapsed, and that, therefore, there was no more reason for the establishment of that school.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is just one other statement which I desire to make in that connection. The school which the Senate has authorized to be established at Wahpeton, in North Dakota, is fully 250 miles from the capital of our State, where it is proposed to locate this school—indeed, where the Secretary of the Interior has already accepted the site for this school, and the money for which has been appropriated for three years.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to ask the Senator from North Dakota what is the distance from Mandan to Bismarck?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is just across the river, some 4 or 5 miles.

Mr. SPOONER. Within sight?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Within sight.

Mr. SPOONER. How far was this site from Bismarck?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Bismarck site is nearer to the city of Mandan by 1 mile than the city of Bismarck is itself, because it is between the city of Bismarck and the river. It is therefore nearer to Mandan, as I am advised, than the best site offered by Mandan.

Mr. SPOONER. It is nearer to Mandan than it is to Bismarck?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; it is nearer Mandan than Bismarck is.

Mr. SPOONER. How far is the selected site from Mandan?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Between 3 and 4 miles.

Mr. SPOONER. Has the Attorney-General decided that that was not near Mandan?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. He decided that that was not near Mandan, notwithstanding the fact that one of the sites offered by the citizens of Mandan was farther away from Mandan than the site which has been accepted.

Mr. NELSON. The river separates the two places.

Mr. SPOONER. I know. I used to hunt buffalo up there before the Senator was born. What attorney decided that?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Attorney-General Campbell, I think, was the officer who made the decision.

Mr. SPOONER. An Assistant Attorney-General?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. What is it the Senator from North Dakota desires?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is simply desired to reappropriate the money that was appropriated three years ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I find on page 46 of the bill an appropriation of $10,000 for the maintenance of a "warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service," at Omaha, and the same amount appropriated for a warehouse at St. Louis. In the earlier part of the bill provision is made for Indian warehouses at San Francisco, at Chicago, and at New York. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what necessity there is for the maintenance of Indian warehouses at St. Louis and Omaha?

Mr. STEWART. Those provisions were in the bill as it came from the House, and the committee allowed them to remain. I think my friend from Illinois, if he had been on the committee, would have done the same.

Mr. FORAKER. Oh, no, Mr. President; the Senator from Illinois would have removed the warehouses to Chicago. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I find, on consulting with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that the expense of this Indian warehouse at St. Louis aggregates nearly $16 on every hundred dollars of business that is transacted there.

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator propose an amendment to the bill?

Mr. HOPKINS. First I wanted to know whether there is any reason which the committee can advance for keeping these provisions in the bill. I do not desire to antagonize the committee if the committee have any reason for retaining the provisions.

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator wants to amend the bill, let him propose an amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then I will move to strike out those paragraphs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out the following clauses:

To maintain at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, $10,000.

To maintain at the city of St. Louis, Mo., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, $10,000.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I have not made the motion for the purpose of pressing it against the wishes of the committee, if there is any reason for maintaining these two warehouses; but provision is made in the earlier part of the bill, as I have stated, for permanent warehouses at the cities I have indicated, and it seems to me that these provisions are absolutely useless.

Mr. STEWART. I am willing to submit the question without argument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOLLIVER. On page 3, after line 10, I move to insert the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After line 10, on page 3, it is proposed to insert:

At the Sauk and Fox Agency, Iowa, $1,000.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I will state, Mr. President, that this is a provision for the superintendent of the agency there. I think it was omitted by the committee more through oversight than anything else.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is for an agent, not for a superintendent.

Mr. DOLLIVER. For a superintendent. There has been an agent there for many years. He has just simply been dropped.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, I submit the amendment which I send to the Secretary's desk to be read, to come in at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the end of the bill the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay the sum of $200 each to Pretty Bear, Rattling, Swift Bird, Strike the Fire, Come Home and Kill the Enemy, Four Bear, of Cheyenne River Reservation, in South Dakota, and Fast Walker, Mdoka, Red Dog, Black Eagle, Don't Know How, Black Cloud, Fool Dog, and Walking Crane, of Crow Creek Reservation, in South Dakota, and Mad Bear, of Standing Rock Reservation, in South Dakota and North Dakota, all Sioux Indians, or their heirs, to reward them for services and sacrifice of ponies in accomplishing the rescue of Mrs. Julia Wright, Mrs. Emma Deely, and six children, all white persons, captives in the custody of the White Lodge bands of the Sioux Indians, in November, 1862, near the mouth of Grand River, Dakota Territory.

That the sum of $3,400 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President, this was a case of the rescue of the white women and children mentioned who were taken by the Indians in the Sioux massacre of 1862 in Minnesota, where there was an outbreak of the Santee Sioux. The Sioux, as the Senate understand, are divided into numerous bands. The Santees were one of the strongest. They raided Minnesota, swept it with torch and tomahawk, and amongst others they captured the persons named in the amendment. They fled then to the Sioux bands on the Missouri River, which had taken no part in the war and had maintained a position of neutrality. There were eleven boys of the band of Yankton Sioux on the Missouri, none of them over seventeen years old, none in touch with the white men, who are the beneficiaries of this amendment.

There were no white men near them. They formed an organization really in behalf of the whites who were engaged in the war. The chiefs and principal men of the tribe thought their action was ridiculous. They called them the "Crazy Band."

After they organized, news was brought to them that the hostile Santee Sioux band, with these prisoners, were within about 100 miles of them. This "Crazy Band" gathered what property they could, took their ponies, their rifles, and their wagons, and went out to meet the Santee Sioux to endeavor to purchase the prisoners from them; and, failing to purchase, to fight. They found the Santees and were met with an indignant refusal to trade. They remained day after day insisting on the trade, and if they could get none, they notified the Santees that they intended to fight. Then the younger Sioux of the Santees said the boys were right, and that they ought to trade those prisoners off for what they could get for them. There was some contention among the tribe in regard to it, but they finally obtained the prisoners and turned them over to the commander of the troops at Fort Beauford, Colonel Pattee, of Iowa.

This was done, as the Senate will understand, of their own motion. No white man was concerned in it, and no white man knew that the Yankton war party was out until it appeared at Pattee's headquarters with the rescued prisoners. They asked nothing for their services, although they traded off all the property they had taken with them; and they have received nothing, as I understand. They were boys then; they are old men now, and they are feeble and poor.

This proposition, while I suppose it is subject to a point of order, is merely to give this money to them, a small gratuity, as it is. It seems to me that $3,400 is a small amount for service of that kind, while we are voting millions of dollars for lands, giving away the Turtle Mountain Reservation, paying $700,000, I think, for satisfying a decree in favor of the Chickasaw freedmen against the United States, and spending the money of the Government in other quarters by the millions.

I will ask that, in connection with my remarks, an article from The Dakotan be printed. It need not be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the article referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania will be printed in the RECORD.

The article is as follows:

[The Dakotan, August, 1902.]

A SIDE LIGHT ON SIOUX CHARACTER—AN INCIDENT IN DAKOTA HISTORY.

On that awful August day of 1862 when the Santee band of Sioux Indians fell with pitiless knife and torch upon the frontier settlements of Minnesota the most western and the most exposed of all these settlements was a little community of a dozen homesteaders and their families gathered about Lake Shetak, in what is now Murray County. The attack upon this settlement, the massacre of many of its inhabitants, and the captivity of others are stories with which all readers of the history of Indian warfare are familiar, but the manner of the ransom of some of these captives has not been written, and it is that feature of the history with which this article has to do.

As a result of that attack Mrs. John Wright and two children, a boy of 6 and an infant in arms; Mrs. William J. Duly and two little girls, the eldest of whom was 12 years of age; Lillie Everett, a girl of 8 years, and two other little girls, daughters of Thomas Ireland, became captives in the hand of White Lodge, a subsidiary chief of the Santee, whose home before the outbreak was in the Lynd woods, on the Redwood River, just west of the present town of Marshall, Minn. White Lodge and his band, consisting of about 180 persons, at once departed with their captives for the Dakota country, and by November 1, after being sent along from one Indian camp to another by the headmen, who did not care to incur the vengeance of the soldiers by being found with white captives on their premises, arrived on the Missouri River at about the line now dividing North and South Dakota.

The Teton Sioux at this period lived on the Missouri in the vicinity of Fort Pierre, and when the news of the Santee attack upon the whites in Minnesota came to their attention a council was held at which they resolved as a tribe to remain neutral. There were, however, some progressive young Teton who advocated active interference in behalf of the whites, but they were outvoted in the council. Two of these young men, Charger and Kills and Comes, a few days later sat down on the bank of the river in front of Primeau's trading house, at a point 6 miles above Fort Pierre, and after a long discussion of the situation decided to attempt to organize the young men of the tribe into an association for the purpose of rendering the whites such assistance as they could without involving the Teton in war with the Santee. Their proposition, however, was received with so much derision by the older chiefs that they were able to induce but nine others to join them. These eleven boys, the eldest of whom was but 20 years of age, with that grave formality characteristic of the Indian in his native state, solemnly pledged themselves to withhold nothing in comfort, effort, life, or property which it might be necessary to sacrifice to serve the white people. They called their society by a term which is best translated "The Young Men's Association," but by their own people they were known as the "Crazy Band." The young men thus banded together were Charger, Kills and Comes, Four Bear, Swift Bear, Mad Bear, Pretty Bear, One Rib, Strikes Fire, Sitting Bear, Red Dog, and Charging Dog.

They were not prompted to this action by any sinister or mercenary motives, but from sentiments of humanity which would have been creditable to men of the highest civilization; nor was their action in thus organizing suggested to them by white men, but was wholly original with the young Sioux participants. Early in November, 1862, Major Galpin, a trader at the mouth of the Yellowstone, coming down the river with a small party of miners from Montana in a Mackinaw boat, was hailed by a band of Santee encamped near Standing Rock and invited to land.

They were about to do so when a white woman came to the river bank and frantically warned them to keep away to save their lives. The Santees at once fired upon the boatmen, who threw themselves in the bottom of the boat, and as the current set strongly to the west shore they were soon out of danger. They learned from the woman that the captives from Lake Shetak were in the camp, and as they passed down the river they gave information of this discovery at every opportunity. The Crazy Band learned of this incident and knew the time had come for them to put their professions into practice. The boys gathered up their robes and other peltry, and taking them to Primeau's store exchanged them for food, especially sugar and delicacies which they conceived would be grateful to the Santee palate, and with these supplies moved the horses across the river and camped on the Okaboji. The third day out they arrived at the mouth of Swan Creek, where the village of Le Beau now is, and there they found a small party of friendly Yanktonaise Sioux, who informed them that a party of Santees, having white captives, were encamped on the east side of the Missouri, in the bend below the mouth of Grand River, within what is now Walworth County, S. Dak.

The boys pushed on and pitched their camp about 100 yards from the camp of the hostiles and indicated a desire for a council. White Lodge and his head men came out, each with his gun cached under his blanket, and a council was held. Charger opened the conference with a typical Indian talk about the good heart which had impelled them to the enterprise to ransom the captives, and concluding: "You see us here. We are only young boys. Our people call us crazy, but we want to do something good. If a man owns anything he likes it, and he will not part with it for nothing. We have come here to buy the white captives and give them back to their friends.

"We will give our own horses for them, all the horses we have. That proves that we want the captives very much, because our hearts are good and we want to do a good thing." Then with that dreary monotony which only an Indian could tolerate each of the other ten boys repeated his words. To this White Lodge responded:

"We come from the east where the sky is made red by the fires that burns the homes of the whites and the ground is red with the blood of whites which the Santees are killing. These white captives we have taken after killing many of their people. We will not again be friends of the whites. We have done a bad thing, and now we will keep on doing bad things. We will not give up the captives. We will fight till we drop dead."

Then the boys changed their tactics, hoping to reach the hostiles through their stomachs. They spread a feast, and Charger extended the invitation to partake in these words: "Here is food; eat what you want and go home, and we will take the captives and go home." White Lodge and his braves accepted the hospitality, but when the feast was concluded he was still obdurate and insultingly resented the attempt of the Tetons to interfere in his affairs. They became much excited and trouble seemed imminent. Then another formal council was arranged, and Charger and the boys gravely reiterated the talk made at the first sitting, to which White Lodge replied in the same way as before.

A third time the boys repeated their original proposition to trade the horses for the captives, only to be met by a more determined refusal. But the boys had still another card in reserve, and the time had come to play it. Charger spoke: "White Lodge, you talk brave. You kill white men who have no guns, and you steal women and children and run away where there are no soldiers. If you are brave, why did you not stay and fight soldiers who had guns? Three times we have offered our horses for the captives. Now we shall take the captives and put them on the horses and take them home. If you make us trouble, the soldiers, with guns, will come against you from the east and the Tetons will come against you from the west, and we shall see if you are brave."

At this a brave from the outside, who did not sit in the council, cried out to Black Hawk, the eldest son of White Lodge: "Black Hawk, why do you not speak? Why sit so still?" Black Hawk spoke: "You young people have done right. Your grub tastes good. You are straight young men, respected among your own people. I know some of you, but my father, White Lodge, does not know you. We are starving. I have one white child, which I will give up. Let the others do as I have done and give up their captives."

After much parleying it was finally agreed that the captives should be exchanged for the horses, and the Santees returned to their camp to prepare the captives for the exchange. At length the boys were invited to bring their horses and come into the village. A large lodge had been erected in the center of the camp, to which they were directed. They tied the horses near by and entered. They found Mrs. Duly and the six children (Mrs. Wright's baby had been wantonly murdered by a young savage before they reached the Missouri) sitting in a row on one side of the lodge. They were almost naked and in a condition so pitiable that even the young savages were moved by their grief. An unexpected obstacle was here encountered. Each captive was claimed as the individual property of some brave, and no proposition looking to a wholesale exchange of horses for captives would be considered.

Each proprietor was bent upon driving the best possible bargain for his chattel. The youngest child was first offered, and after a protracted parley a bargain was made for it, and it was removed to the opposite side of the lodge; and so, in turn, after all the bluffing, bullying, and jockeying of which the Indian is capable had been indulged in, the seven captives were ransomed, but not until the boys had traded themselves out of all their property except one horse and four guns; and Mrs. Wright, whom White Lodge claimed, was still to be secured. White Lodge, who had given but grudging consent to the proceeding thus far, now absolutely refused to surrender Mrs. Wright upon any terms, and the boys were equally as determined to procure possession of her. After another period of intense excitement, in which the lives of both the boys and the captives appeared to be in peril, another formal council was arranged, and again the threat of crushing the Santees between the Tetons and the soldiers brought the tribe to their senses, although White Lodge remained obstinate.

Black Hawk and his younger brother, Chase by the Ree, proposed to take the woman from their father and give her up to the boys in consideration of the one remaining horse. The proposition was accepted, and Red Dog and Strikes Fire were intrusted with the negotiations. They soon returned with the woman, and the rescuing party struck camp and moved a few miles down the river, when night came on and they stopped. Their situation was truly desperate. They were more than 100 miles from home in a northern winter, without horses or food. The captives were without horses or food. The captives were without clothing, and the boys gave them their blankets, leaving their own bodies seriously exposed. Moreover, White Lodge was hostile and threatened to take the captives from the rescuers. That night was one never to be forgotten by any who participated in its terrors. The captives were housed in the small lodge, and the boys, illy protected against the blizzard which was in progress, spent the night in an unceasing march around the tent. They broke camp at daylight, and shortly after, to their very great relief, a friendly Yanktonaise appeared on horseback, and to him they gave two of their remaining guns for the horse. They hastily rigged a travoix, upon which five of the children were placed. Pretty Bear carried the youngest child on his back and the women walked. Mrs. Duly had no moccasins, and Charger gave her his own, himself going barefoot through that winter day until the Yanktonaise camp was reached at LeBeau. Early that morning, as they were slowly making their way down the river, the expected happened and White Lodge appeared, accompanied by five warriors, and demanded the return of Wrs. Wright; but after a long parley the boys bluffed him out, and he gave up the pursuit. Of the Yanktonaise, in exchange for one gun they procured an old cart, to which the horse was attached, the children placed in it, and Mrs. Duly mounted on the animal's back. From the Yanktonaise they also procured a little food and some moccasins. That day they traveled 34 miles, it being necessary most of the way for the boys to assist the pony with his load by pushing on the cart.

They camped that night on the present site of the village of Forest City. The next morning they climbed the river bluffs and cut directly across the oxbow in the direction of Primeau's trading house, and that night they did not camp at all, but kept up the weary tramp until daybreak, when they were on the east side of the river, opposite their home. The river was slightly frozen, making the crossing most hazardous, but their relatives, securing the assistance of Primeau, Dupree, and La Plant, the two latter half Indians, residing in the vicinity, managed to get the party over, and Primeau clothed the captives as best he could from the flannels and calicos he kept in stock and Dupree took them to his home, where they were allowed to rest for three days, when Dupree and La Plant took them in their wagons to the nearest military post, Fort Randall, where the commandant, Col. John Pattee, of the Forty-first Iowa Cavalry, took them into his quarters with his wife and daughter and entertained them for twenty days, until notice of their recovery reached their friends, and relatives came to take them home.

It is not necessary in this narrative to recite the horrible indignities and hardships suffered by the captives while in the hands of the Santees, nor to speak in detail of the other and futile attempts to rescue them. They were captured August 20 and rescued November 20, arrriving at Fort Randall November 29.

Of the members of the "Crazy Band" Martin Charger, Swift Bird, Strikes Fire, Four Bear, Pretty Bear, Mad Bear, and Sitting Bear still survive. They reside upon the Cheyenne River Reservation and are men of distinction among their people. They live in substantial houses, own excellent herds of cattle, and they are consistent members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and on more than one occasion, since as untutored young savages they sacrificed everything they possessed and at great personal hazard rescued the white captives, as above related, have they rendered invaluable services to the whites. During the Custer war of 1875–76 they stood as a wall of rock between the hostiles and settlements, and again when the Messiah craze swept over the Sioux Nation in 1890 these men, serene and unmoved by the popular clamor, counseled calmness among their people, organized the young men for active resistance to the hostiles, if their services should be required, and, more than the United States Army and the State Militia combined, rendered the white settlements east of the Missouri safe from the attacks of predatory bands of dancers.

It is a just reproach to the General Government that the services rendered by these men in the rescue of the Lake Shetak captives have never been recognized, nor have they been paid for the horses and property which they expended in ransoming the prisoners.

When the circumstances surrounding this case are considered; when the Dakota country as it was in 1862 is taken into account; when the condition and environment of these young Tetons, unschooled, beyond the influence of the missionaries, unprompted to the heroic action which they performed, except by the instincts of humanity, unrewarded, and without the hope of reward, are reckoned with, I submit the record of the world's history will be searched in vain for a parallel.

DOANE ROBINSON.

Mr. QUAY. This matter excites some interest in South Dakota. I have a letter here from the secretary of the State Historical Society asking me for a copy of the bill, and saying it is a matter in which their society takes a deep interest. I understand, of course, the amendment is subject to a point of order. The fact is the Indian Committee have declined to put it in this bill; but I hope the chairman of the committee, in the kindness of his heart, will consent that the amendment may be agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. The difficulty about this matter is that the facts are not officially ascertained by some investigation so that they can be spread upon the record. If we put in an amendment of this kind, there are other cases where Indians have done very noble acts and performed services for the whites which will probably come here. The facts ought to be in such shape that they can go upon the record. I do not like to have the amendment come in this manner. If we put in these scattering claims, it will bring others and make trouble for us.

Mr. QUAY. I have here some records regarding this case.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he is sure of his facts?

Mr. QUAY. I received the papers from Doctor Eastman, who is a Dakota Sioux, with whom the Senator is acquainted. He says the facts are correct. They have been looked up and have several times been made the subject of magazine articles.

Mr. TELLER. So far as the facts are concerned, I should be entirely willing to accept the statement of Doctor Eastman, if made as a matter of his own knowledge.

Mr. STEWART. Has the Senator a statement which can be made a matter of record? Such a statement ought to go with the appropriation.

Mr. QUAY. I have some papers here. Here is one from Edward Morris, chaplain of the Fiftieth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers. As to one of these men, Fool Dog, he says:

The bearer, Shunka Wetoka, or Fool Dog, has some very recommendatory documents from Major-General Sully, from which it appears that he has rescued white women and children from hostile Indians, and they have been restored to their friends in the States.

On one occasion he purchased a white girl, a captive among the Santees—

That relates undoubtedly to this transaction—and took her to the fort, and she was sent to her home.

I have a letter here from General Sully. General Sully says:

The bearer of this paper, "Fool Dog," "Shunk Wit Co," of the Yankton-ais Nation, has proven himself to be in reality a good Indian, a friend to the whites and to the United States Government. He was the only Indian who had the courage to accompany this expedition against the Indians. He did so and rendered it valuable assistance, and thus made his own people his enemies.

Then he goes on and says:

The general commanding requests that all white people, soldiers and others, treat him as a friend and give him any little assistance he may at any time need. His word can be relied on and his advice may be trusted.

I thought there was something further referring to this matter, but I suppose it is in the letter from Colonel Pattee. I will read the letter from Colonel Pattee. Probably the Iowa Senators know who he is; they ought to, as the letter seems to be written from the Republican headquarters—I thought it was Iowa, but I see it is Wyoming. It is headed "Sundance, Wyo.," and is directed to Fast Walker, one of these boys. Colonel Pattee says:

MY DEAR OLD FRIEND: I was so glad to hear that you were still alive and can walk as fast as ever. I wish I could come and see you once more, but I can not walk very fast now. I am past 74 years old now, and must soon expect to go to the happy land, when I hope we may meet.

* * * * * * *

I gladly sign and return a new copy of the paper I gave the 12th of December, 1862, for the noble work you did in rescuing those poor helpless women and children from the Santees. It was a good and generous thing you and your associates done for them.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I move to insert, as an amendment to the amendment, the name "Chief Charger" after the words "Mad Bear," and to increase the total sum appropriated by the amendment from $3,400 to $3,600.

I might state, Mr. President, in connection with this amendment, that I know generally the historical facts connected with this case. I have had an intimate acquaintance with Doctor Eastman, who is a resident of my State and a highly accomplished and educated gentleman. He was a member not of this band, but of the Santees. He was present in Minnesota at the time of the outbreak, and, although a very young man, he has an intimate acquaintance with the entire history of that outbreak. I would have every confidence in his statement.

The information in regard to this amendment which I submit is from the agent at the Cheyenne Agency. He states that Chief Charger was the leader of this rescuing party. I ask that the amendment to the amendment may be concurred in. I have full faith in the statement, and I believe the amendment ought to be accepted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8 of Mr. QUAY'S amendment, before the name "Mad Bear," it is proposed to strike out the word "and;" in the same line, after the name "Mad Bear," to insert the words "and Chief Charger;" and on page 2, in line 4, to change the total sum appropriated by the amendment from $3,400 to $3,600.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. QUAY. Chief Charger was one of this party, I understand?

Mr. GAMBLE. Yes, sir; he was the leader of this rescuing band.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania if he knows whether this claim has ever before been presented to either House of Congress?

Mr. QUAY. I have never heard of it before. It is not a claim.

Mr. MALLORY. It is not a claim; it is a proposition.

Mr. QUAY. The fact is that the interest on the value of the property advanced by these young Indians will amount to more than we are providing under this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if I correctly caught the reading of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania, it says "to carry out the provisions of this act." I would suggest that it should read "to carry out this provision."

Mr. QUAY. Very well. I accept whatever is necessary to perfect the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. QUAY. I have to say, as confirmatory of my statement, that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] says that the officer who gave one of these certificates was the chaplain of his regiment, and he was there when the certificate was written.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to say a word about this matter, Mr. President. I was in the Army at Fort Rice at the time the letter which has been read by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] was written. It was written by a gentleman who was chaplain of the regiment of which I was an officer. I also knew Colonel Pattee and General Sully, and I heard something of this transaction, but of course nothing much in detail.

Everyone knows that the massacre in Minnesota was one of the most heartrending and bloody outrages of the whole Indian warfare in this country, and it is absolutely impossible for any man to exaggerate the services rendered by Indians in rescuing the women and children—the wives of settlers on the frontier and their children—by the courageous boys from the Santee Sioux.

If there could be any possible question about the propriety of this payment, it would be that the facts are not very definitely established; but the Senator from Pennsylvania might have added that the details are given in the article which he presented here, and which will be put in the RECORD. I have it in my hand, and it is signed by Doane Robinson. I knew one of these Indians, and he was not a bad Indian either.

Mr. FORAKER. He seems to have been a very good Indian.

Mr. SPOONER. And I shall myself with pleasure vote for this amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the paper to which the Senator referred will be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TELLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 53, after line 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the claim of J. Hale Sypher against the Choctaw Nation for legal and professional services rendered by him to said nation under an agreement made and entered into between the legally authorized commissioners of said nation and said Sypher on the 7th day of November, 1891, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication. And jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said court to hear and determine said claim upon the principles of a quantum meruit and without regard to the provisions and requirements of section 2103 of the Revised Statutes; and the said court shall ascertain and determine the character, extent, and value of the services rendered by said Sypher to said nation under said agreement; and the court, having ascertained and determined the amount justly and equitably due and payable from said nation to said Sypher for services rendered by him under said agreement, shall certify the amount found to be due and payable to said Sypher by said nation under said agreement to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall pay the amount found to be due and payable to said Sypher as herein provided out of any money in the Treasury belonging to the Choctaw Indians, or out of any moneys which may hereafter become due said Indians.

Mr. BACON. I should be perfectly willing to see the amendment adopted if the last part of it was stricken out. It seems to me, when we have had a very protracted discussion about this matter, and the Senate has been unwilling to pay a specific amount, even $25,000, we are going very far in authorizing the payment of whatever sum may be found by the Court of Claims, without any further consideration or determination by Congress.

Now, I was very much impressed by the statement made yesterday by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that whatever amount is paid on this claim out of the money belonging to the Choctaws in all probability will subsequently have to be paid by the United States Government.

Mr. SPOONER. Not under this amendment.

Mr. STEWART. The Indians are to have a day in court.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Iowa stated that under circumstances similar to these such payments had been made by the United States Government to refund money which had been paid out of the Indian fund. Nobody will claim that that was paid because there was a legal——

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the Senator from Iowa quite made that statement. He said he thought there had been.

Mr. BACON. Well, I may be mistaken about it, but that is my recollection.

Mr. TELLER. I say distinctly that he can not find a precedent where we paid it back. I do not think he asserted that it had been done. If he had, I should have challenged it.

Mr. BACON. Assuming for the sake of this discussion that such was the fact, the payment in such cases would not have been made on the ground that the previous payments had been under legal adjudication or that there had not been a legal adjudication, but upon the broad principle of what might be construed to be justice to these Indians that we had ourselves paid out their funds, and the contention was that the payments were illegal, and therefore should be repaid by the United States Government.

Yesterday I voted against the payment of this claim, and I am very frank to say that I did so largely upon the confidence I had in the opinion of Senators present who are very much more familiar with it than I, and particularly the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, who is a very safe guide in all these matters and than whom no man knows more in regard to the details of matters of this kind.

It strikes me, when we voted yesterday that we would not agree to pay $25,000 out of this fund, it is going quite far to say that this matter shall be submitted to the Court of Claims and that whatever amount they may adjudicate to be justly due upon the quantum meruit shall, without any further action on the part of Congress, be paid out of the Choctaw fund.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator's argument lead to this end, that the claimant shall be entirely remediless?

Mr. BACON. Not at all. He has the same opportunity that he enjoyed yesterday.

Mr. SPOONER. He enjoyed none yesterday. That is the trouble.

Mr. BACON. I think he did.

Mr. SPOONER. What?

Mr. BACON. Not only yesterday, but the day before, his claim was very earnestly and ably advocated upon the floor of the Senate.

Now, the point to which I want particularly to ask the attention of the Senate is this: If this were a matter of conceded indebtedness and were a matter of account which could be definitely and accurately ascertained by the figures, then to refer it to the Court of Claims and have them adjudicate the amount due, and to provide that upon such ascertainment by the Court of Claims the money should be paid out of the Choctaw fund, would be a very reasonable proposition. But it can not be determined on any such accurate lines. It is not a matter of account. It is a matter of broad indeterminate discretion. Quantum meruit is something about which people differ in the widest degree.

Therefore it seems to me it would be unjust to these Indians to say that a court, with nothing to guide it except the unlimited discretion and judgment as to what the services may be worth, shall have the power finally to adjudicate what sum, out of the Indians' money, shall be paid.

I am perfectly willing that this attorney shall be paid whatever may finally be determined by the best judgment of the Senate and the House to be due him, but I think—I not only think but I know—that the Indians are in a very peculiar relation to us. They are absolutely helpless in our hands, and their fund is something of which we have the guardianship and in the preservation of which we ought to take the utmost care.

If the Senator will put the limitation upon it I am willing that it shall be adopted, but to leave it unlimited it seems to me is going too far. Put on a limitation of the amount and I am perfectly willing that the court shall within a stated amount adjudicate whether it is due.

Mr. TELLER. That would be a remarkable thing to do—to send a case to a court and tell the court it must not render judgment except for a limited amount.

Mr. BACON. I do not prefer that. What I prefer is that it shall come back to Congress.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator has not made that suggestion. This is the first time he has made it. The Senator has been making his objection upon the ground that the court might render too large a judgment. If it goes to the court upon the quantum meruit, it is upon the value of the service—that is what it means—and the court would have to have proof of the value of the service. It seems to me there would not be any question——

Mr. BACON. I am perfectly willing that the court shall be authorized to adjudicate it and report the matter back to Congress.

Mr. SPOONER. I want to suggest to the Senator from Colorado that this proposition should be amended so as to include the heirs, administrators, and assigns. Otherwise there may be trouble. I think there should also be added a provision giving to either party the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I think very likely that such a provision ought to be inserted.

Mr. SPOONER. It will be a large amount.

Mr. STEWART. I think the right of appeal should be provided for.

Mr. TELLER. I move to insert, after the word "Sypher," near the bottom of the amendment, the words "his heirs or assigns."

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. "His heirs and legal representatives." You do not want "assigns."

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the "heirs" would be sufficient. However, I will put in whatever the Senator from Wisconsin suggests.

Mr. SPOONER. It will be payable to the administrator, anyway, if one is appointed.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Wisconsin will suggest the words "with respect to the right of appeal to the Supreme Court," I shall be glad to insert them.

Mr. SPOONER. I think it is enough to say "with the right of appeal, from any judgment rendered therein to either party, to the Supreme Court of the United States."

Mr. TELLER. Then I suggest that the amendment be modified in that way.
